BURNS CAUSE DEATH OF YOUNG WOLLASTON MAN

Nathan C. Drew Dies As Result of Gasoline Explosion

Nathan C. Drew of South Central avenue, Wollaston, died at the City Hospital about 6.30 Monday evening of burns received as a result of an explosion of gasoline at Gould's garage earlier in the day. The accident which resulted in the death of the young man was a particularly sad one. With Mr. Drew at the time of the accident was Miss Gertrude Barbour, the young woman to whom he was to have been married in a few days.

They had planned an automobile trip for the day and had driven to Gould's garage for a supply of gasoline. Just how the gasoline happened to explode has not been fully determined. According to those present, Drew was filling the tank of his car with a hose, when suddenly there was an explosion and the next instant he was enveloped in flames. With his head, face and upper part of his body burning he ran like a live torch to the rear of the building so as to get away from the draft and threw himself on the ground. Mr. Gould and Albert Perham of Neponset who was in the yard at the time with his motor cycle rushed to his assistance. Perham wrapped his coat about Drew and managed to extinguish the flames Others who came to his assistance were William Elrick, William Burrows and Joseph Donovan.

George Morrisey who was passing at the time took the injured man in his automobile and rushed him to the City Hospital where he was placed on the dangerous list. He had been frightfully burned and but little hope was expressed from the first for his recovery.

In the meantime the burning gasoline had set fire to the store room as well as to the automobile of Drew. Mr. Gould ran to Box 124 and summoned the fire department. There was some delay in summoning the department as everybody was assisting the unfortunate man. The storeroom was practically destroyed as was also the automobile, entailing a loss on the building of $500 and $450 on the automobile. Hardly had the department returned to quarters when it was again summoned to the garage on a still alarm as a spark had set fire to the roof of Joseph W. Dennen's house next door. This was quickly extinguished.

The young woman who was with Drew at the time of the accident went to the City Hospital in another automobile and remained at his bedside for the greater part of the day.

Several theories have been advanced as to the cause of the fire. One seems to be that the tank overflowed and the gasoline falling on the ground made a vapor which was exploded when it came in contact with the hot exhaust pipe. Another theory is that the explosion was caused by the sun glancing off the reflector on to vaporized gasoline arising from the chamois and funnel through which it was being strained

Chief Billings visted Gould's garage this morning at which time a thorough investigation was made to determine the cause of the explosion. As a result of his investigation the conclusion was reached that it was caused by a spark that had been electrically generated by contact of the steel hose and the metal tunnel in the gasoline tank.

It has been demonstrated that a certain amount of electrical friction is developed by the gasoline passing through a metal pipe and that in the rules sent out by Fire Hazard Commissioner O'Keefe people are especially cautioned when using a metal pipe to fill their tanks to see that the tunnel in the tank forms a close connection with the metal otherwise a spark is likely to be generated.

The theory is that in directing the metal supply pipe into the tank in the car hat it must have accidentally scraped across the edge of the tunnel thus creating a tiny spark, but enough to ignite the fumes. Chief Billings further said that he had been informed that during one of the periods at the City Hospital, when the unfortunate man was conscious, he stated that he had seen a spark.

Young Drew was a well known young man and was very popular. He had been employed for some years by the Barrett Tarvia Co. of Poston, and had charge of the tarvia teams which have been at work in Quincy more or less of the time during the summer months. He was about 25 years of age and was to have been married this month to Miss Gertrude Barbour daughter of Rev. Thomas S. Barbour.

The young man resided with his parents. Mr and Mrs George E. Drew, at 38 South Central avenue, Wollaston. Besides his parents he leaves a sister, the wife of Rev. Harris Barbour of Michigan and two brothers, George K. Drew and Samuel T. Drew both of Wollaston.

SERVICES FOR UNKNOWN DEAD

Baskets of Flowers Are Thrown Into Sea At Pretty Service

MAYOR ONE OF SPEAKERS

Services in memory of the unknown sailor dead were held Saturday afternoon off the float at the Wollaston Yacht Club house and were largely attended. The service was conducted by the members of Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps, assisted by members of Rebecca Wiswell Tent. D. of V., Col. Abner B. Packard Camp, S. of V., and the Ladies Auxiliary. The exercises consisted of prayer and benediction by Rev Thomas Davison, of the Atlantic Memorial church. There were also brief addresses by Mayor Chester I. Campbell, ex-Mayor Eugene R. Stone and Commander Mark E. Hanson of Post 88, G. A. R.

Mrs. Kate A. Blaisdell of the Woman's Relief Corps recited an original poem and there was singing by 75 school children.

As the tide turned baskets of flowers were thrown on the water and carried out to sea.

Mayor Campbell said in part:

"We are here today to rejoice—yet weep. Rejoicing and weeping are generally considered the opposites, and while we must admit the truth of this yet I believe, after some thought, that on occasions of this character it is proper that they be combined.

"We rejoice because Almighty God in His infinite wisdom gave to this glorious, free country of ours—men. Men in whose hearts the desire to serve God and country led them to follow the life of sailors—sailing o'er the great expanse of seas to countries far and near, carrying the gospel of peace and good-will toward men, yet in this solemn work that awful cloud of war came, and with it death, and we weep.

"We weep for those who died that our country might live. We weep for those whose grave is the watery deep. We weep for those whose hearts ached as their loved ones passed on and found their grave in the unknown depths. But yet again we rejoice, for their work, their courage, has made this country what it is. It has brought this country to that high point which other countries have striven but failed to reach and I feel sure if the departed could speak they would say—'I did it for my God and my country.' "

HOUGHS NECK IS TO BE SEPARATE PARISH

Cardinal O'Connell Sets It Apart From St. John's

Cardinal O'Connell today set apart the Church of St. Frances-by-the-Sea from St. John's parish, making Houghs Neck a separate parish, and transferred Fr. William J. Duffy from St. Mary's parish to St. Patrick's parish, Watertown, of which Monsignor Ambrose F. Roche, formerly of West Quincy, is pastor, The former change has been expected but the latter comes somewhat as a surprise.

Fr. Mark E. Madden, assistant at the Church of St. Thomas at Jamaica Plain, has been appointed pastor of the new parish and will assume official direction this week. Father Madden is one of the most beloved Catholic priests of the Boston diocese and has endeared himself to the St. Thomas parishioners.

Practically all of the years Father Duffy has been a curate have been spent in Quincy excepting a short service at Providence, R. I., directly after his ordination. He was assigned to Quincy during the pastorate of Father Roche, eight years ago and has remained here, doing valued and enthusiastic work since then, was a most energetic assistant to Fr. Henry T. Grady, successor of Father Roche and Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, the present pastor. He is a highly respected priest and has been a source of inspiration to the parishioners.

Fr. James J. Mooney, who was recently ordained at St. Johns seminary Brighton, has been appointed successor of Father Duffy.

The Church of St. Frances-by-the-Sea has been erected for some years and is hardly large enough to accommodate the summer population of that section. Father Madden will probably make his home at the "Red Lion" cottage, purchased several years ago by the late Fr. John J. Coan, while he was pastor of St. Johns parish.

MEMORIAL DAY OBSERVED BY VETERANS OF GRAND ARMY

Allied Organizations And Citizens In General Aid In Conducting Services

EXERCISES AT BUMPUS GRAVE

Thos. J. McGrath and Judge Bumpus Sp akers

After escorting the Grand Army to City square the Spanish War Veterans Capt. William L. Brennan with an escort from the Sons of Veterans marched to the Quincy depot where it met Bumpus Camp Army of the Phillipines, commanded by Antonio Carson, a medal of honor man, and a detail from the 7th company of regulars stationed at Fort Banks. A line was then formed and the Bumpus camp, regulars and the 1st M. V. M. Veterans, under comand of Capt. A. R. Morgan, were escorted to Mt. Wollaston cemetery where appropriate exercises were held at the grave of Lieut. Edward Bumpus.

These exercises included short addresses by Judge E. C. Bumpus, father of Lieut. Bumpus, Commander Carson of the Army of the Phillipines camp, and Councilman Thomas J. McGrath. Councilman McGrath made a most stirring address during which he spoke of the need of the country being prepared for emergencies. He said that he was entirely in accord with the plan for the defense of the country.

At the close of the exercises taps were sounded and three vollies fired by the regulars.

MEMORIAL DAY NOTES.

Quincy's new military organization, the Machine Gun Squad, made its first public appearance at the afternoon parade and made a very favorable impression. The members wore the regular service uniform, and carried the side arms of automatic revolvers and bolos.

It was a thoughtful thing of Capt. B. F. Hodgkinson to provide seats for the members of the Grand Army at the Academy grounds so that they might not have to stand during the exercises.

Many complimentary remarks were made of the fine appearance of the police detail on duty at the morning and afternoon parades. The new bell shaped caps make the officers a soldierly looking body of men.

During the early afternoon, a little girl, Alice Gurney of Cranch street, fainted near the First Parish church. The Boy Scouts rendered first aid treatment and removed her to Cox's drug store where she was revived.

When the time came for the blessing at the afternoon exercises Rev. Merrill C. Ward, the chaplain of the day could not be found as he had stepped to the outskirts of the crowd for a minute. There was a hurry to find him but the search was unsuccessful. Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson was among the spectators, however, and he was quickly pressed into service. Rev. Mr. Ward returned just as Rev. Mr. Hudson had concluded

Warren Dunbar, Co. E. 12th. Regt. Paul W. Costain, Co. I, 4th, H. A.

These two veterans of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., have answered the last roll call and have been mustered into that Grand Army above since Memorial Day 1914. On that day Comrade Warren Dunbar, as officer of the day, marched at the head of the column of veterans, as they went about their sacred duty of decorating the graves of those comrades with whom in the time of the country's peril they had marched shoulder to shoulder in defence of the union.

A more beautiful day than Monday could not have been desired. It was not too warm nor neither too cold and there was but little dust in the streets. In accordance with General Orders No. 1, the post assembled in full uniform at headquarters at 7 o'clock. Details were immediately dispatched to Mt. Auburn to decorate the graves of Col. Paul J. Revere for whom the Post is named and that of Samuel W. Spear. Other details visited Mt. Wollaston cemetery, the Hancock cemetery, the Old English cemetery, Hall cemetery and St. Mary's cemetery and placed flags and flowers on all soldiers' graves. Senior Vice Commander Thomas Ring with Rev. Merrill C. Ward, the chaplain of the day, and a squad of veterans went to the National Sailors Home and held brief services at the cemetery in which they were assisted by a squad of sailors from the home.

At 9.30 a line was formed in front of headquarters to visit the Hall and St. Mary's cemetery at West Quincy. Headed by a squad of police and escorted by the Boy Scouts, Col. Abner B. Packard camp Sons of Veterans and the Wollaston band a short march was taken to the junction of School and Franklin streets where special cars were taken for West Quincy. The commands alighted at the junction of Copeland and Crescent streets where the line was again formed and a short march taken to the Hall cemetery where appropriate exercises were held about the Willard monument. The commands then proceeded to St. Mary's cemetery.

The address was made by Rev. Mr. Germany of the Hall place M. E. church. At the conclusion of the services here the commands went to St. Mary's cemetery where the Grand Army held exercises at the grave of William Warner and the Spanish War veterans held exercises at the grave of John A. Boyd.

The duty at West Quincy over the commands again marched to the junction of Copeland and Crescent streets where the special cars were taken for headquarters. At 12 o'clock the commands in accordance with orders of the grand encampment stood with uncovered heads for a period of five minutes. They then proceeded to Faxon hall where dinner was served by the Women's Relief corps and Ladies Auxiliary.

In the afternoon at 2.30 the line for the afternoon parade was formed in front of headquarters and moved in the following order to the Adams Academy grounds where appropriate exercises were held.

Immediately after lunch the Sons of Veterans accompanied by the band and Chaplain of the day marched to the Hancock cemetery where brief services were held at the tomb of Col. Abner B. Packard and at the conclusion placed a wreath in front of the tomb. The service closed with three volleys by the firing squad.

At 2.30 the commands formed in front of headquarters for the afternoon parade and promptly on the hour moved in the following order:

THE GERMAN REPLY.

The reply of the German government to the American note of course left much to be desired. It must be a disappointment to those who thought that all that was needed to bring a humble apology and promise of future rectitude from the Kaiser's government was a scream from the American Eagle. It must be a relief to those persons who feared an insolent and defiant reply which would have driven the President to take extreme steps.

In brief, the German reply is about as good as could have been expected at this stage of the proceedings. The tone of the note is friendly. Germany does not admit her guilt in the Lusitania affair: she contends that the Lusitania was equipped with concealed guns, was on the British naval reserve list, and was carrying ammunition, the explosion of the latter being responsible for the rapid sinking of the ship.

Germany disagrees with the United States as to the facts in the case, not in regard to the principles involved. The Kaiser's government desires an investigation to ascertain what are the actual facts. Was the Lusitania an enemy ship armed for war and as such admittedly liable to destruction? Germany says yes. The United States says no. Germany asks that the truth shall be ascertained before she makes her final answer.

Of course it is not unlikely that Germany is sparring for time, is delaying her final reply to "save her face." It is possible, however, that she believes her version of the facts to be the correct version. It it even possible that her version is the correct one. At all events, it seems as if the United States could allow reasonable time for the ascertaining of the facts without relaxing the firmness of her attitude or permitting unnecessary dilatoriness.

The American people justly have confidence in the ability and wisdom of the President to decide what to do and how to do it.

REMEMBER THE DAY.

In accordance with a beautiful custom exercises in connection with Memorial Day were held in the public schools of the city on Friday. The participation of the schools in the observance of the day is one of its most valuable and impressive features. In these times when the day is becoming more a holiday than a holy day, it is well for the children in the schools to be reminded that the day stands for something besides picnics and ball games.

It would do no harm for some of the older people to get a little instruction along the same line. Memorial Day is a holiday and it is right that persons who work hard every week day should take advantage of their few hours of freedom. It is but a small tribute, however to the noble members, living and dead, of the Grand Army of the Republic that we should pause a moment in our merry-making and give a thought to the thin blue ranks as they march by. It is deplorable that on many houses in this city on Monday not even an American flag was displayed to honor the men who fought and died so that flag might wave over the whole country.

THE OVERHEAD EXPENSES

The great bugbear of business is the overhead or fixed charges of the enterprise. Here is where many a concern has met shipwreck. The prices may be those generally prevailing in the trade. The sales seem to be bringing a good profit. But at the end of the year it is seen that the fixed charges have wiped out the profit.

Cost of sales force, rent, taxes, heat, light, depreciation of equipment, repairs, etc., these run along the same whether people are coming to the store or not.

The only way to reduce overhead charges is to do a larger business, in which case the proportion of overhead expense that has to be charged up to each individual sale becomes less. By increasing the sales a loss can be turned into a profit.

The only way to increase sales is to solicit business actively. The cheapest form of solicitation is to put an advertisement in the newspaper. It tells about a merchant's goods to a thousand people while the merchant is talking to one person.

Although American bankers have $3,000,000,000 to lend, it is proving impossible for some of us to borrow enough to go to the San Francisco exposition.

If the Weather Bureau doesn't know what kind of a forecast to make, they can always look out doors and see if people are carrying umbrellas.

So far Dr. Dernburg has not entered any of the newspaper competitions for automobiles to be given the most popular subscriber.

SCORES GERMANS IN HIS SERMON

Rt. Rev. Samuel G. Babcock, suffragan bishop of Massachusetts, at Christ church Sunday evening severely censured the lack of Christian teachings of the Germans and their pursuit of barbarous tactics.

The censure came during a sermon on the text, "God is Light," after he had administered confirmation to a class of 21 candidates in the presence of a large congregation.

Rev. William Grainger, rector, assisted him. The music of the evening was by the regular choir.

His thesis was that God is light and that man is darkness and that whatever is wrong in this world is not the doing of God but the doings of mankind. Sin is our own creation and God offers us his light to better our conditions.

"Today" he said "we are presented with a situation in Europe which might indicate that the world had not profited by Christianity. We all thought for many years that civilization had settled certain questions once and for all but the ruthlessness of a savage nation has showed us that these question have not been settled that the lives of noncombatants today are unsafe at the hands of such people."

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

On Wednesday evening, the Board of Directors of the Quincy Y. M. C. A. will be entertained by the president, Frank Burgess, at his home on Highland avenue, Wollaston. At this time there will be presented an engrossed resolution of appreciation to George H. Brown, first president of the association and for twenty-three years a member of the board but now resigned. Mr. Brown was elected the first honorary life director of the Quincy association. To Amos D. Albee will also be presented an engrossed copy of a resolution of the board expressing the association's gratitude to him for his long and faithful service and regret in being obliged to transfer his name from the list of active to that of the honorary directors. A committee of the board has charge of the affair and a program including several fine musical selections is being arranged.

The sign "8 R SIGNED" is on the association bulletin board referring to the senior camp that will be conducted if possible July 23-Aug. 1, inclusive. This will be an overland tour through the White Mountains covering from 500 to 600 miles with climbs of Mount Washington and other peaks. An auto truck will be used and the band will live gypsy fashion. Pictures of the trip conducted last year by Secretary Gaskell are at the building and it woud be a pleasure to show them. It is expected that several ball games will be played en route as last year's trip through the Adirondacks included six games with some of the fastest summer resort teams. The party will be limited to 22; charge $15.

Mr. Humphrey is busy with plans looking to the securing of enough support to conduct a boys" camp at Oldham pond, July 7-20. He and Mr. J. A. Sedgwick, chairman of the Boys' Work Committee, inspected the proposed site Thursday and are very enthusiastic.

A. A. Robertson, Jr., has taken up the duties of assistant to Mr. Gaskell and will serve during the time that the association is without the services of a physical director.

TO WED QUINCY MAN.

Mr. and Mrs. Ordway R. Hall of Dorchester, wish to announce the engagement of their daughter Elizabeth Martin to Albert E. Smith of Wollaston.

POST ATTENDS CHURCH SUNDAY

March to Services Both Morning and Evening

Memorial Sunday was observed by the members of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., and kindred organizations by attending divine services both in the morning and evening. In the morning the Post accompanied by the Sons of Veterans and allied societies attended services at the Washington street Congregational church, where the address was made by Rev. Stephen B. Lang, whose subject was "Retrospection." There was also special music by the church choir. Many city officials attended.

In the evening the Post and kindred organizations attended services at the Universalist church, where Rev. Merrill C. Ward preached an able sermon. His text was from the Revelation, 3-12. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God."

During his address he spoke of the value of Memorial Day both to the soldier and the country. The soldiers set up a pillar of freedom, a pillar of faith and courage, a pillar of sacrifice, and a pillar of brotherhood. In connection with the pillar of sacrifice he paid a tribute to the sacrifices made by the women who gave up so much during the days of the Civil war.

During the services there was singing by John Green and Miss Ruth Packard, who sang the "Star Spangled Banner." At the close of the services the Grand Army and other organizations stood and saluted the flag. The services closed with the singing of America.

POLICE DISPLAY THEIR NEW FLAG

The large American flag, purchased by the members of the Quincy police department, was thrown to the breeze Sunday for the first time and flew continuously during the observance of Memorial Day. The flag hung over School street, one end of the ropes being on police headquarters and the other on a large tree, on the opposite side of the street.

For the first time in the city the Swedish flag was flown below Old Glory. This order was carried out at the boarding house of Mrs. Anderson on School street.

MANY FLAGS ON MEMORIAL DAY

That a new spirit of patriotism is being arounsed throughout the city was apparent Memorial Day by the unusual general display of American flags. Always on National holidays the American flag is displayed on all public buildings of the city as well as many private residences but this year the display on private residences was more general than usual. This was perhaps due in a measure to the war and the desire of the citizens to show their patriotism at this time of peril to the country.

It was particularly pleasing to the veterans of the Grand Army to see such a general display of the stars and stripes. In all parts of the city flags were displayed. In places where the occupants did not have a large flag, small flags were place about the lawns.

FUNERAL OF CHAS. WILMOT.

The funeral of Charles Wilmot, striken with heart disease while at work on the dreadnought "Nevada" at the shipyard took place Sunday afternoon from his home at Cherry street. Services were held in St. John's church by Fr. Walter A. Quinlan and were attended by Fore River employees. The body was placed in the receiving tomb in St. Mary's cemetery. This morning a high mass of requiem was celebrated for the repose of his soul.

CHILDREN AT 40 HOURS DEVOTION

Over 150 members of the Society of the Children of Mary participated in the procession which closed the observance of the Forty Hours Devotion at St. John's church Sunday morning. More than 100 were girls, dressed in white, and the rest were boys.

A solemn high mass was celebrated by Fr. John J. Casey. Fr. Walter A. Quinlan was deacon and Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor was sub deacon. Thirty altar boys assisted at the mass. Music was by the regular choir, under the direction of John Mahan, organist. Miss Theresa Wholey, Miss Mary Lyons and Arthur Holmes were soloists.

The Blessed Sacrament, exposed on the altar since the services oponed on Thursday morning, was carried aloft by the clergy during the procession, about the church and after Benediction it was replaced in the tabernacle.

POLICE WATCH AT CEMETERY

Nothing transpired from darkness Sunday evening to daylight Monday morning to interrupt the loncly vigil of the police guarding Mt. Wollaston cemetery. Several men relieved each other during the night. The policing of the cemetery on the night before Memorial Day's observance was started two years ago after the disappearance of valuable floral remembrances which were reported as stolen. Last year two persons were arrested on similar charges.

K. of C. DECORATE MEMBERS' GRAVES

The annual memorial mass for deceased members of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, at St. John's church on Monday morning was well attended. Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor of the church, and chaplain of the council, was celebrant. After the mass delegations decorated the graves of members in the cemeteries of Quincy and other places with floral wreaths. Grand Knight Peter M. Sullivan headed the delegation which went to St. Mary's cemetery, West Quincy.

IN CHINA FOR TWENTY YEARS

Rev. E. R. Beckman, for twenty years a missionary in China but now connected with the Scandinavian Alliance Mission, spoke at the Swedish Congregational church Sunday at the morning service and also to the Sunday school. He told some of his experiences while stationed in China, several of which were very pathetic. During a rebellion three years ago his wife and two children were murdered and he barely escaped with his life. At the close of his interesting talk an offering was taken for the Chinese mission.

HARMONY CLUB OPENS.

Large Number Guests on Sunday and Monday.

The Harmony club of West Quincy held open house Sunday and Memorial Day at their summer cottage "The Harvard Lawn" at Nantasket. Several hundred people visited the boys during the two days. The Thelma Girls of this city, Delco Girls, Claremonts and several other clubs which have cottages at the beach during the summer also were at the opening. Monday evening an elaborate supper was served the guests under the direction of James McDonald.

MEMORIAL HIGH MASS.

About one hundred members of the St. Mary's C. T. A. and M. R. society attended the memorial mass held Memorial Day morning in St. Mary's church. A requiem high mass was sung by Rev. William J. Duffy, assisted by the regular choir under the direction of Mrs. Mary Reardon.

Taxation has been defined by America's greatest judicature the late Judge Cooley as "The enforced proportional contribution from persons and property levied by the State by virtue of its sovereignty for the support of government and for all public needs."

The late Professor William G. Sumner of Yale, the recognized authority on public expenditures, stated that when the community was assessed more than fifteen dollars per thousand dollars of actual value either on personal or real estate all above this assessed rate was confiscation. It necessarily follows the citizens of Quincy are having their property confiscated at a rapid rate under the past and present methods of assessment.

When will this system change, or shall we as citizens delay and postpone from one year to another until actual confiscation has been accomplished, by the antiquated system which now prevails.

The tax commissioner of Massachusetts informs us in his annual report for 1913 that there is four and one half billion dollars of real property which is not taxed. Why not? It is a fundamental proposition that those who pay their taxes pay for those who escape paying their proportional share of governmental expense and who are the owners of this vast amount of property, who receive all the protection afforded to the citizen by government. It cannot be the small property owner whose home is valued from $3,000 to $5,000. His house is seen and he cannot escape. He must pay or have his home sold for taxes. tI is the great corporations syndicates and wealthy individuals who returns the value of their holdings far below the actual value of the same.

This condition is seen here in Quincy to a greater extent than most any locality in the state. It has been estimated by reliable authority that there is from twenty to twenty-five million dollars worth of real estate and personal property that escapes taxation in this city at the present time.

And who are we to blame for this condition? Why, the public officials who do not tax the rich as impartially as they do the poor man, who cannot dodge his taxes by change of residence by going to Orleans, as has a former Mayor. No the average man must remain to bear the burden and increase his revenue or curtail his expenses to meet this condition: and if he cannot secure an increased wage or curtail his expenses he must borrow money or go in debt for his actual expenses of life. For you will remember that it is labor that finally pays all expense of government and produces all wealth.

One of the most eminent philosophers of his day, Proudhon, wrote "Property is Robbery," or perhaps those who undervalue their property agree on this plan.

The simple plan that they should take who have the power and they should keep who can, but the mass have the power when they can combine their strength will overturn the intolerant system of Taxation which now prevails and usher in the old system, that which is known as single tax, the only righteous method of taxation devised by man.

"A little stealing is a dangerous part
But stealing largely is a noble art.
'Tis sin to rob a henroost of a single hen
But stealing thousands makes us gentlemen."

MAN IS STRUCK BY SHAW'S AUTO

Charles Totman, a well known character in Hingham and Weymouth was struck by an automobile driven by W. G. Shaw of Quincy, near the Hingham toll bridge late Saturday night. Mr. Shaw was on his way to his summer home in Marshfield and was driving at a moderate speed and as far as can be learned Totman was on his way toward Weymouth. The Hingham police say Totman was walking in the street and that Mr. Shaw did his best to avoid hitting him but the fender of his car struck Totman and knocked him down. Mr. Shaw notified the Hingham police and taking the man in his car brought him to Quincy where he was attended by Dr. W. L. Sargent.

FRIENDS ATTEND 10th ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bianchi were pleasantly surprised at their home, 41 Brooks avenue Saturday evening, the occasion being the tenth anniversary of their marriage. The visit of their friends was a great surprise to Mr. and Mrs. Bianchi, who however gave them a most cordial welcome. During the evening the hosts were presented with a number of gifts in the tin line as well as some of silver, the presentation speech being made by Miss Delia DeLaurier and responded to by Mr. Bianchi. An orchestra rendered music during the evening and this with dancing made the hours pass all too quickly. Refreshments were served during the evening.

CATHOLIC CLUB WINS GREAT GAME

The Catholic club of North Quincy won an exciting ten inning game from the strong Medford A. C. Monday afternoon on the Atlantic field.

With the score three to one against the local club, in the ninth by a great spurt they managed to tie score and came back in the tenth and scored the winning run by a base on balls, an error and McGunigle's fine drive.

Jimmie Michael was on the mound for the Catholic club and although a number of hits were made off him he managed to hold the visitors when hits meant runs. The Catholic club fielded well and great plays were made by Cullen and Creedon.

This makes the third game the Catholic club has won on the Atlantic field and the fans claim it is a great team. About 600 saw the game. The score by innings:

Batteries—Michael and O'Connell; Webb and Hartmann.

AUTO GOES ON SIDEWALK.

Crashes Through Window of Store.

The auto of Frank Fessenden Crane skidded on Hancock street Monday afternoon and shattered the glass window in the furniture store of Henry L. Kincaide. The machine was operated by Arthur G. Barker, the chauffeur.

The machine burst a tire and turned sharply to the left. To reach the window it had to make its way over an open street, piles of dirt, through paving piled on the curbing, across a sidewalk and onto an iron step. The shutting off of the power probably saved the machine from going into the store.

SQUANTUM BOYS PRESENT SHOW

"King of Cannibal Islands" Proves Delightful

Richards Memorial hall in Squantum was crowded to the doors Saturday night when members of the Squantum Boy's Athletic club gave their first entertainment. The boys appeared in "The King of the Cannibal Islands," a two act piece written for the Fay school boys at Southboro.

The first act showed two Gloucester fishermen wrecked on a desert island inhabitated by cannibals. Louis McCarron and Alexander Hogg were the fishermen. Here the cannibals presented them to their queen, impersonated by Miss Edith Olson, one of Squantum's prettiest young misses. According to the laws of the island the first white man to land became king and wedded the queen. Louis McCarron was crowned king and held court dealing out some very humorous sentences to the wrong doers of the island's native population.

The jewels of the former monarch consisting of two bricks and a horseshoe were turned over to the king. It later developed that the white man who wore the treasured sign "Salva-Sea" should be king, so the crown was taken from McCarron and Hogg became king.

The parts of the natives were cleverly taken by the young members of the club who were blacked up and who wore fantastic costumes. Clam shell chains and beads made them look grotesque.

The natives were Malcolm Currie, Francis Callahan, Frederick Pope, William McCarron, Harold Larsen, Carl Friberg, Leo McCarron, Joseph Uppling, Roy Olson, Lorimer Hansen, Robert Gran. Miss Alice McCarron was the Queen's attendant.

All the boys knew their parts to the letter and all the humor of the situation was well brought out. Miss Olson made a charming queen.

The second part of the entertainment consisted of a ministrel show with the former kings—McCarron and Hogg—as oint interlocutors. The end men were Francis Callahan, Malcolm Currie, Louis McCarron, Carl Friberg, and Harold Larsen.

The jokes were bright and snappy as handled by those boys. A quartet consisting of Francis Callahan, Frederick Pope, Carl Friberg and Harold Larsen sang "It's a Long Way to Tipperary" and "Tip Top Tipperary Mary." They were loudly applauded and responded to several encores. Another quartet, composed of Louis McCarron, Alexander Hogg, William McCarron and Malcolm Currie, sang "Night Time Down in Dixie Land."

"I Didn't Raise My Boy to be a Soldier" was sung by Roy Olson and Joseph Uppling. Joseph Uppling proved a big hit in singing "The Mississippi Cabaret," following with a clog dance, Robert Gran proved himself a clever violinist and played two selections. A comic strong man act was done by Roy Olson and Leo McCarron.

Miss Helen Hansen a very clever pianist, who is a member of the Quincy High school, played the accompaniments.

The affair was given to raise funds for baseball uniforms for the club's baseball nine and about $35 was raised by the evening's performance. The club expects to have the uniforms within a week and may use them for the first time in a game next Saturday on the Atlantic recreation grounds.

The officers of the club are president, Malcolm Currie; vice president, Louis McCarron; secretary, William McCarron; and treasurer, Harold Larsen. Francis Callahan is captain of the baseball nine and Frederick Pope manager.

MEMORIAL DAY

In the meantime the members of Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps, Rebecca Wiswell Tent, Daughters of Veterans, and Ladies Auxiliary to the Sons of Veterans and Spanish War Veterans, in command of Frank Stoddard, had marched from Faxon hall and taken position directly in front of the steps of the First Parish church.

On the steps of the church there were grouped several hundred school children in charge of Mrs. C. Alice Litchfield and Mrs. Agnes G. Fletcher. Each child carried in the hand a tiny American flag.

When the parade reached this spot it formed in front of the church, the colors being assembled in the centre. The children led by the band then sang "America," after which they gave the salute to the flag and the exercises closed with the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

This pretty service over the parade with the exception of the Spanish War Veterans and M. V. M. Veterans continued the march to the Adams Academy grounds where they formed in a hollow square about a miniature monument which had been set up on the green.

The services here opened with selection by the band which was followed by an address by Rev. Merrill C. Ward, chaplain of the day.

Rev. Mr. Ward then spoke briefly of the Machine Gun Squad which made its first appearance and complimented the members on their fine appearance. As the audience began to applaud he said, "That is right they are worthy of your applause." Continuing he said in part.

MR. WARD'S ADDRESS.

To have the veteran soldier with us today, and to meet on our streets daily these men wearing the little bronze button is a privilege and an inspiration I congratulate the city on having such smart veterans. I rejoice that these gritty "Lincoln's boys" refused to give up their march today, and marched in good line, blue uniforms side by side as in the spirit of '61. I congratulate the veterans on their fine showing today. Memorial Day is a day of youthful memories. I congratulate every citizen and child that has come to see these veterans and clasp their hands and rejoice with them this year, the fiftieth year of peace in our land after their great victory that freed the land from slavery, that saved us the flag, that gave us the "Union and liberty," as Webster hoped, "now and forever, one and inseparable."

"It thrills the imagination to think that all over our land today a grateful people honors the nation's heroes that still live, and heaps flowers where the veterans have fallen asleep, and in the soil their bodies consecrate, plants the flag for which they fought. In every cemetery, even in towns remote and small, nestling far back among the hills, the breezes are bright with the flutter of little flags, and perfumed with flowers telling each passer-by that there sleep those who offered their lives to their country. Every city marches with bands to its cemeteries, assembles at its soldier's monuments, and crowds one or many of its largest auditoriums. Every village gathers its children to cluster about its heroes and sing of the flag, and hear the stories of how it was saved, told by those who helped to save it. And it is well that we do this for the future of our land.

"It is well that we do this in the city that gave John Adams and John Quincy Adams, the only presidents from Massachusetts; it is well that we observe this Memorial Day in the city that gave us so many Revolutionary War heroes and decorate their graves today; it is well that we observe Memorial Day in the city of Quincy that gave so many soldiers to its country, in this city that was so loyal to the great war governor, John A. Andrew, in this city that gave soldiers to the Spanish war, in this city that has given great men and great women and great soldiers to every war for our country. But where is our soldiers' monument? Where is Quincy's soldiers' Memorial Hall? I believe it is really here in the hearts of our best people. I believe the visible memorial will be built in this city of beautiful granite. But friends, it should be no longer in the future. Build it now while you have these veterans with you to enjoy it and to hallow it by their use, build it now that it may show our gratitude to these veterans, build it now that it may teach its lessons of patriotism to this generation, build it now that those who come from foreign lands shall look upon it and ask what it means and learn the precious lessons of our history, build it now that Quincy may honor its heroes, and not forget them. BUILD IT NOW.

Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

"Two mighty facts dominate men's thought on this Memorial Day. One is the tragic spectacle of all Europe and half the human race involved in the worst war of history, the most wicked and the most inexcusable. The other is that this is the fiftieth year since victory for the Union and liberty closed the war in this country.

"I draw briefly two lessons. One is that we ought to prepare against war in this country. We ought not to prepare for war, but make reasonable preparation aaginst it.

"General Wood said a few days ago to the cadets of a western state. 'Every schoolboy in America should have some military training. He should learn to live the camp life. He should learn the discipline and obedience that is necessary to a good soldier.'

"Now I am a believer in the Peace Society and I am opposed to militarism. But I believe that in this, General Wood is right. Every boy before he leaves the High school should learn the simple fundamentals of a soldier. I would not have him put much time on it. A brief camp in the summer, a few drills in the winter, several lessons in the year of what makes an efficient soldier, would make him an efficient man, would teach him the strength that depends upon morality, upon self control, upon discipline and character and obedience. Military study would furnish many interesting mathematical problems, develop ingenuity in strategy, and teach patriotism. I do not believe in much armament. Armament has to go to the junk pile quickly. Armament goes off by spontaneous combustion and makes war where it would never have been thought of otherwise. Much armament is wasteful and dangerous. But rightly disciplined manhood makes an efficient people for peace or for war. I would have a good militia in every available city, but I would not have only a small standing army.

"We should make every preparation for peace. We should join All America in the demand for the World Peace Court and World Peace congress at the Hague, to be drawn up according to that great plan which the best and wisest minds of America have just adopted at the congress in Ohio this month, which has already received such promise of support in America and even from men high in the councils of the nations at war. When this war is over, men will be so sick of war that such a world government can be set up, and this is the time to prepare for peace, to hasten and make sure the time,

'When the war drum throbs no longer
And the battle flags are furled,
In the Parliament of Man
The Federation of the world.'

"We should teach every school boy and girl, every citizen, every soldier the true and worthy ideals of America, as President Wilson has voiced them, 'For the interesting and inspiring thing about America is that she asks nothing for herself except what she has a right to ask for humanity itself. We want no nation's property; we wish to question no nation's honor; we wish to stand selfishly in the way of no nation; we want nothing that we cannot get by our own legitimate enterprise; and by the inspiration of our own example; and, standing for those things it is not pretentious on our part to say that we are privileged to stand for what every nation would wish to stand for, and speaking for those things which all humanity must desire." Those words from our President are great words uttered in a great hour and will influence history in America and outside of it.

"Sympathy and good will toward all races in our nation and out of it; the desire to do good to all people and all nations; the knowledge that the welfare of one nation is bound up with the welfare of all; the living of each for all and all for each, in a word, BROTHERHOOD, this as Americans we can and should teach and practice.

"The Grand Army of the Republic has given us a lesson in the spirit of the Union. The soldier did not hate the South. He did while he was fighting, perhaps, but when the war was over he shook hands with his foes and came home and went to work. My father was a soldier intensely strong for the Union cause, but he never spoke of the South without a friendly sympathy for what it suffered and always spoke of the Southern soldier with respect. It is not the good soldier who cherishes hate.

"Today the Blue and the Gray drop their flowers together on the graves of all American soldiers. The Spanish War showed that the North and South had become cemented as one people. Each American brigade was made up of a Northern, a Southern and a Western regiment, and each found that the other was willing to fight for him and his flag and his country. I wish I had time to render a worthy tribute to the veteran of the Spanish War. That must wait for another time. The most impressive service I ever attended was when Gen. Joseph Wheeler spoke before Edward Kinsley Post in Boston Theatre after the Spanish War. As this veteran, once a Confederate General, who had been privileged to lead troops once more in Cuba under the Stars and Stripes spoke to the Union veterans, his message of love to those whom once he fought, many a heart was profoundly touched.

"One of America's most impressive incidents was the funeral procession that escorted the remains of General Grant to its last resting place in that fittingly magnificent tomb beside the Hudson. Veterans of the North and South clasped hands about his precious form, together they dropped their tribute of flowers and tears. An ex-Confederate general, John S. Wise, pronounced a eulogy that fittingly voiced the tribute of a united nation.

Another great incident was when on the field of Gettysburg, fifty years after the battle, veterans of the North and South marched again over the fields where desperate charges took place, and this time marched to patriotic songs to meet at the old battle line and shake hands and shower their old time enemies with the flowers of friendship while the air rang with cheers for each other given with a hearty good will. We felt that they had "become dedicated and consecrated," as the great Lincoln asked that they might on that field to "finish the work so nobly begun there," to preserve the Union, to 'give a new birth of freedom," and that their old comrades who fell there had "not died in vain."

"Citizens, let us join with the soldiers, to make the Union they fought for, strong and great, to make America stand for liberty and justice, brotherhood and peace, righteousness and good will to all the peoples of earth."

Mayor Chester I. Campbell was then introduced and spoke briefly as follows:

ADDRESS OF THE MAYOR.

"I can assure you that it is not only a privilege but a high honor to extend to you gentlemen of the Grand Army of the Republic and to you ladies and gentlemen present, the greetings and well wishes of this grand old historic City of Quincy.

"Quincy has a claim as being the birthplace of American Independence, for it was here that John Adams and John Quincy Adams were born and it was here on this very spot where we are now standing that John Hancock first saw the light of day. Was it not in the breasts of these patriots that the spark of freedom and liberty for the American people burned and from that spark came that famous Declaration of Independence—the basis of all true freedom.

"Quincy has never been found wanting in time of call for country, for back in the 60's, Quincy sent many to the front. It was a Quincy company that passed through that terrible ordeal at Baltimore and it was this same Quincy company that was the first to enter Washingon and meet President Lincoln and to say to him—Here we are—ready.'

"How can Quincy be other than patriotic? Her whole history is full of patriotic deeds and men, but we must watch well, we must not forget what these men have done for us.

"Today is considered by some a day of sadness, but I believe it should be a day of rejoicing. I believe it should be a day of rejoicing. Rejoice that Almighty God saw fit in his infinite wisdom to give us men. Men in every sense of the word. Men who were not afraid to do their duty. Men who were not afraid to die. Therefore let us rejoice that these men stood for what they knew to be right. They stood for the freedom of their country, because they were men.

"Let us rejoice also that Almighty God has spared to us so many of these brave men. Rejoice that we can clasp their hands and say 'well don.' Rejoice that our country is at peace with all the world, and why 'Because God gave us men."

Following this Adjutant James H. Webb, read Col. John F. Logan's first general orders for Memorial Day delivered in 1868. This was followed by the depositing of the white wreath in the name of Fraternity by Senior Vice Commander Thomas Ring; the red wreath in the name of Charity by Past Commander Francis P. Loud; the blue wreath in the name of Loyalty by Adjutant James H. Webb; the white, red and blue wreath by Commander Mark E. Hanson in the name of Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty.

Capt. B. F. Hodgkinson in behalf of the Boy Scouts and in honor of the valiant deeds of the Grand Army deposited a wreath of ivy. This part of the exercises closed with "Nearer My God to Thee" by the band.

Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps, Mrs. Ella A. Hayden president, then held their ritual service to the unknown dead, after which a red, white and blue wreath was deposited and Mrs. Kate A. Blaisdell recited a patriotic poem. The members of the corps then marched about the monument depositing flowers.

The exercises closed with three vollies by the color guard of the Grand Army, taps by the bugler and benediction by Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson of the First church.

The line then reformed and marched to headquarters where it was dismissed. As the line reached City Hall on its return it was drawn up at attention while the Mayor and other city officials passed in review.

FORE RIVERS ARE DEFEATED

U. S. M. C. Capture An 8 to 2 Win

Upwards of 1600 men, women and children saw the United Shoe Machinery Co. of Beverly beat the Fore Rivers at Merrymount Park Monday afternoon by a score of 8 to 2. Home runs by Sid Duggan and Murphy prevented a shutout.

The Fore Rivers played indifferent ball at times. Gillis, refreshed the recollections of the fans by two poor throws which scored two runs. He also made a pretty catch behind short-stop.

Murphy at second played a beautiful game, his only doubtful play being a wide throw to first. The feature of the game was the one hand [illegible] of Peterson, in centre field.

Duggan's and Murphy's homers gave the fans new hopes which were not realized. In the six of the innings only three men batted.

Foster was nailed at the plate after he circled the bases. The ball was relayed, Ford to Duggan, via Murphy.

Fore Rivers were weak at the bat and Higgins allowed but three hits. Bates was touched up for nine. Several went for extra bases because the crowd in the outfield interfered with the fielders. Bates fanned six and Higgins six. The score by innings:

LOCAL TEAM BEATS MILTON

The Cunningham gym team beat the Rambler A. C. of South Quincy at Milton Monday morning. The locals say poor umpiring caused their defeat. The Ramblers got six hits while the winners made but two. McIntire fanned 14 and Paolucci seven.

The score by innings

MAKARIAS BEAT REDMEN A. C.

Wallace Kemp, Redmen, Is Injured

Red hot rooting enlivened the Makaria-Redmen game at Merrymount Park Monday morning. The former won 6 to 3.

Capt. Nicolls ordered his team from the field in the sixth inning when the Indians protested Umpire "Fedr" McKenzie's ruling that Johnson was out for not touching second. Half the team had left the field and "Mac" was on the point of calling the game when the claim was dropped.

The first genuine balk made on the field for several seasons was called on Johnson.

Wallace Kemp was injured in the fourth inning when in trying to prevent Russ Bates from getting back to second he was shoved against the bag. Dr. W. L. Sargent who treated him said the ligaments of his right knee were torn.

Most of the Makarias were out of form. Stan Bates was hit frequently. He did not use all his speed because Troupe, his catcher couldn't have held him.

Jenkins, "Bode" Bradley and Ciardi made home runs. The former's cleared the Hancock street fence on the first bounce, going through the centre field pine tree and stopping in the yard of the Forest homestead. Ciardi's was recovered on the street in back of left field. Bradley's also went into left field.

Bates fanned 13. Johnson struck out 12. The score by innings:

Q. Y. C. OPENS ITS SEASON

Dartwell Shows Her Heels to Competitors

The Quincy Yacht club officially opened its racing season of 1915 Saturday afternon when a race was held off the club house at Houghs Neck in which the scrappers of the Cape Cat class participated. There was a fresh easterly breeze all the afternoon giving the flyers all the air they wanted.

The old time rivals, Dartwell, Iris, Clara and Grayling, were out looking for honors and a very pretty race it proved to be. The course was a triangular one, a distance of eight miles, and the racers were closely watched by the arm chair fleet on the club piazzas. In this race the Dartwell with ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore at the stick again proved her skill and showed her heels to the fleet finishing with a lead of over three minutes, actual time, and a few seconds less on corrected time. The judges were Secretary John O. Hall and Treasurer George S. Morse. The summary:

Name and owner	A. T.	C. T.
Iris, Crane	1-27-15	1-26-35
Clara, Robbins	1-28-43	1-27-47

U. S. DRIFTING TOWARD WAR

So Says Rev. W. B. Ayers In Sermon

In his sermon Sunday night, Mr. Ayers said: "You may look around anywhere on Sunday and see that this is in reality a heathen community; full of idol worshipping men and women. You will see men who ought to be on their knees before the alter of Jehovah, praying for their sons and daughters fast learning the evil that is in the world: praying for their homes and the salvation of their own souls—you will see such down on their knees before an old wooden boat and that is what they are worshipping or before an automobile for which they have gone in debt or in the muck of a garden. These be their idols and their gods.

"It looks to me as if this nation is fast drifting toward war: and as I study the situation and see how we have tried to keep from war: with Mexico, with Japan, with England, with Germany, and then see how, in spite all our brainiest efforts, we seem still steadidly to drift in the direction from which the din of battle comes, I ask myself what mysterious hand guides us thus for it seems to be inevitable. Might it not be because we have so far forgotten our Father that only the deepest misery will have power to recall us. We have forgotten sacred duties and sacred principles. We have claimed everything for ourselves and yielded nothing to God.

"Hostile shells may yet burst over our peaceful community. The great death dealing missives may yet fall within our homes and scatter the embers of our hearths and then we shall retreat to the surrounding hills As we look back the flames of homes once precious to us will mock us and then our hearts will cry out:

Would God we had practised our duty and built our homes and our lives on principles which endure when pleasure and wealth and walls are no more.,"

THREE MILLION JOIN IN SHOUT

WILLIAM PHILLIP SIMS.
(United Press Correspondent)

With the French army at the front. A mighty chorus from 3,000,000 throats, sweeping down the 500 miles from the North sea to the Swiss border in a thunderous refrain of "La Marsellaise," greeted the welcome news that Italy had entered the war against Austria.

The story of how the message flashed along the trenches, at dusk on a brilliant Whitsuntide, how it spread to the remote outposts along the world's battle front, is without parallel in history.

King Victor Emmanuel signed the declaration of war in Rome at two o'clock Sunday afternoon. The French were immediately notified

War Minister Millerand flashed it to Gen. Joffre at general headquarters. With scarcely a second delay it was rushing down from army commanders to the subordinates, branching out from each new centre until every officer and man along the firing line knew Italy had entered the lists on the side of the allies at last.

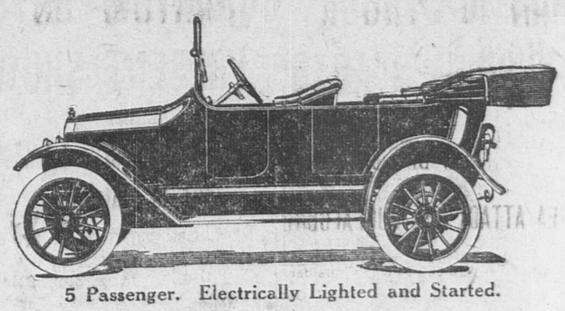

Instinctively the Germans in the opposite trenches knew what the thunderous chorus meant. They did not have to read the placards printed during the night by the French and posted on the tops of the trenches. They shouted back "Jotte Scrauf Italy." Then from the German trenches came the strain, "Die Watch[illegible] am Rhine," and shortly afterwards came the rattle of bullets. The Germans were riddling the placards while the French laughed derisively. They printed new cards reading "Your Goose Is Cooked" and planted them in a well filled field of waving Italian flags.

KINGSBURY WINS RACE.

Fred M. Kingsbury of Newton street, Wollaston, B. B. A. track team won the mile race at the big athletic meet of the Knights of St. Finbar at Russell Field, North Cambridge, Monday. Time 4.30, exceptionally fast time considering the condition of the track. The prize was a 16 inch pig skin leather lined bag. Fred was captain of the Q. H. S team in 1913.

Strange to say the indolent unemployed of the Eastern cities decline to spend $50 for railroad fare to and from Kansas, where they could earn $2.00 a day for a montly harvesting wheat.

"THE FORRESTER'S DAUGHTER," A SERIAL OF THE EVER WELCOME KIND

If you want a story dealing with adventures in the great west, don't fail to watch for the new serial to start next week in the Ledger, "The Forester's Daughter," by Hamlin Garland. It's the kind of serial that is full of thrills, and holds ones attention from beginning to end. There is nothing tawdry about "The Forester's Daughter." You don't find impossible situations in it and its author hasn't allowed his mind to weave wild fantasies that could never happen in real life.

Instead of these the story is replete with human interest, love, adventure. It is a romance of the great forests of the Bear Tooth range of Colorado.

AUSTRIAN PORT BADLY DAMAGED

SEA ATTACK ON MONFALCONE

Destroyers' Attack Causes Considerable Damage to Shipping and Get Away Without a Scratch—Several Ships Loaded With Flour Sunk—Petrograd Reports Fighting of Undiminished Violence In Vicinity of Permysl—Mackensen's Troops Forced Back Across the San—Lull In Fierce Fighting North of Arras In the West

London, June 1.—Italy has retaliated for Austrian air and naval raids by making an air raid on Pola, the Austrian naval base on the Adriatic, to the south of Trieste.

A dirigible flew over Pola and dropped bombs on the seaport, striking the railroad station, a naphtha depot and the arsenal. All the bombs took effect, according to the Italian report, and a fire was started at the arsenal.

A flotilla of Italian destroyers made a dash on Monfalcone, bombarding the port and doing considerable damage to Austrian shipping. Several ships loaded with flour were sunk. The Italian destroyers got away without a scratch.

In the meantime the Italian advance on Trent is making progress from three directions. The Italian right is fifteen miles into Austrian territory, has taken Condino, an important strategic point thirty miles to the southwest of Trent; the right wing, which started from Bassano, followed the Sugano valley, and its advance guard is now at the frontier, about twenty miles east of Trent; the third force is fighting to get through the Tonele pass.

So far the Italians have not forced the strongest of the Austrian defences. There are some modern and very powerful fortifications in the mountain passes from east to southwest of Trent, and the Italians will have to meet desperate resistance at these points.

An official statement, issued by the Italian ministry of marine, announces that an Italian dirigible has made a raid on the Austrian naval base at Pola, damaging the railroad station and the arsenal. The statement follows:

"One of our dirigibles flew over Pola last evening, dropping bombs on their railroad station, a naptha depot and the arsenal. All the bombs burst with full effect. A big fire started in the arsenal.

"The dirigible was subject to a violent fire from the land batteries, but was not hit and returned intact.

"This morning our destroyer flotilla bombarded a shipyard at Monfalcone, causing considerable damage, as the commander of the destroyers was able to observe. Several large boats laden with flour were surprised and destroyed by the same flotilla, which returned, having accomplished its mission, without being hit by the fire of the guns on the Austrian coast. The crews suffered no loss."

Teutons Forced To Retreat

Mackensen's left wing, attempting to encircle Permysl, has been hurled back across the San. The Russians have occupied the villages of Kanilow and Nakio, which changed hands several times in the terrific fighting above Permysl, capturing 3000 prisoners, including sixty officers and many machine guns and searchlights.

The official statement issued at Petrograd announces these fresh victories for the Slavs.

"In the Shavli region we continue to press back the Germans defending the Skabiany and Kelm," says the official statement. "Near Sawdeni we took sixteen guns, many prisoners and much booty.

"On the front in the rear of Ari Burnu the enemy made successful efforts to prevent us from reinforcing trenches we had captured in the centre of his position.

"At Seddul Bahr the enemy seems engaged in filling gaps made on May 25.

Lull In Western Fighting

A lull in the fierce fighting north of Arras was reported in official dispatches to the French war office. Only one engagement of note has occurred in the past twelve hours. That was in the Lorette hills, where a German attack, according to the war office, was "easily repulsed."

The Berlin war office statement says:

"The French attempted Sunday, north of Arras and in the forest of Le Pretre, to break through our front with strong forces. Owing to the bravery of the Bavarian and Rhine regiments the attack ended in complete defeat for the enemy. His losses were extremely high."

"In the forest of Le Pretre the only success gained by the French was the penetration of a few advanced trenches. Otherwise the enemy's attack at this point failed."

APPOINTMENT AS INTERPRETER

Enos S. Costa, a well known citizen of Quincy, who speaks the dialects of the Azores and Cape Verde Islands as well as Portuguese, Spanish and Italian, a very valuable asset in connection with the immigration bureau, has been appointed an interpreter for the Boston district. His familiarity with these languages has often been made use of by the Quincy district court where he has frequently acted as interpreter.

Mr. Costa was born in Urzelina, Sr. George, Azores Islands, Nov. 7, 1852, and came to the United States in 1873 when he settled in Quincy where he has since resided. He soon mastered the granite trade and later became a member of the Merrymount Granite Co., in which he is at present a director.

In 1878 he married and has two sons, Joseph F. and Enos W. Costa, both well known well known Quincy young men. He became a naturalized citizen as soon as possible after coming to this country and has always used his influence with his countrymen to induce them to become law-abiding citizens.

His application for the position of interpreter in the Immigration Department was favored by leading citizens and officials of the city as well as by representative Spanish and Portuguese citizens of Quincy. During the past few weeks with the arrival of so many immigrants at Boston his services have been in constant demand as but few of the official interpreters spoke the dialects of the people of Southern Europe and the Portuguese Islands off the African coast.

SOUTH QUINCY BOY IS INSTANTLY KILLED

Oiling Machinery When Apron Catches In Shafting

James Fontani, of Totman street, a 16 year old South Quincy boy, was instantly killed at the granite plant of J. H. Jenkins on Vernon street shortly after seven o'clock this morning when his apron caught in the belt and he was drawn into the shafting.

Fontani was oiling when the accident occured and was alone in a small shed. The noise of his body striking against the side of the building attracted the attention of other workmen. Before they could shut down the power he was horribly mangled. His body was thrown to one side after his arm had been severed.

CHARGED WITH STEALING AUTO

The police are mystified over the identity of the young man arrested at Houghs Neck for the larceny of the auto of Mrs. Margaret Moore on Sunday evening.. He said he was Richard Farronson of 618 Hyde Park avenue, Roslindale. Boston police say he is unknown there.

Farronson was arrested by Patrolman Farrell Monday night. The officer was on his day off when he saw the car and recognized it as answering the description of the one stolen. He phoned headquarters and Sergt. Larkin ordered Farronson arrested.

When booked Farronson had two licenses in his possession. One was issued to Frank McCormick, 4 Estes street, Roxbury, and the other to Robert Farronson, 31 Fort avenue, Roxbury. The prisoner said the Farronson license was his brother's, but the Boston police say no relationship exists and that Robert Farronson was glad to find his lost license. Nothing was developed on the McCormick license.

The prisoner is a respectable appearing young fellow of 24 years and is well dressed His hair is light and curly. He says he found the car in Milton and was returning it to Houghs Nec. The police believe he knows who stole it and was looking for a reward.

In court this morning he was arraigned on two complaints made by Sergt. Larkin. He pleaded not guilty to larceny of an auto and guilty to operating without a license. The case was continued to June 3 for further investigation. Bail was set at $300 in each case.

The auto was a five passenger Jackson and was taken from Centre road and Rogers street early Sunday evening. The theft was discovered half an hour later. The police auto and men were sent out to search for it without results. The catch is known in police circles as "Farrell's vacation stunt."

NEW CAPS CAUSE SHORTAGE OF MEN

The introduction of the new police cap had the effect of reducing the number of men available for duty on the holiday In the past constables have been detailed and have worn the old fashioned helmet and makeshift suits. This year the custom could not be followed since the constables and extras did not have the caps. A shortage of men developed during the day and when requisition was made by members of an Italian society for a police guard at Electa hall, in keeping with the city ordinance, only Lieut. Bishop and Sergt. Johnson were available. It was the first time in the city that any organization was honored with a superior and ranking officer in attendance.

SOME DILAPIDATED

On a dilapidated narrow gauge railroad in a certain state a traveller was struck with the general air of hopelessness of the entire county. Rundown farms, fences falling to pieces and houses unpainted and dismal were seen as mile after mile was reeled off. Finally a countryman got on and the two fell into conversation.

"County around here looks fearfully dilapidated," remarked the traveler.

The train stopped. They looked out and saw a rail missing ahead. The entire train crew clambered out, crowbars in hand, proceeded leisurely to the rear of the train and in due time loosened a rail and carried it forward. It was spiked into position and the train proceeded.

"Somebody stole a rail?" asked the traveler.

"Yaas, about 20 years ago, I reckon. Evah since they hain't nobody bought a new one. When the train comes back they've gotter stop 'an tear up a rail behind 'em. Ain't that the dilapidatedest thing ye ever see, stranger?"—National Monthly.

Rev. Albert Thompson of Goffe street, Quincy, who has been the pastor of the St. Andrews Presbyterian church for the past few years has tendered his resignation to take effect the last Sunday in June.

Mrs. Antoinette aPige of Davis street is receiving congratulations from her friends, upon her convalescence from a recent operation which was performed at the Boston Homoeopathic Hospital.

A very delightful automobile trip was enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Frost and Mr. and Mrs. William M. Chase of Wollaston Boulevard to the White Mountains for the holiday. The party which went up by the way of Concord returned home by the way of the Franconia and Crawford Notches, enjoying all the splendor and beauty of the scenery en route.

"OH, JOY!"

Today when I got out of bed,
I nearly jumped with joy,
And looking in the glass I said,
"Shake hands with me, my boy!"
You ask why did I thus behave?
The reason's very slight,
It was—I hadn't got to shave,
I'd shaved myself last night!

EXCITING WEEK.

"Well," mused six-year-old Harry as he was being buttoned into a clean white suit, "this has been an exciting week, hasn't it, mother? Monday we went to the Zoo, Wednesday I lost a tooth, Thursday was Lily's birthday party, Friday I was sick, yesterday I had my hair cut, and now here I am rushing off to Sunday school."—Lippincott's.

AN OMINOUS ADAGE.

When a lady patient living far from town had telephoned for her physician she apologized for asking him to come such a distance.

"Don't speak of it," said the doctor cheerfully; "I happen to have another patient in that vicinity and so can kill two birds with one stone."—Ladies' Home Journal.

ATTRACT LARGE CROWD.

The ideal weather of Sunday and the holiday attracted the largest crowd of the season to Wollaston beach. The bay presents an attractive sight now with the large number of boats that are anchored off the clubhouses. Every owner was anxious to give his boat a try-out and the sight of many white sails and the trailing-foam of power boats furnished attraction to the crowds who promenaded along the boulevard and enjoyed lounging on the sand.

RECEIVE COMMUNION.

One hundred and fifty children received their first communion Sunday morning at the eight o'clock mass. The mass was celebrated by the pastor, Rev. Thomas R. McCoy, who spoke to the children after which he gave them the total abstinence pledge. The children presented a very pretty scene the girls all in white dresses and wearing wreaths and the boys all in blue suits.

Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Leland were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cummings over the holiday and took a trip to Canton calling on Brother L. W. Frost of John Hancock lodge who is recovering from an attack of erysipelas. The trip was made in Mr. Cummings new touring car. They also called on Mrs. Cummings' parents in Taunton. The day's trip was a most delightful one.

Hundreds of small villages, away from main travelled roads, are readily accessible to salesmen who know how inexpensive and how easy it is to telephone these places from convenient junction points.

OBJECTION TO SECOND HAND PAVING BLOCKS

Adams Street Residents Also Oppose Erection of Garage

There is considerable objection by the residents of Adams street over the paving blocks that are being laid on the easterly side of the street from Hancock street toward Presidents bridge. The paving blocks in question are some that were taken up on Hancock street between School and Granite street, and the particular kick on Adams street seems to be because they are second-hand blocks. At the Commissioner's office however it is said that when the job is completed there will be no kick. After the blocks are laid they will be grouted, that is the cracks between the blocks will be filled with fine gravel and on top of this will be a coating of cement. When the job is complete it will be similar to the job being done on Hancock street, which is known as first class constrction, and will have a level surface.

The corner of Adams and Hancock street has always been a wet place, especially during the winter and spring and often it is impossible to cross the street without going over the shoes in slush or water. The spot is so low that the water after a heavy rain forms a pond at the junction of the two streets. With the paving of the street however it is claimed that this bad place will be remedied and that the surface water will be taken care of.

Another thing which these same people are opposing is the proposition to erect a garage on the Col. Porter estate between Hancock and Adams street. People owning property in the immediate vicinity are making the claim that their property will be materially damaged by the erection of the proposed garage. It is understood that under the rules of the Fire Hazard Commission it will be necessary for the city council to give a public hearing before a permit can be issued to erect a garage and there is but little question that when this public hearing is held residents of Adams street will be heard from.

The fire at Gould's garage Memorial Day, while purely accidental, has served to increase the sentiment against a garage for it is realized that no matter how much care is used there is more or less fire danger at all times where any quantity of gasoline is kept. There was protest enough when Gould's garage was built although the law was not as strict at that time as now.

To sum up the whole matter the residents of that part of Adams street near its junction with Hancock street say that valuations and taxes have gone up all out of proportion and now to propose to add a further burden by erecting a garage is an imposition.

CITY HALL'S FAIREST RETURN

The young woman clerks at City Hall who left Saturday by automobile for Mayor Campbell's camp on Lake Winnepesaukee returned to Quincy safe and sound Tuesday. Leaving Quincy Saturday noon they arrived in camp about 8 o'clock that evening. Sunday was spent on Ossipee mountain and Monday on the lake. Tuesday morning at 4 o'clock saw them on their way to Quincy where they arrived at noon.

QUINCY POLICE BOW IN DEFEAT

Lawrence Bluecoats Are Too Much For Them

The Lawrence police beat the Quincy bluecoats 5 to 4 at Lawrence Tuesday. A red hot argument over the umpire's decision in the ninth inning nearly resulted in the calling out of the "cops."

The argument arose when Fallon tried to score from second and was declared out at the plate. The play was a close one and the locals immediately questioned it. They claimed Fallon was safe and that the score was tied. The umpire stuck to his decision however.

FIRE PRACTICALLY DESTROYS BARN

Loss on Property of Samuel Fleishman Estimated At $500

CAUSE IS NOT KNOWN

Fire, starting from unknown causes broke out in the barn of Samuel Fleishman on Farnum street, Tuesday afternoon and although the department quickly responded the building was practically destroyed before their arrival.

The fire had been raging inside for some time before it went through the roof. The tongue of flame which shot up in the air scattered sparks and embers on the nearby property. In the absence of a stiff breeze the community was not endangered. The barn sets between the Fleishman house and the dwelling of A. O. Sewall. It was valued at $500. Several weeks ago the horse and carriage kept there was sold, the owner contemplating, it is understood, the purchase of an auto

PRESENT "THE IRISH REBEL"

Three Act Drama Scores Real Success

A arge audience was present at Quincy Adams hall Tuesday evening and vigorously applauded the first production by the newly organized dramatic club of Div. 5, A. O. H. The play was a three act drama entitled "The Irish Rebel." The play was given under the personal direction of James McArdle who took the part of Dan Mulligan, a rambling Irish rogue.

The setting of the play was in Ireland in 1898 when the Irish patriots were being persecuted by the English Government. John J. Donahue, president of Div. 5, took the leading part of Dick Massey the Irish Rebel and entered into the spirit of the real Irishman and was the hit of the show. Alexander McGhee as Bryan Kavanagh, a magistrate of Glemaclure took the part of the villain and acquitted himself very creditably. Elizabeth Burke and Helen Connor as Dick's sweetheart and Terry's niece respectively came in for round after round of applause.

The other parts were well taken care of by Frank J. Wade as Terry Dwyer, an Irish gentleman, Allen Connor as Reddy Duggan, an Irish traitor. Charles J. Carlan, Dennis Coughlin and John Shea took the part of English soldiers and looked very fine in their uniforms. Between the acts Miss Elizabeth Burke entertained with several songs and the Reeburn Brothers gave several specialty acts.

The play will be repeated this evening.

PRESIDENT WILSON DEMANDS PEACE IN PROSTRATE MEXICO

Warns Warring Leaders That United States Will Act Unless Conditions Are Remedied

(By United Press.)

Washington, June 2—Demand that the present Mexican leaders act together and act promptly for "the relief and redemption of their prostrate country" was made by Pres. Wilson today. In an open interview on the Mexican conditions the president said that present conditions can no longer be tolerated and unless the Mexican leaders act the president warns them this government "will be constrained to decide what means should be employed by the United States in order to help Mexico save herself and save her people."

"For more than two years revolutionary conditons have existed in Mexico, the purpose being to rid Mexico of those who ignored the constitution of the republic and used the power in contempt of the rights of its people, and with these purposes the people of the United States instinctively and generously sympathize, but the leaders of revolutions in the very hour of their success have disagreed and turned their arms against one another and are unable and unwilling to cooperate. A central authority at Mexico city is no sooner set up than it is undermined and its authority denied by those expected to support it."

RIM BREAKS WINDOW.

The eccentricities of autos was demonstrated again on Monday when a rim bounded from the auto of Frank Fessenden Crane, rolled across the street and smashed its way through a window in the Kincaide furniture store. The rim burst its fastenings when the tire blew out and bounded at full speed. When it went through the window it moved several refrigerators in its path. Previous reports of the accident were incorrect owing to a misunderstanding in police circles.

FILLING AUTO GASOLINE TANKS

Danger Arising From Spark Generated

Although Chief Engineer Billings, who made an investigation of the fire at Gould's garage on the morning of Memorial Day which resulted in a young man losing his life and his conclusions as to the cause were announced in Tuesday's Ledger the accident continues to be a source of much discussion. What puzzles most people is how a spark could have been generated. In view of this discussion the paragraph in the circular sent out some time ago by Fire Hazard Commissioner O'Keefe relative to the use of gasoline will be read with interest. Special attention is called in the rules to the following section:

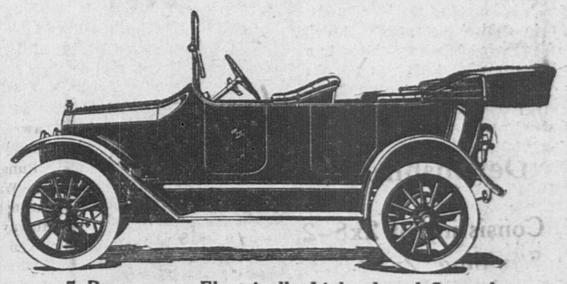

"Investigation of certain garage fires has shown that they were caused by the ignition of gasoline caused by a spark of frictional electricity.

When gasoline is poured through a non-conductor, as a chamois strainer or rubber hose, frictional electricity may be generated in sufficient quantity to make a dangerous spark.

The strainer, funnel, nozzle, etc. should be in metal contact with the fuel tank of the car, or some other method be provided to carry away the frictional electricity as fast as it may be generated so that a dangerous quantity cannot accumulate."

From what can be learned Mr. Drew in filling the tank of his car held the hose in his hand directing the stream into the tank. That is, the end of the hose was some inches away from the opening of the tank and did not come in contact with any metal, so that there was no conductor to take care of the frictional electricity generated. The result was a spark which ignited the vapor, causing an explosion. Mr. Drew himself said before he died that he saw a spark, and it was probably this frictional electricity spark.

ABSENCE OF THOUGHT.

We make this statement because the board has kept so very still since its birth last January that we feared many otherwise well-informed citizens would have forgotten its existence.

The members of this board may have been active even though silent the last five months but we have the feeling that they have not accomplished much. This may be doing them a grave injustice. They have only to mention it and we will gladly catalogue their achievements.

There is plenty of opportunity for a live board of this nature to do good work. The laying out of the addition to the Mt. Wollaston cemetery affords a beautiful example of what can be done by an absence of planning. Of course the Planning Board had not even donned its baby clothes when the work was started and we mention it only as an example to avoid in the future.

The new addition to the Mt. Wollaston cemetery is a barren piece of land to the north of the old cemetery, now well taken up by lots, but devoid of trees, shrubbery or any means of beautifying the land and taking away something of the checkerboard effect. The old cemetery was beautiful with its broad winding paths, mounds and vales, and large trees. The addition is not beautiful with its perfectly flat, unshaded area of green, traversed by its geometrically correct but impractically narrow paths.

We are aware that there are valid objections to trees and curbs, but we believe that the objections could have been removed at least so far as the trees were concerned. Surely the walks might have been made wide enough to walk on. A little thought in the planing would have resulted in a vastly more beautiful and useful cemetery.

It is in matters such as this that the Planning Board could be of service.

THE WAR AND FICTION.

The Great War will exert a tremendous influence upon literature, especially upon fiction, if the experience of the past can be taken as a criterion.

The pendulum always swings vigorously in literature. We have Romanticism let us say, with Wordsworth and Coleridge and Dumas and Stevenson and so forth. Lesser men follow the masters, what was romantic becomes absurd and fantastic, and the inevitable reaction sets in. Then Realism comes. We have our Thackerays and Dickenses and then, alas, our De Morgans and Arnold Bennetts.

The problem novel is a natural outgrowth of Realism because it is an attempt to make interesting what has become futile and uninteresting. Then we get the Society novel, the monstrosity which Chambers and his ilk are now perpetrating. Realism has become absurd and the pendulum is sure to swing again.

The stage in its tendency toward dressed up Melodrama is exhibiting a desire to break away from the problem play. The same tendency is shown in fiction, a desire to abandon the problem novel, which neither preaches a helpful lesson nor has the merit of being interesting, in favor of the adventure story.

People are getting tired of reading the feeble attempts of amateur George Eliots to subject characters which should be made of flesh and blood to a chemical analysis. This was not the way of Dumas, king of Romanticists, nor of Thackeray, king of Realists, nor of Shakespeare, master of both. It is making of literature the sport of pseudo scientists and psychologists, who seek to lay bare the minds of men and women rather than their hearts. Realism is literature, the present day problem novel is arm chair science. The tendency, therefore, is toward the other extreme, Romanticism.

To this tendency the Great War will give powerful impetus. There are many novels on the American Revolution, the War of 1812, and the Civil War. There are a few on the Mexican War and the Spanish War. There are, of course, thousands which caught their inspiration from the Napoleonic and other wars of history. There will be many on the Great War, which is so great that all nations of the world have heard its thunder and felt its sword.

It will be interesting to note the form which they will take. M. D'Artagnan tok horse for Belle Isle. The heroes of the Great War will take automobiles. Submarines and aeroplanes will play a powerful part in the war fiction of the next decade. More than one hero doubtless will perform deeds of valor on the occasion of the occupation of Belgium, the capture of Liege, the march on Paris and the sinking of the Lusitania. The Great War will surely deal the death blow to the Problem novel.

If Chief of Police Burrill is unable to resume his duties we trust that the city will find a way to give him the pension he deserves. We believe His Honor will not have to look far for a successor. The acting chief looks pretty good just now. As we have remarked before in this column Captain McKay apears to be very much "on the job."

Houghs Neck now has its separate parish. Cardinal O'Connell having set apart St. Frances-by-the-Sea from St. Johns. Will this give a new impetus to the wail of the Houghs Neckers for a separate township?

Rev. Mr. Ayers suggests that the Divine Power may be leading us toward war so that war may cleanse present day America of idol worshiping and heathenism.

Quincy's streets have long been notorious throughout the state but it is worthy of note that Commissioner Brown appears to be making an earnest effort to remove something of this unenviable reputation.

The famous Jesse James in Quincy? If you don't believe it see who is to be foreman of the jury at the mock trial tonight.

Although July 4, Christmas, and other holidays are most inappropriately observed, that can't be said about straw hat day.

If some newspapers are distributing unusual quantities of hot air at this juncture, it must be recalled that some one has to make up for Congress not being in session.

Many of our prominent citizens are patriotically willing to serve their country in case of war, by urging other people to enlist.

Respectable middle aged gentlemen who are always advising young men to go back to the land never satisfactorily explain why they themselves did not do so.

Apparently a man never gets to be so old that he ceases to be surprised when women's fashions change.

Baseball teams, as usual, are thundering in the index.

THE NEPONSET BRIDGE.

County Commissioner Boynton has a timely communication in a recent issue of the Brockton Times regarding the proposed Neponset bridge Suffolk and Norfolk counties want a "show" bridge over the Neponset river which means a boulevard in that section, and is asking Plymouth County to contribute 2 1-2 per cent. of the cost which would amount to about $9,000. Mr. Boynton argues that there is as little reason for asking Plymouth County to pay for any part of the $350,000 structure as there would be to ask Norfolk or Suffolk counties to help pay for any of our bridges, for residents of those counties use our roads and bridges in the summer time more than Plymouth county residents do. Being within five and one-half miles of Boston, the Norfolk county towns use this bridge continuously, it being only three and one-half miles from Quincy. The Plymouth county town nearest the bridge is Hingham, 10 miles, while some of the towns are 60 miles away. Middlesex county is not to be taxed, although it is only seven miles to the line and Barnstable and Bristol counties are left out of the cost although Taunton is as near as Middleboro. Norfolk county is only assessed twice what Plymouth county is, although the former probably uses the bridge twenty times as much. In fact, only a small portion of the automobile traffic from the Cape to Boston would use the bridge, as the best route is over the Blue Hill. On the face of it, the bill looks like an attempt to take advantage of Plymouth county, and before any Representatives from this section vote for it, it might be well to give the question considerable investigation, and "stop and think, count 20, then think again," as Mr. Boynton suggests.—Old Colony Memorial.

(Note: One correction might be made in this editorial. Quincy centre is three and a half miles from Neponset bridge but Quincy itself extends to the bridge.)

PRESIDENT WILL DEMAND RESPECT

Counter to German Reply to Be Brief and Emphatic

IS APPROVED BY CABINET

Will Call Upon Kaiser's Government to Say Whether or Not She Intends to Follow Rules Laid Down by International Law—May Mean Severance of Relations

Washington, June 2.—After discussing with the cabinet the course to be pursued by the United States with regard to further exchanges with Germany over the Lusitania outrage, President Wilson and his advisers in the state department began work on a rejoinder.

It is generally believed that the American counter to the German reply will be brief and emphatic, and that the determination of the government to protect its citizens on the high seas, whether on belligerent or neutral merchantmen, will be even more strongly made clear, than was the case in the original communication.

The note will not be dispatched to Germany, however, until after the interview which the president has accorded to Ambassador Bernstorff. The nature of the communications which Count von Bernstorff wishes to make has afforded food for considerable discussion in Washington. It is especially stated that the ambassador will have nothing new to present from his government, but that he is acting in a semi-official capacity only.

The verdict of a majority of the cabinet that the German reply to the American note following the sinking of the Lusitania was unresponsive and unsatisfactory, disregarded the good will of the United States, doubted its facts and disclaimed all blame for the destruction of the merchantmen with American lives. The questions of fact raised by Germany were regarded as irrelevant at this time.

The trend of opinion was that the United States must inquire and obtain an early reply to whether Germany intends to recognize the hitherto accepted principle that neutrals may travel anywhere on the high seas on unarmed merchant ships, even if carrying contraband, and that merchantmen which do not resist capture must be visited and searched and the passengers and crew transferred to a place of safety before the vessel is destroyed.

An unfavorable answer to this inquiry would lead, it was predicted in official quarters, to a severance of diplomatic relations on the ground that the United States could not continue intercourse with a government which repudiated these principles. Steps then would be taken to inform Americans of the dangers to which they were exposed as a result of this action and such measures as necessary adopted to safeguard the lives and intercourse of citizens of the United States.

The decision to base the American note on the principles of international law to obtain an affirmative or negative reply, and not enter into a technical discussion of details raised in the German communication which avoided the main issues, was the single development of the cabinet council.

Some of the cabinet members avored even excluding any reference to the facts asked for by Germany, settling first the point as to whether Germany intended to disregard the American warning of last February that it would insist on the exercise of the right of visit and search with respect to vessels on which Americans were traveling.

None of the reported proposals, officials conversant with the position of the government indicated, would be considered until a definite acquiescence by Germany in the fundamental principles of international law was obtained. The cabinet meeting indicated that the government did not intend to yield any of the rights which neutrals hitherto have possessed, and that it would stand firmly on the position as outlined in previous notes.

Kenneth Blake, formerly of Atlantic and now a member of the faculty of Queen's College Canada is doing some experimental work for the college in Boston, and gave a remarkable talk at the Memorial Sunday school last Sunday in the mobilizing of the Canadian troops.

He told of the many college students who had been killed in the war, and how as a citizen of the United States he had tried to hold to the neutral position of his country, even when surrounded by men who were enlisting for Britain.

Mr. Blake expects to be in Boston for some time, and will take the place he used to fill so efficiently in the Memorial choir.

BOARD OF TRADE SECURES SPEAKER

At the next meeting of the Board of Trade, Thursday, June 10th, George F. Willett will speak on the transportation question, more particularly on the line of a belt-line service connecting various railroads centering in Boston in such a way as to facilitate the transportation of freight and passengers in the shortest possible time and at the least expense.

Mr. Willett, who is a large manufacturer in Norwood, with mills in Rhode Island and New York state, is thoroughly versed in the requirements of the city and the disadvantages and unnecessary expense involved in transferring all freight and passengers with the present divided facilities.

It is the desire of the Quincy Board of Trade that there should be a large number of citizens, both to listen to Mr. Willett as they cannot fail to be both interested and profited. Full particulars as to time and place where Mr. Willett will speak will be given later.

PURITY

The ingredients of the food you eat and give your children should be pure and healthful beyond any question.

Various food officials and pure food experts have frequently endorsed Royal Baking Powder as being superior to all other similar preparations, and many of the great chemists of the world, including most of those of official position, have given like testimony.

No other article of food has ever received such emphatic commendation for purity, strength and wholesomeness, from the most eminent authorities, as Royal Baking Powder.

Because Royal Baking Powder adds only healthful qualities to the food is one of the reasons why it is always preferred by teachers of cookery and the medical profession.

ANTI SPEAKS BEFORE MOOSE

Mrs. Henry Preston White of Brookline, who spoke at the First Presbyterian church two weeks ago, addressed the Quincy lodge of Moose in Electa hall Tuesday evening and repeated her charges that feminism is allied with suffrage and that people supporting the movement are responsible for the spread of the doctrine. The speech followed the regular meeting at which arrangements were made for a delegation to attend the opening of the Moose Home in Boston on June 14.

Mrs. White, a widely-known anti-suffragist, said it is a theory of the feminist that woman cannot attain her brightest plane or highest moral development unless she can go out and make her way in the industrial world shoulder to shoulder with her husband or brother. This she declared to be retrogressive and not progressive.

Feminism is the doctrine advocated by the suffrage leaders, which holds that wifehood and motherhood blocks every forward step for woman and that home is not the best place for rearing children. It teaches that if the child is not seriously ill the nurse is as good as the mother and if the child is seriously ill the nurse is better than the mother.

The antis oppose suffrage because it prevents preserving to woman her powerful non-partisan influence which will be lost when women are divided into parties and because politics will take woman out of civic and philanthropic work.

Mrs. White spoke again of the conditions in the West where equal suffrage obtains, and said Massachusetts without the vote of the woman but through her influence, leads in remedial legislation. She spoke of only two per cent of the women exercising the right to vote on the candidates for school committee.

STAFF INSPECT LOCAL CAMP

The entire department staff of the United Spanish War Veterans inspected John A. Boyd, Camp No. 2, in Grand Army hall Tuesday evening, and during the addresses of the evening by the visitors and members it was strongly intimated that all were ready for active service if the occasion should arise.

Heading the visitors was Department Commander Frederick Foy and on the staff was Senior Vice Commander Linnahan, Junior Vice Commander Huter, Department Adjutant Hulbane, Assistant Department Adjutant Flannigan, Department Historian Barrett, Commander Barrows of Camp 30, Comrade Jones of Camp 15 of Lynn.

The question of the discontinuance of the camp suggested at a recent meeting because of the indifference of some of the members was considered and resulted in the formation of new by-laws and renewed support pledged by the members.

The Central Station Auto Chemical went out on a still alarm shortly after 9 o'clock this morning for a grass fire near the pest house on Sea street. There was no damage.

HALL PLACE M. E.

Rev. Willis H. Germany of the Hall place M. E. church concluded his sermon of last Sunday on "The Fall of Simon Peter" by preaching on "The Restoration of Simon Peter" at the morning service.

At the evening service he gave an address on "The Making of an American." Our ideals are our salvation," he declared. "The man who never dreams, nor sees visions lives a circumscribed life. Well may we get down on our knees with the blue-print of God's Word and examine the foundation of our life and see if we have a superficial foundation and should weakness be discovered apply our powers to the strengthening of the weakness.

"Should we begin today the magnificent task of making an American what would be the ingredients? He should have a worthy birth and be reared through those most important years of life from one to six by God-fearing and loving parents. He should early receive impression with spiritual worth. To him should be given the best education possible. If our public schools are to fulfill their highest duty in making an American they must recognize the fact that every child has a spiritual capacity and that capacity must be fed and nurtured as carefully as the intellectual.

"We must implant two fundamental lessons in the children. One is that the American in the making has a duty to his country and the other is that he has a duty to God. We should teach him that all men are brothers and that the greatest privilege he will ever have as an American will be to love God and help his fellow man. As an American he should be taught that mere church going will not save his soul.

"We may term his duty to his country patriotism. He should be familiar with those principles which made us free and independent. He should be inspired with the lives of our forefathers, and should know that all men are created free and equal."

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL

In connection with the Memorial Day services the church quartet rendered very effectively "God of Our Fathers" by Schnecker and "Consider the Lilies" by Topliff. Mr. McLane sang "Be Thou Faithful Unto Death" by Mendelssohn. Dr. Sneath preached upon the topic "Through Trials to Glory."

After referring to the scenes of fifty years ago he applied the motto "Per aspera ad astra" to the Christian life. "We go through rought experiences to glory" he said. "But this is but one side of the religious life. There is not only discipline but also satisfaction. This world is the best possible place in which to grow a soul, to develop a life which is to be eternal. While we do have discipline we also may have 'cheer' as the Master has declared. And there is a reward. 'Eternal Life' is promised to all who are faithful unto death.

At the Sunday school the day was observed in a patriotic manner. The room was decorated with flags, selections were given by the young people and patriotic songs were sung.

On Thursday evening at the Mid-week service the pastor will speak upon the topic "The Christian Walk." Ephesians 5:2, 8, 15.

The young people will carry out a unique suggestion this week for the benefit of the Parish House Fund. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday mornings they will serve box luncheons at the trains leaving the Wollaston station between 7 and 8.30 A. M. They are promised to be "dainty and delicious."

The last Vesper service of the season will be held on next Sunday. It will be a "Messiah" service, the selections being taken from Handel's oratorio.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

The theme of the morning was in keeping with Memorial day. The subject: The National Beatitudes" seemed most fitting. Text: Psalm 33: 12. Blessed is the Nation whose God is the Lord.

"The probability is the nation referred to in the text is the Israelitish or Jewish Nation. But the words are especially appropriate for the 30th of May. On that day we memorialize the men who in the Civil War fought for freedom and the preservation of the Union. It is well that we do this first for the sake of the men who thus fought and second for the sake of the Nation. Let us not however be too narrow in our sphere of praise. Let us remember the living as well as the dead, the women as well as the men, the common soldier as well as the great general, the civilian as well as the man of battle, the foe as well as the friend."

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

The annual Wollaston County Fair is to be held as usual in September and now is the time to plant. Everybody is invited to make this year's fair the best yet.

Rev. Carl G. Horst Sunday preached in the Second Unitarian church at Athol, Mass., of which he was pastor at one time.

Children's Sunday will be observed June 20. The minister will be glad to receive the names of children who are to be baptized on that day.

The Wayside Preacher this week has a fine message from our gifted poet and fellow citizen Charles L. H. Wagner of 141 South Central avenue.

A musical and literary evening will be held in the parish hall. Saturday at 8 p. m. The general subject is "War and Peace" and Mrs. J. Malcolm Forbes of Milton will make the opening remarks on this subject. The Fuller sisters, three charming English girls, dressed in quaint old-fashioned costumes will sing English and Scotch ballads to the accompaniment of a harp. A stirring play called "The Vanguard" will also be read. All seats free and the public is cordially invited.

The annual Field day of the Boston Federation of Young People's Religious Unions will be held at Houghton's pond, Saturday afternoon.

The summer meeting of the Norfolk conference of Unitarian churches will be held Wednesday, June 9, at First Parish church, Walpole, Mass. Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson of Quincy will give an address on "Christian Citizenship" in the morning and Rev. Harold G. Arnold of West Roxbury one on "A Liberal Loyalty" in the afternoon.

WOLLASTON M. E.

Rev. George M. Bailey of the Wollaston Methodist Episcopal church took as his Sunday morning theme, "The Rowers." Mr. Bailey spoke of the building of the great city of Tyre as being one of man's achievements minus God and like all other works which do not have God in them it lasted but for a time and then disappeared. It was said of Tyre, "Thy rowers have brought me into great waters."

"We are only a little more than three hundred years away from Jamestown but truly our rowers have brought us into great waters," said the speaker. "Our resources are almost boundless and we are great in many lines but greater than all other lines is our ideal and idea of God. We are a foe to oppression and tolerant to the sincere, we have no despot but think for ourselves.

"Our Pilgrim fathers were men who had been spoken to by God, hence they were men of conviction. Men such as John Dickinson, Samuel Adams, John Adams and Robert Morris were our rowers. Integrity was their hope and standard. May it be ours also."

The quartette sang "Go Forward Christian Soldiers" by Volks. Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook sang "Face to Face" by Johnson and Allan Painten sang "Thy Will Be Done."

Woman's World

DR. ANNA HOWARD SHAW.

The National American Woman Suffrage association has flooded the Panama-Pacific exposition with a silent argument for woman suffrage. This argument is nothing less than a modest little button which is appearing, almost overnight, as it were, upon the arm of thousands of women in attendance upon the exposition. The button reads merely, "I'm a Voter."

The idea is, of course, to make the visitors from the conservative eastern states realize, through visual aid, that there are thousands and thousands of well groomed, happy, sensible looking women who actually vote, and the National association has seized upon the Panama-Pacific exposition as the best possible place in which to demonstrate the truth of their contention. These buttons are being sent to women through the state suffrage organizations with which most of them are still affiliated. Several million have been turned out, it is said, for this novel demonstration.

The idea was conceived by Miss Jeannette Rankin of Montana, now a member of the congressional committee of the N. A. W. S. A., and was promptly seized upon by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the association.

"Miss Rankin can wear the button," said Dr. Shaw at the national headquarters in New York, "thanks to the men of Montana, but I can't wear it until the men of Pennsylvania give me the right next November. But I have saved a button in the hope that the men of Pennsylvania will be as just and as sensible as the western men, who have enfranchised 10,000,000 women and seem to be glad of it."

The "Hello" Microbes.

Many a woman housed by a cold amuses herself and attends to necessary business over the telephone. But when all the rest of the family come down with like colds she wonders how they caught it, because she has "not kissed anybody."

Nobody thinks of the mouthpiece of the telephone, and yet where is there a more convenient harbor than that for germs breathed into it from throat and nose?

The average household does not even think of dusting out the transmitter, and it is cleaned only upon the occasional visits of the repair man from the telephone company. As a matter of fact, it should be washed out frequently with a disinfectant. Even the ear piece is benefited by an occasional "wipe," as it rests against the hair and ear of everybody in the house, to say nothing of visiting workmen who want to call up headquarters.

When You Clean Up.

Save fine towels that are too worn for further use and lay them in the bottom of the drawers, with lavender between the folds.

While the clothes on the line are airing, pack flannels, furs, feathers, etc., in mothproof paper bags or boxes to be stored away in the attic, and before the dew falls at night return cotton and other fabrics required for summer use to the drawers and wardrobes that have been cleansed and aired.

Destroy with a hard heart every useless thing and burn everything that you see no probability of needing in the near future. With the best of care odds and ends will accumulate, and the labor of handling and preserving them in the hope of finding use for them by and by is often more than they are worth.

Three Sewing Hints.

In sewing in hot weather use an emery "strawberry" frequently. Passing the needle in and out through it removes moisture, all danger of rust and insures much easier manipulation. Never allow a needle to squeak.

Wax the thread thoroughly before attempting to string beads or to sew them on any material. This makes the work easier as well as stronger, and the thread or sewing silk will never knot.

Instead of binding or felling seams on lingerie, use narrow lace insertion, one piece on each side of the raw edges. Stitch on both sides with the sewing machine. Lace braids, also the bought ready made lawn folds, are admirable for the purpose and are easy of manipulation.

FATHER DUFFY BIDS FAREWELL

There was hardly a dry eye among the large number who were present Tuesday evening at the meeting of the St. Mary's sodality in St. Mary's church. The occasion was the final sermon by the director of the sodality Rev. William J. Duffy, who was on Tuesday transferred to Watertown.

Since Father Duffy took charge of the sodality he has worked hard and faithfully and endeared himself to each and every member of the society. The pastor, Rev. Father McCoy announced the transfer to the congregation after which Father Duffy spoke a few parting words to them. The services were closed with Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. After the services almost every person in the congrgation went into the vestry to bid him farewell.

Father Duffy will assume his new duties in Watertown Thursday. During his service in Quincy he had charge in addition to the sodality of the Sunday school and of the Altar boys connected with the church. His leaving is universally regretted in West Quincy by all creeds as his pleasing personality endeared him to all who knew him.

GRIDLEYS AND FIELDS WIN

Still Tied For First Place In League

RESULTS LAST NIGHT.

Gridley 7, Quincy 0.
Fields 10, Coddington 0.
Hancock 17, Cranch 2.

The Massachusetts Fields and Gridleys won Tuesday evening and continued the tie for first place in the National league. The playoff will be Friday night. Two changes have been made in the schedule since Tuesday. Montclair and Cranch will play Thursday instead of Wednesday and Wollaston and Montclair will play Wednesday instead of Thursday. The Coddington and Willard game has been postponed to Friday evening.

The slowness of the Gridleys in getting the measure of Sullivan, the new Quincy pitcher, is taken as an indication that they are commencing to feel the strain, and many feel that the Fields will take Friday's game.

GRIDLEYS WIN.

Sullivan, a new pitcher for Quincy, allowed the Gridleys but one run in three innings Tuesday evening, but better acquaintance with his delivery resulted in six runs the fourth and fifth inning. The young man did exceptionally well for a debut performance. The game was an ordinary one outside of the close fielding by the Gridleys, which held Quincy scoreless.

The score:

Gridley	0 0 1 2 4 x—7

Batteries—Crowley and Carella; Sullivan and Pratt.

HAVE WALKOVER

Massachusetts Fields had a walkover Tuesday afternoon, beating the Coddingtons 10 to 0. Foster Ganzel pitched a no-hit no-run game. Good singles, coupled with two doubles helped the Fielders get their runs. Trumbull was wild and poorly supported. The score:

Batteries Ganzel and Morris: Deacon and Trumbull.

ATHERTONS LOSE.

The Wollaston beat the Atherton Hough 4 to 2 Tuesday afternoon. The pitching of Brown who got nine strikeouts, held the game in hand. O'Brien fanned seven men. The score:

Wollaston	0 0 0 3 1 0—4

Batteries—Brown and Stewart; O'Brien and Piper.

DECISIVE VICTORY.

Hancocks defeat of the Cranch by a score of 17 to 2 Tuesday was the most decisive of the year. The Cranch had an interchangeable battery but the slugfest did not abate. Broberg started the game and was relieved by Moyle who finished the inning and twirled in the second and third. Olson who caught then went into the box in the fourth inning and Broberg caught him.

The score:

Cranch	0 2 0 0 0 0— 2

Batteries—Dahlberg and McKenzie; Broberg, Moyle, Olson.

CUBS WIN.

The Cubs strengthened their lead in the Twilight league, Tuesday evening, by defeating the Blue Hills, their nearest contenders for the lead, by the score of 12 to 7. The feature of the game was the twirling of Desmond who though being hit for seven runs in the first two innings settled down and shut the Blues out the remaining four. The score by innings.

FRANK HEARING IS BROUGHT TO AN END

Commission's Recommendation to Go Before Governor

Atlanta, June 2.—Hearing of Leo M. Frank's application for commutation of his death sentence to life imprisonment was completed here before the state prison commission. The commission's recommendation probably will be transmitted within the next ten days to the governor, who will take final action on the appeal. No opposition to the application was presented.

Principal features of the proceedings consisted of a letter written a few months before his death by Judge Roan, who presided at Frank's trial, in which he sought clemency for the prisoner; and a statement by Mrs. Frank describing her husband's actions on the night after Mary Phagan's murder and denying rumors of an estrangement between herself and Frank.

Result of Attempt to Injure Big Guns In Puget Sound Forts

Port Townsend, Wash., June 2.—An attempt to put out of commission the big guns at Fort Worden and Fort Flagler, guarding the entrance to Puget sound, was made several days ago, has become known, and as a result all visitors have been barred from the forts in this district. It is reported that breech blocks of four guns were removed and the loading mechanism damaged.

The discovery followed a report that Fort Worden had been photographed in detail by persons who had surreptitiously entered the grounds. The photographs gave the relative locations of the big guns and the hidden batteries.

WARNING TO BE SENT TO MEXICO

To Demand Cessation of of Military Devastation

CONDITIONS INTOLERABLE

Communication to All Factions That Unless They Compose Situation Themselves United States Will Bring About a Stable Government Even If It Means Intervention

Washington, June 2.—President Wilson and his cabinet adopted a new policy to be pursued by the United States toward Mexico. It has for its object restoration of order and the relief of millions of non-combatants from the devastations of Mexic's military elements, which have brought about conditions regarded as intolerable.

The president read to the cabinet a statement which is to be communicated to the leaders of all Mexican factions, serving notice that unless they, themselves, compose the situation, some other means will be found by the United States to bring about the establishment of a stable government in the republic. The statement was approved after prolonged discussion.

The specific course the United States will pursue in the event the contending factions fail to agree is not outlined in the president's statement, but the administration's present purpose is to give moral support to a coalition of the best elements in Mexico and accord the goverment thereby created formal recognition. With such recognition would come an embargo on arms, permitting the constituted government to receive munitions of war to the exclusion of all other elements and factions.

That the government's policy, it unsuccessful in this course, might require intervention ultimately, has been considered and the intention to insist on a settlement has not been swayed by the possible necessity of such action.

The administration's policy is the culmination of several weeks of conferences between the president and his official family. The return of Du Val West, who spent three months personally investigating conditions in Mexico for the president, was the deciding factor. He brought back reports showing that the food situation was serious; that the country crops had failed and industries were exhausted; that the soil had not been tilled for lack of cattle, which had been slaughtered or exported for revenue, and that a terrible condition of affairs for the large masses of innocent non-combatants ahead unless remedial measures were undertaken.

WALSH SENDS VETOES

Objects to New Haven Validation and Railroad Mortgage Bills

Boston, June 2.—Vetocs of the New Haven validation measure and of the railroad bond issue bill, two of the important railroad matters before the legislature, were sent to the senate by Governor Walsh. Prior to the reading of the messages the governor conferred with President Coolidge and Speaker Cox, in an attempt to agree on a policy of precedure.

One of the chief objections to the validation bill is that it is unattended by the resolve which the public service commission wanted and which would serve to safeguard the public interests, and further that it is presumed to give the railroad the full benefit from the "unearned increment' that may come from the physical valuation of the road by the interstate commerce commission.

The so-called bond issue bill, which has become known also as the mortgage bill because of its authorization of a mortgage on the railroad, is general in its character, applying to all railroads, and is found to be objectionable because of its departure from the "uniform legisaition" that was advocated in this state and adopted in Connecticut in conformity with the public service commission's recommendation.

GORITZ FORT IS POUNDED DOWN

Italians Make Breach In Defense of Trieste

GRADISCA IS BOMBARDED

Between Fire of Two Hostile Armies and Inhabitants and Austrian Infantry Obliged to Leave—Rejoicing In Rome Over Result of Air Raid of Pola—Russians Reported Exerting Great Pressure Along San River and Are Being Heavily Reinforced —Zeppelin Raid Over London Causes Loss of Four Lives

London, June 2.—The Italian artillery has destroyed one of the forts in the ring of outer defences at Goritz, the town which is the key to the Austrian position covering Trieste, the seaport on the Adriatic which Italy so ardently covets. Goritz is about sixteen miles north of Trieste.

Gradisca, which is north of Goritz, is between the two hostile armies, and is being bombarded by the artillery of both the Austrians and Italians. The inhabitants and the Austrian infantry who were guarding the town have been obliged to leave, so deadly is the fire of the heavy guns.

On the eastern front Italian artillery from the direction of Pontebba and Pontafele is bombarding the Austrian position at Malborghetto, which commands the important railway junction at Tarvis, on the Undine-Villach line.

Along the southernmost line of attack, in the direction of Monfalcone, the Italian infantry is now attacking. This forms the fourth line of attack, corresponding roughly to Napoleon's strategy in the same region.

The troops which occupied these towns constitute the Italian army which is invading the province of Trent from the west, simultaneously with invasions from the south and east. The town of Cortina, occupied by the Italians Saturday, is thirty miles southwest of Trieste.

Exultation is general in Rome over the Italian air raid on Pola and the amount of damage done, as Pola is the greatest military port of Austria, is the centre of the railways of Istria and has great natural defenses and fortifications. The fact that an Italian airship was able to damage the arsenal, the railway station and other structures is taken as proof that the Austrian fleet, now at that port, is not entirely safe.

Russian Success In Galicia

It is apparent that fighting is still proceeding along the San river, in the vicinity of Permysl. This is the extent of the information given out by Vienna, which contents itself with the bare mention of the fact, but says nothing either in confirmation or denial of the reported Russian success at this point.

The heavy reinforcement which have been coming to the support of the closely pressed Russians in middle Galicia apparently are making themselves felt, as the latest reports from the Russian war office declare that the battle on the San river is developing in favor of the Russian troops.

The fortress of Permysl, now held by the Russians, has been the object of an Austro-German enveloping movement for some weeks past, and against the completion of the circle the Russian commanders have been striving. A strong offensive has been undertaken by the Russians on various fronts, and in the Dniester region they report the capture of 7000 prisoners, and nearly 19,000 between the Filica river and the upper Vistula in the period from May 12 to May 24.

Zeppelin Raid Over London

In the Zeppelin raid over London ninety bombs were dropped. Four persons were killed and others were injured. Official announcement was made that no public buildings were damaged. Zeppelin airships have been long expected in London, but the several million inhabitants of the metropolis slept peacefully through the raid, and all they know is what was contained in the admiralty's brief announcement that the raiders flew over certain outlying sections of the city.

The first official announcement made mention of numerous fires which may or may not have been connected with the raid.

British Submarine Active

Transportation of Turkish reinforcements to the Dardanelles from Constaatinople is said to have been interrupted by the operations of a British submarine which is cruising in front of the city. It is reported unofficially that the Turkish cruiser Sultan Selim, formerly the German cruiser Goeben, has been virtually dismantled. Official statements from Constantinople and Paris indicate that the fighting on Gallipoli peninsula has settled down to the trench warfare familiar in other fields of the war.

Only small engagements in limited areas are shown. The Turks claim to have repulsed several attacks, but the French statement asserts that the allies are making gains daily. According to a dispatch received from Athens, there is a party in the Turkish capital which is demanding the opening of the straits and immediate peace overtures.

French Troops Make Gains

The French war office gave out a report on the progress of hostilities, which reads as follows:

"Violent fighting took place last night in the region to the north of Arras.

To the east of the road from Aix-Noulette to Souchez were made our way into a grove, and here there developed a hand to hand fight in which we had the advantage.

"On the plateau to the east of Notre Dame de Lorette we took possession of a German work.

"A very violent fight developed around the sugar mill at Souchez, in the course of which we took about sixty prisoners.

"In the Vosges, near Fontenelle, north of St. Die, during the night of May 30-31, a German attack in which two companies participated, was repulsed by us with heavy losses for the enemy.

"On the Yser front, there has been an artillery engagement. In the region to the north of Arras, we have made new progress.

"On the road from Souchez to Carency, we have taken possession of the Malon mill and the German trenches which extended from the mill to the sugar refinery at Souchez. We made about fifty prisoners.

"In the region of the 'Labyrinth,' after having repulsed a German counter-attack last night, we organized the positions gained.

"On the outskirts of Le Pretre forest, there has been only an artillery action. In the course of the engagements on May 30, we took two machine guns."

A dispatch to the London Times from Mytilene, says:

"An enemy submarine shelter has been discovered in the vicinity of Avali, on the west coast of Asia Minor, to which place British warships proceeded. Sixty shots have since been heard coming from that vicinity leading to the belief that useful work has been accomplished."

The secretary of the admiralty made official announcement that all the officers of the British battleship Majestic, sunk May 27 off Gallipoli peninsula by a submarine, had been saved.

LOSE MANY SHIPS

Aggregate Tonnage of British Vessels Sunk by Germans Reaches 471,591

A British admiralty statement giving the number of British merchant and fishing vessels sunk since the beginning of the war shows that fifty-six merchant ships have been sent to the bottom by cruisers of the enemy, twelve by mines, and sixty-two by submarines—a total of 139.

Eighty three fishing craft have been lost, and of these twenty-four were sunk by mines. Since German submarines began their attack on merchant shipping Jan. 27, the merchant marine sunk number thirty-nine and the fishing craft thirty-one.

Looking at these losses from the standpoint of tonnage, it is seen that since the war began Great Britain has lost 458,006 tons in merchant shipping and 13,585 tons in fishing craft.

How Movie Operators Repair Films.

The next time you are watching a motion picture in any theatre, and the light flickers, the screen becomes blank, stop a moment and think before you give vent to your displeasure it is not the operator's fault, neither is it the fault of the film agency, and do not say it is an old film.

Every foot of film is tested in the morning by the operator when the films arrive but in many cases a slight imperfecion in the reel melts before the intense heat, and the film snaps. The operator stripped to the waist and working in a temperature of over 100 degrees for your pleasure, has to stop the machine, take the film from the rollers, and glue the two parts together. The two pieces must be perfectly matched so that the next time the film is run there will be no sudden breaks in the picture. This work seldom takes over thirty seconds.

The audience, comfortabley seated in a well ventilated theatre, never thinks of the sweltering operator, who is working as hard as he can to repair the damage, and is often impatient.

BELIEVE GERMANY IS ABOUT READY TO YIELD

Ambassador Bernsdorf Confers With President

John Edwin Nevins.

(United Press Correspondent.)

Washington, June 2—President Wilson saw German Ambassador Von Bernsdorf today. The two had a 20 minutes talk at the White House. Two minutes before on Bernsdorf left Italian Ambassador Cellere arrived to see the president. Considering the relations between their respective countries it would have been little short of a diplomatic tragedy had the German and Italian met. Attendants were forced to do some lively manouvering to get Von Bernsdorf out by one door while Cellere entered by another.

No statement was issued from the White House concerning the nature of Von Bernsdorf's talk. Secret service agents prevented anyone from getting very close to the German diplomat as he took his departure.

Neverthless the question was put up to him as to a statement. He shook his head in answer.

It is believed however he told the President that Germany stands ready to do all that is required of her in the way of reparation wherever it is shown she has infringed on American i sues; that there must be an understanding between the two nations as to the conduct of neutral and unarmed vessels and that based on such an understanding they can be fully protected in keeping with the terms o the Huage convention; that in the case of the Lusitania Germany ha reason to believe the soundness o her contentions with regard to tha vessel's alleged defiance with the rules of international warfare an the violation of an American statut concerning the carrying of explosive but that they shall present no insurmountable obstacles, providing a clea understanding can be reached on th principles involved.

Of the effect of his representation on the president there is as yet n means of judging but guesses on thi point were all much alike.

The President it is believed migh be led if his visitors remarks pre sented to his mind any idea for mak ing acquiesance easier to adopt then for use in connection with his firs communication to Berlin.

THOMAS SHEEHAN PASSES AWAY

Thomas Sheehan, one of the best known residents of West Quincy, passed away at his home on Crescent street at 5.30 this morning after a lingering illness. eH is survived by his wife and son William, a student at Boston College High school.

Thomas Sheehan, was born in Ireland and came here in his 19th year. He learned the trade of stone cutting. About three years ago his health commenced to fail. He went West for a year in hopes of recovering and returned some months ago. He was a member of Div. 4, A. O. H., and the Holy Name Society of St. Mary's parish.

Our Laugh Column

VERY APPLICABLE.

"What!" exclaimed the teacher, "does no-one know? What animal has bristly hair, is dirty all the time and loves getting into the mud?"

A small boy raised a timid hand.

"Well, Allan," said the teacher, "tell us what it is."

"Please, ma'am," said the little boy, reflectively, "it's me."—Chicago American.

A MARVELOUS FEAT.

Mother (cooking)—Phew! That's a bad egg.

Willie—Why don't you make it good?

Mother—I can't make a bad egg good, my son.

Willie—Why, I heard the grocer tell you if you found any bad ones he'd make 'em good, and if he can, why can't you?—Boston Transcript.

COSTLY ADVICE.

"What can I use to clean carpets?" asked a correspondent, who signed herself, rather bashfully, "Young Bride."

"Have you tried your young husband?" replied the answers Editor, who lost his position just a few hours after the reply appeared.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

JUST ANGER.

"I've come to kill a printer," said the little man.

"Any printer in particular?" asked the foreman.

"Oh, any one will do. I would prefer a small one, but I've got to make some sort of a show at a fight, or leave home, since the paper called my wife's tea party a 'swill affair.'"—New York American.

HUMORISTS IN SCHOOL.

There is more humor in the school room than in the press or theatr someone has said. A slight exaggera tion, maybe, but the humor of the school room is usually exceptional i it character; "for from the school room," as one writer has put it, "as from the nursery, humor comes pur and undefiled; it droppeth like a gen tle dew from heaven, untouched by artificiality, unmarred by strain o stress."

The Tennessee youth who des cribed a volcano as "a mountain wher the world busts through," and th crater as "the place where it spit out," had his facts, though he clothe them in somewhat unusual terms There was picturesquesness, too, i the small small boy's description of natural museum as "a dead circus. And joy was brought to the heart o Mark Twain by the sentence "There's a great many donkeys i theological gardens."

Sometimes, of course, the pupil wi come to grief, especially in case when one is asked to define a wor and then use it. One attempt ra thus, "Despot—a ruler that is feared Me teacher swatted me wid he despot."

Could the most uncompromising re alist have done more than the young ster, whose teacher had forbidden him in writing a composition to attemp fights of fancy, telling him to simpl be himself and write what was in him "We should not attempt flites of fanc but rite what is in us," wrote the boy "In me there is my stumick, lungs hart, liver, two apples, one piece o pie, one stick of lemon candy and m dinner."

"You should always be clean in you person," wrote one boy, upon the sub ject of personal hygiene, "especially on gymnasium days, because if yo broke your leg or anything you would n't want your family disgraced al over the town by an unclean skin."

A fat boy, whose teacher gave him an unwise opening by saying, "You seem to be better fed than taught," retorted quickly, "Yes, sir; but, you see, I feeds myself." But far more unkind, even if unconsciously so, was the small boy who was asked to correct the sentence, "Our teacher am in sight," and who insisted that it should be "Our teacher am a sight."—Tit Bits.

FUNERAL PRIVATE.

John Clark permitted a woman to faint in his arms at the Iron Mountain station at Little Rock last week, and lost his watch and chain during the operation. We're safe in saying the next woman that faints in Clark's vicinity will drop the entire distance. —Malvern Meteor.

Hundreds of townspeople paid tribute to the heroes of the Civil War, by attending the usual Memorial Day exercises held Monday morning at the town hall and cemetery. The customary formal service was held at 10 o'clock. As seventeen of the surviving nineteen veterans marched onto the platform the audience arose and greeted them with remarkable applause.

The opening address was given by Nathaniel S. Barry, commander of Huntington F. Wolcott post 102 G. A. R. The reading of the orders received from headquarters and the obituary report was made by Adjutant Grangman. A remarkable part of the obituary report was that no veteran had passed away during the last year.

The Forest male quartet rendered, Still, Still, with Thee." A ritual service was then held under the direction of the officers of the post The quartet responded. Lincoln's Gettysburg address was delivered in a very able manner by Peter Joseph Barry, of the Belcher Grammar school The quartet sang: "American Hymn."

Services were held at the soldiers' grave and at the grave of Col. Peabody. After a firing of the guns, taps were sounded and the various organizations returned to the town hall, where luncheon was served by the W. R. C. assisted by the Boy Scouts.

Officer James Travers of the Milton police force is certainly due compliments for the manner in which he handled the enormous automobile traffic which was carried on through East Milton square over Sunday and the holiday. At one time Monday 1,500 autos passed by in one hour. The only accident which occurred was a very slight one and resulted in no one being injured.

The Cunningham Gym second team defeated the first team Saturday afternoon 10-7 in a very interesting game of ball. "Rookie" Chamberlain, the first string pitcher, was forced to abandon the box in the third inning. His brother, Jim, took his place and did some effective work although he did not win his game. The Yannigans were the first to score and at the end of the seventh the score was 7-7. In the ninth the "subs" came back strong at the bat and tallied the three winning runs. "Bart" Duggan featured in the hitting making four safe singles. Brierley took the biggest end of the scoring, making four of the ten runs. Two sensational catches of "Stan" Hern, brought forth loud applause from the spectators. In the second inning, "Hod" Woods banged out a hit which looked good for a homer, but "Stan," who, was stationed in left field, ran at full speed and in catching the ball fell over the banking which borders the skating pond. Nevertheless he held fast to the ball. The score was:

MAY FORM COMPANY HERE

The War Department has suggested that two additional coast artillery companies be formed in Massachusetts to cover new batteries at Fort Revere and Fort Standish and if it meets with the approval of Gov. Walsh it is likely that one of the two new companies will be formed in Quincy.

The Coast Artillery at present consists of 12 companies. Six are located in Boston and one each in Cambridge, Chesea, Brockton, New Bedford, Fall River and Taunton.

Caleb West of the electrical department of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, first lieutenant on the staff of Col. Fullerton, chief of the Coast Artillery Corps of Boston's harbor defense, has been detailed to investigate places on the South Shore where such a company could be placed

Lieut. West stated this morning that the company will consist of 75 men. The personnel has to conform to army regulations and men must be of high character and capable and willing to offer their services from purely patriotic reasons.

Judge Hayseede Presides At Hearing of Chicken Case

H. HENPECK DEFENDANT

Tried and lost the famous chicken case No. 100,000, Ladies Aid Society of the Hall place M. E. church vs. Henry Henpeck charged with the larceny of one chicken on the evening of January 26th. Counsel for the plaintiff, I. Will Soakem, Esq. Counsel for defendent, Sumner Webster Wyndye, Esq. Judge Hiram Hayseede presided.

The jurors were all well known characters, prominent among them being Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, Mrs. David I. Walsh, Miss Billie Burke.

After some difficulty in seating the lady jurors to the entire satisfaction of the gentlemen the jurors were duly sworn in to do about as they pleased.

The indictment sets forth that upon the evening of Jan. 26, Henry Henpeck of the State of Matrimony, did wilfully and with malice aforethought make away with a chicken named Daisy White. The following witnesses appeared for the plaintiff: Mrs. I. M. A. Scribbler, Mrs. Rev. R. U. Penitent, G. W. T. J. J. Q. A. A. L. Johnson, and the following witnesses for the defendent: Prof. Solomon Aristotle Puffer, Mrs. John Jones, Mr. I. B. Sweeney. They were all duly sworn in to tell the truth "when they couldn't get out of it."

Mrs. I. M. A. Scribbler was the first witness called. She gave a rather lengthy catalogue of the things embodied in her so-called occupation, one being "keeping her husband good-natured." Her testimony consisted of reading parts of the records of the Ladies Aid society leading up to the subject of the stealing of the said Daisy White, (when she wasn't explaining the why's and wherefore's of everything else).

The Grenwood Shoe Lace Co., which recently filled a large order for Great Britain, is shipping 20,000 leather lacings to France, believed to be destined for use in army boots. The order, it is understood is a sample one and if satisfactory a much larger one may be secured.

Representatives of the several warring nations have written the firm and it is thought that another country may soon give the Quincy concern an order. An unusual order completed some months ago at the factory of the Tubular Rivet and Stud Co. at Wollaston is understood to have been shipped.

JUDGE FINDS THAT WM. A. COFFIN WAS CHOKED TO DEATH IN INSANE HOSPITAL AT TAUNTON

Inquest Finding, Filed Today, Fails To Identify Individual Who Caused Death of Quincy Man Last April

That William A. Coffin of Quincy was choked and brutally assaulted in the Taunton Insane Hospital and that death was caused by multiple injuries received at that institution and not at the Quincy police station is the finding of Judge Frederick E. Austin of the First Bristol district court in his report of the inquest which is to be filed today. The judge points out that the inquest failed to reveal the identity of the criminal.

The finding states that William A. Coffin of Quincy was committed to the hospital, on account of his mental condition, late in the afternoon of April 17. A preliminary examination was made by Dr. A. G. Provost of the institution, and probably because he was restless attendants were with him night and day from that time until his death. Nothing alarming was observed until 7.30 P. M., April 19. No report was made to any physician at that time.

About three o'clock Tuesday morning Dr. E. J. Clifford found the man in a serious condition and at a conference at which Medical Examiner Atwood was present several fractured ribs were found.

The autopsy revealed deep bruises on both sides of his throat as if he had been choked. The hyoid bone in the neck was broken, five ribs on the right side and ten on the left were fractured and the bladder was ruptured.

"I find," said Judge Austin, "that these injuries and others of a minor nature with a hemorrhage and shock resulting therefrom caused his death. Mr. Coffin when in the police station at Quincy, while attempting to get into a berth three or four feet from the floor is said to have fallen. It is impossible that he received the injuries from that cause.

"It would be impossible to have the injuries at the time of his admission to the hospital and they not be apparent to some extent even upon the most casual examination. His injured condition could not have existed without being discovered from the time of his entry to the hospital up to Monday evening unless, there had been gross carelessness and inattention on the part of those having him in charge.

"From these and other reasons I find that he was injured while in the hospital. All the evidence shows that he was not an aggressive or violent patient. He never required more than a slight restraint. Two supervisors, seven day nurses, and two male night attendants had to do with him to a greater or less extent. He was never alone. Yet under these circumstances I find that he was choked and brutally assaulted. I am obliged as in a similar case to find that the deceased came to his death by the unlawful force of some person or persons unknown to me."

It is believed that the district attorney of Bristol County will proceed to make a thorough investigation of the case in an attempt to fix the responsibility. An arrest within a short time would not be unexpected.

OPPOSITION TO JITNEY BUSSES

Regular Carriage Men Complain Bitterly

The regular public carriage men at the Quincy, Wollaston and Atlantic stations are complaining bitterly because the City Council is granting so many hackney carriage licenses this year. Since the coming into being of what is known as the jitney bus, many people who own automobiles are rushing with petitions to the city council asking to be granted hackney carriage licenses, and up to the present time, so the the regular men claim, anybody who makes application for such a license has it granted without question.

At the Quincy depot there are two regular lines of public carriages. The proprietors claim that they have sufficient cars and are fully able to fill all wants so far as public carriages are concerned. They are connected by telephone and are ready at all hours of the day or night to supply automobiles to the public.

What they particularly complain of is that in many cases people who own five passenger runabouts are employed all day at their regular occupation and in the evening, not satisfied with their own business, they try to take away business from the concerns regularly engaged in this line of business.

It is claimed that some of these men after working at their regular occupation all day, take their cars out after supper and with a sign reading "Public Carriage" stand about the Quincy depot and City square, seeking to pick up a few dollars that would otherwise go to the regular men in this line of business. Some of them, it is also claimed, can be found at the Quincy and other depots until after the arrival of the last train from Boston.

Up to the present time, according to the records in the city clerk's office, the city council has granted licenses for 29 hackney carriages, at $1 per carriage which is largely in excess of the number actually required. If the city council should put these hackney carriage or jitney bus men under heavy bonds as they are doing in some cities it is claimed the number would be greatly reduced. In addition to the number of such licenses already granted, the City Council calendar shows that there are half a dozen more pending, some of which are by out of town people who desire to do business in the jitney bus line in Quincy.

COMPLIMENT TRAFFIC POLICE

The following letter complimenting the members of the police department will be read at roll call tonight:

Capt. Daniel R. McKay,
Acting Chief of Police,
Quincy, Mass.

Dear Sir:—

At the meeting of the Mayor's club held in Springfield yesterday, the mayors of two cities of our Commonwealth took occasion to compliment your Mayor on the efficient handling of traffic by the traffic police squad of our city on Saturday, Sunday and Monday last. On these days the gentlemen referred to had occasion to pass through our city on their way to and from the South Shore, and they were impressed with the efficiency displayed in handling the problem.

Nothing has happened since I took office that gave me more pleasure and a feeling that your department is honestly co-operating with me in making Quincy a good place to live in, and I request that you read this letter at roll call and extend to the officers and men my appreciation of their work.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Chester I. Campbell.

THAYER MARRIES WEYMOUTH GIRL

LET US BE REASONABLE.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Van Allen, rector of the Church of the Advent, the other day is reported to have thundered from his pulpit upon the German reply to the American note. The report of the sermon goes on to say that the minister declared that the German note calls the United States Government "a liar and a fool." He asserted the report reads, that the Kaiser is insane, and with him the German people, and he rebuked the Pacificists for their attitude.

This is surely a temperate attitude from the pulpit and one calculated to make the President's task much easier.

The Transcript of Tuesday in an editorial entitled "Give Germany an Ultimatum," says among other things. "The President declared after adequate investigation of the facts that the Lusitania was an unarmed vessel."

The German Government retorts with an attempted justification of the singing of that ship on the ground that the Lusitania was in reality armed. This is only saying in diplomatic language that the President and the Collector of the Port of New York have misrepresented the afcts."

We are morec to remark that it is exceedingly fortunate for the United States of America that neither Dr. Van Allen nor the editorial writer of the Transcript are heading the government. It might be well to remind them that they are not doing so.

Despite what Dr. Van Allen and the editorial writer just quoted have said on the subject we obstinately cling to our attitude as expressed in this column Tuesday. At that time we said:

"Of course it is not unlikely that Germany is sparring for time, is delaying her final reply to save her face. It is possible, however, that she believes her version of the facts to be the correct version. It is even possible that her version is the correct one. At all events, it seems as if the United States could allow reasonable time for the ascertaining of the facts without relaxing the firmness of her attitude or permitting unnecessary disturbance."

"Upon the question of whether Germany shall be compelled to give assurances of the safety of neutrals there can be no dispute. Germany should be compelled to do so in no uncertain language. But the Lusitania tragedy should not be permitted to intrude unduly into the negotiations.

Germany should be held to a strict accountability in regard to the sinking of the Lusitania—if she is guilty. The evidence points to guilt, but the defendant has at least a right to be heard. Let Germany have a reasonable time to produce her proofs that the Lusitania was an armed vessel. If she cannot produce them let the United States deliver an emphatic ultimatum. But let us not plunge into war if there is a bare possibility that Germany is laboring under a mistake which she might rectify if the facts were clearly presented. If Germany sincerely believes that the Lusitania was an armed vessel it is perfect nonsense for the Transcript and Dr. Van Allen to talk about the United States and the President being called "a liar and a fool."

NOT FAIR PLAY.

Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the Industrial Relations Commission, a few days ago is reported to have issued a statement to the effect that the commission "has proved the absolute responsibility of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., himself for everything that happened in Colorado."

That is precisely the statement which would be expected from a man who presided at the recent hearing in the obviously partisan manner of Mr. Walsh. What he says may be correct or incorrect. At all events, it is quite certain it will carry no weight because it was evident from the first that Chairman Walsh was prejudiced against Mr. Rockefeller. The chairman has only himself to blame that the hearing was a farce and its findings of no account.

The American people like fair play, even where the actions of multi-millionaires are being investigated. Chairman Walsh did not give fair play. The only thing he did give was a deplorable exhibition of how a presiding officer of a commission hearing evidence ought not to conduct himself.

SHOULD BE UP-TO-DATE.

Among the matters which we respectfully suggest for the consideration of the Quincy Board of Trade is the administration of the Quincy railroad station. A city of thirty odd thousand inhabitants ought to be able to support a railroad station whose ticket office was open at reasonable hours. Many citizens could bear testimony that they have been able to get their tickets only when the train was pulling into the station. Sometimes the ticket office is not open at all. All this is not likely to impress a stranger very favorably and perhaps he decides that he will make his residence in some city a bit more up-to-date.

How lonesome seemed City Hall Tuesday morning in the absence of the young women clerks who were enjoying themselves in his honor's camp up in Maine.

The City Government believes in conservation, at least so far as the municipal water is concerned. Perhaps you note there is not much being used on the streets nowadays.

How quiet and peaceful things seem on the board of Managers of Public Burial Places now that Arthur Hultman is no more (officially).

A NEW GARDEN OF EDEN.

It would be interesting to know how many people who have read the accounts of the recent fighting between the English and the Turks round the Tigris Euphrates delta, and northward to Mesopotamia, realize that this country is not only the site popularly attributed to the garden of Eden, but frequently to the voyage of the ark. Of course no one really knows what the four great Biblical rivers were, any more than they know that the rising and subsiding of the waters in Mesopotamia was what caused the flood. One thing, however, seems quite certain, and that is that, properly irrigated, the popular garden of Eden is capable of being one of the most fruitful districts of the earth. Sir William Wilcox, than whom there is no greater authority, calculated that there were at least twelve million acres of ground capable of being cultivated for wheat or cotton. He had actually persuaded the Porte to begin the scheme of irrigation, but the Turkish pasha very rarely carries through anything he begins. The supposed Eden is, of course, within the neighborhood of the great Persian oil field, and it is suspected that oil at any time may be struck in Eden. At any rate Sir William Wilcox has painted a picture of Eden considerably different from that of Milton—an Eden of grain elevators and cotton gins, with oil tanks steaming down that great river, the river Euphrates.—Christian Science Monitor.

A VALUABLE MOVEMENT.

The School Garden that came into vogue a few years ago has not become a regular feature of school work The wisdom of acquainting the child with the mysteries and possibilities of the soil cannot be gainsaid. One of the chief joys of country life come by appreciating nature. The beauties and delights of the natural world afford the world of men much pleasure. The art of appreciation can be developed. Nothing will awaken the mind of the child better than a little garden of his "very own." When the "earlie" settlers approached our New England shores they saw the land and smelled the land winds laden with the "smell of the garden" and the good dames had brought with them seeds of English flowers to plant in the garden lands of the new country gardens which were one of the earliest pleasures of the new land. The children of another generation may enter into all the joys of country life through the gateway of the "tiny" garden. To appreciate nature and the skill of the master gardener there is no better teacher than a garden planted and cared for as one's own. The children should be encouraged in school garden work and even the prosy necessity of weeding will not be without its instruction; nowhere can the importance of care, and care for small things, be taught better to a child. In even a little garden, care and neglect show themselves so quickly that one of the primary lessons of life is taught in a convincing and interesting way.—North Shore Breeze.

Extremely cold weather interfered with the boys Wednesday and many are today nursing sore arms.

GRANITE NEWS

The new chimney being erected at the plant of the Granite Railway Company will be the largest in the city. The structure is now up about seventy feet. It is constructed of white fire brieks and the name "Granite Railway Company" is being worked into it in black brick. When finished the building will be completed and the new boilers will be installed.

The polls in the election of the Granite Cutters' International Union close at the receipt of the last mail today. The votes will then be counted, put in typewritten form, and submitted to the executive council of the Union which will announce the winners in a few days. Have you, Mr. Granite Cutter, of this city, done your duty to your city and voted for Mr. Duncan, our local man, and thus kept a good man in office? Won't a man who has served you faithfully and well for the past twenty years be better than an untried man you do not know?

Memorial Day is past for the year 1915 and the local men will now start out with new vim to make the summer season a busy one. Although several cutters were laid off Saturday they will all be returned to work as soon as the manufacturers can get stock for them. Several of the local dealers are reported to have secured several contracts on the Holiday. The granite yards throughout the city look pretty well depleted after the large amount of work which was set in different cemeteries during the past week.

Several large monuments are under construction at the yard of J. N. White and Sons on Miller street, among them being the Firemen's Memorial for the City of Waltham.

The new monuments recently set in Mt. Wollaston came in for a goodly amount of praise as well as criticism on the Holiday. The new memorials added greatly to the appearance of the cemetery.

All of the quarries are now very busy getting out stock to supply the demands of the dealers who have been so busy with their Memorial Day work that they could not get time to order the stock for their summer orders.

TEN TABLES IN PLAY.

Ten tables were in play at the whist party held Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Catherine Martin on the Parkway. The proceeds were for the benefit of the Crescent street table. The special prize was won by Mrs. Chisolm of Atlantic, first prize for women by Mrs. John Watson, and first for men Edward McDonald. The hooby prize was awarded to Miss Helen Elcock. Another whist party in aid of the same table will be held at the home of Mrs. John Watson on cross street, Wednesday evening, June 9th.

The Commons practically cinched their hold on last place in the West Quincy Twilight league Wednesday evening when they went down to their ninth straight defeat at the hand of the Cubs to the tune of 18 to 1 Desmond and Barron were in the points for the winners and Jolly and Gosselin for the losers.

AMERICANS NEED HELP IN TURKEY

A news dispatch coming by way of Petrograd announces the occupation of the city of Van, near Lake Van in Eastern Turkey, by the Russians. If this report is true, as it quite probably is, it will bring relief to many friends of the Americans in Van and to the great numbers of Armenians in this country, whose friends or relatives have been beseiged by the Turks in a portion of the city, have sought the protection of the American Mission, or have been hunted from their homes and perhaps killed by their ancient enemies, the Kurdish troops in Turkey's army.

The Americans in Van are principally those on the staff of the American Board's mission there. They include Miss Grisell M. McLaren and Miss Gertrude Rogers, two Mt. Holyoke graduates; Miss Caroline Silliman, of Connecticut; Dr. and Mrs. Clarence D. Usher, in charge of the Van Hospital and Miss Elizabeth H. Usher, Rev. and Mrs. Ernest A. Yarrow, Miss Grace H. Knapp and Miss S. L. M. Bond, the latter a nurse and superintendent of the hospital; and Mrs. Raynolds, the wife of Dr. George C. Raynolds, president of Van College, and for forty-five years a missionary physician for both bodies and souls at Van.

Dr. Raynolds, to his great grief, is held in America where he was traveling in the interests of the college when the war broke out.

The State Department reported to the American Board a few days ago a cable from Ambassador Morgenthau to the effect that the Turkish Minister of the Interior had just sent, in the Ambassador's presence, a wire to the Turkish governor in Van ordering him to protect all Americans and American interests, so that the anxiety felt for these missionaries is not because of personal danger. They are, however, probably, in great need of money and supplies wherewith to relieve the suffering around them.

A good deal more than $100,000, mostly in small sums, has been forwarded through the American Board's treasury by Armenians and members of other Turkish races in this country to their families in Turkey. A few days ago Secretary Barton received, through the State Department at Washington, a cable from Ambassador Morgenthau reading, "All stations begging relief funds. Some say starvation threatens. Please help quickly." In view of the urgency of this appeal and influenced also by the appalling suffering and destitution revealed by statements in letters just in which got by the censors, the American Board has decided to open a public relief fund. MILTON HIGH BEATS QUINCY

Teams Near to Blows in 8--6 Game

Milton High school won another victory in the South Shore league by beating Quincy High at Milton Wednesday afternoon by a score of 8 to 6. The tie game between these teams, called at Merrymount park in the seventh inning because of rain will be played here next Monday.

The game was very unsatisfactory to the local fans. One element which entered in the final result was the poor umpiring of Brierly. All kinds of criticism has been made because Larkin was declared out at first for running against the baseman who stood straddling the bag, and after the ball had been thrown into the crowd by Reiser.

The work of Reiser also received its share of praise. His spitter worked well but his interference with throwing to second base by DiSenso was as prominent as Bryan's three errors for Quincy.

Wrangling was continuous throughout the game and actual fights were just avoided. The fans say the game took more lively turns than any ever played on the Cunningham field. The score:

ELECTRIC CAR STRIKES WAGON

Stephen Edwards, a plumbing contractor and popular resident of Atlantic, was thrown to the street at Squantum Tuesday afternoon when an electric car struck his wagon and wrecked it. He escaped with a severe shaking up.

The accident occured on Dorchester avenue, one of the worst streets in the city and a highway which is at present in the council limelight because of the efforts of people in that section to have it repaired. The street is so narrow where the accident occured that two vehicles cannot pass each other.

The car was Quincy bound, in charge of John Salandra. A wide curve hid the wagon from view until the distance was so short brakes could not stop the car in time to prevent it striking the wagon.

Edwards was thrown from his seat and landed in the street. The wagon was practically demolished. The horse bolted but was stopped before it had run a great way.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The pictures this week deal with the production of iron and steel. First the mining of the ore in Minnesota and its transportation to Pittsburg. Then its manufacture into pig iron, both by the old and modern methods; and last the transformation into steel in the furnace and blooming mill.

These pictures should be of special interest to the men of this city who work at the Fore River, where so much steel is used in the building of ships. Instruction concerning the work is given in the brief description with which each photograph is accompanied.

One is especially impressed by the gigantic porportions of the machinery employed, and by the variety of products turned out by the steel mills. Among the last views is one which shows this. "There are long bars, short bars, coils of steel wire, and great chains. Much of the manufactured steel is sent to other mills to be made into various articles for use. Factories which make steel wire fence, steel nails, rivets, screws, and many other things get their material from the steel mills. Here the boiler works, ship yards, and rail-way shops come for their supplies."

peared for the plaintiff and told of the said Daisy White, the aforesaid chicken being presented to them for their Sunday dinner, and that the so-called "chicken" was anything but tender.

The third and last witness for the plaintiff was a man named Johnson who had been named after all the leading men of the country from Washington to Lincoln and who had a slight impediment in his speech, slight it may have seemed but with almost every word he uttered the judge and jurors were treated to a free shower, to wit: the gentleman stuttered. It was finally agreed to let him give his testimony in singing since he could sing better than he could talk. His testimony showed that the aforementioned Henry Henpeck had on the aforesaid night, tried to sell the aforesaid chicken, Daisy White, to him but without success.

Counsel for the defense then called the witnesses for the defense Prof. Puffer, President demeritus and professor of chiskenism, roosterology and henistics, who thought he knew all about hens and was the author, editor, publisher, printer and sole agent of the volume "The Complete Hen," a Compendium of Useless Misinformation about China eggs, incubators and sewing circles. The main question raised was: When is a chicken? or, in other words, when does a chicken cease to be a chicken and become a hen or rooster?

Prof. Puffer solved the problem thusly: "A hen is a fowl. A fowl is a baseball term. A term is a season. A baseball season is about five months Therefore a chicken becomes a hen when it is five months old." During Prof. Puffer's testimony Mrs. R. U. Penitent became excited and took him to task because she thought "the old hen" referred to was herself.

Mrs. John Jones who followed Prof. Puffer for the defense read her testimony from her diary where she had written the facts of the case on the night of its occurrence. Mrs. Jones' testimony pointed to Mr. Johnson, third witness for the plaintiff, as being the thief. (Mrs. Jones saw all this while she was chaperoning a crowd of the young girls of the Hall place M. E. church, who were serenading Gene McCormick, the owner of the said chicken, Daisy White).

Court rested while Mrs. Jones, assisted by the females in the court, rendered one of the songs written for the occasion and sung by the serenading party.

The third and last witness for the defense testified that he saw Mr. Henry Henpeck, the prisoner, and Mr. Johnson together and that Johnson paid Henpeck a dollar for the chicken The witness was excused from further testimony for contempt of court.

Mr. Wyndye, counsel for the defense, made an eloquent appeal to the jury in closing, on behalf of his client.

I. Will Soakem, Counsel for the plaintiff, moved the court to tears in his plea to the jury to avenge the death of Daisy White.

Jesse James, the foreman of the jury, rendered a verdict of guilty, but the jurors returned a verdict of not guilty, declaring the foreman was a grafter. Judge Hiram Hayseede, disregarding the verdict of the jurors, proclaimed Henry Henpeck guilty and sentenced him to eat ten squash pies to be made by the Ladies Aid society.

From start to finish the audience were kept laughing at the humor of the whole trial and especially at the "knocks" given the unoffending Ladies Aid. Several local hits on the young women were scored as well as on a certain cat named Mutt and an automobile owned by a popular young man prominent in the famous chicken case.

The parts were all well taken. The cast:

GERMANY IS NOT RESPONSIBLE

Coppersmith's Union 92 last night issued a statement denying that agents of the German Government in this country are responsible for a strike of coppersmiths at the Fore River shipyards.

It was declared by officials of the union that there has been a strike of about 43 members at Fore River for six weeks to enforce the new wage rate of $4 per day and double pay for overtime.

THREE CUTS OFF ELECTRICITY

Business plants at West Quincy, which depend on electricity for their power, were obliged to close down for an hour or so this noon, when wires entering the switchboard of the high tension station of the Quincy Electric Light & Power Co. located on Shea Park, at the junction of Copeland, West and Centre streets, became short circuited, setting fire to the wooden switchboard. The fire had worked up under the roof when discovered and an alarm was sounded from Box 42 about 11.30. When the fire department arrived they found the under part of the roof on fire and the insulation burned off the high tension wires leading to the switchboard

The firemen had to wait until the Electric Light men cut the wires leading to the building before they could use any water on the fire, for it would have been extremely dangerous to have directed a stream of water onto the highly charged wires. As soon as the wires were cut the fire was quickly extinguished. The loss will be confined to new wire leads.

GOODHUE AGAIN GOOD SAMARITAN

Inspector Goodhue of the police department, who a week ago secured the discharge of a man who might have been convicted of larceny because of mistaken identity, has again played the role of the Good Samaritan.

This morning he brought about the release of Richard Farronson of Roxbury, charged with the larceny of the automobile of Mrs. Margaret Moore of Roxbury and Houghs Neck. Prosecution was dropped after Inspector Goodhue found Farronson's story was correct and that a member of the Moore family had taken the machine without the knowledge of his mother and that Farronson had simply driven it from City square to Houghs Neck.

It cost Farronson $15 for that favor however because he had not secured a renewal of his license to operate a machine this year. Sentence was suspended until Oct. 15.

Farronson was sent to headquarters Monday evening. The police were dissatisfied with his explanation of how he drove the machine back to Houghs Neck after it had been missing 24 hours. Two licenses in his possession aroused their suspicions and Inspector Goodhue was assigned to the investigation.

He learned that the license issued to Frank McCormick, 4 Estes street, Roxbury, had been given him by McCormick, in City square just before he started for the Neck, and that the license bearing the name of Robert Farronson had been given him by another young man at the same time. This license is said to have been found.

Inspector Goodhue says that Farronson was not with the member of the Moore family when the machine was taken for a New Hampshire trip but fell in with this person Sunday evening, after they returned to Roxbury. He rode to Quincy with the party and took the auto back to the Moore home on request of the member of the family who had taken it.

SAVES QUINLAN FROM DROWNING

Joseph Quinlan, said to live in Quincy, owes his rescue from drowning in the Neponset river Wednesday afternoon to the prompt work of Supt. John H. Nelson, of the New Haven railroad draw bridge. During the latter part of the afternoon, Mr. Nelson had his attention attracted by gurgling and smothered cries and saw a man struggling in the water. Throwing off his hat, coat and shoes, Nelson immediately jumped overboard and was soon swimming through the cold water toward the man who was struggling 300 yards from the bridge.

When Nelson grabbed Quinlan he found the man almost unconscious and stuck fast in the mud. It required every ounce of strength that Nelson had to pull the man out of the soft mud.

Nelson, who is an expert swimmer, turned on his back and pulled Quinlan with him. In a few minutes he was on a sand bar at the Milton side, and it was then an easy matter to grab the man and bring him to shore. Quinlan was exhausted and Nelson staggered with his burden on the ground.

The two men were rowed back to the bridge in a boat that had been brought to the scene by Patrick Feeney, a section foreman, who was on the bridge when Nelson plunged into the river. Quinlan departed for his home in Quincy and refused to give his address beyond the fact that he lived in Quincy. He was about 40 years old.

After reaching shore the men were treated by Dr. A. R. Ballou, who found both able to go home unassisted.

When asked how he happened in the water, he said that he was walking across the bridge when a gust of wind blew his hat into the water. He climbed down the embankment at the Quincy end of the bridge and ventured out too far and was swept away by the current.

Mr. Nelson, two years ago last April received a silver medal from the Massachusetts Humane Society for saving from drowning a man named Martin, who had jumped from the Neponset Birdge.

GUILD HOLDS BABY SHOW

The interesting feature at the meeting of the Woman's guild of the Park and Downs church Wednesday afternoon was a baby show. The meeting was held at the church and twenty-six mothers were present with their babies, and a pretty sight they made. Each mother had much to tell of the things her baby had said and done and in every case she found a ready listener.

Two prizes were given, both silver baby spoons. They were given to the youngest baby present and to the most popular baby present.

Henry E. Waite, the four weeks boy of Mrs. Amory Waite received the prize for being the youngest baby present and John Carleton Miller, the three months baby boy of Mrs. Philip E. Miller, was by vote awarded the prize for being the most popular baby.

INJURES LEG IN ACCIDENT

Edward A. Damon, engineer for the Quincy Real Estate Trust buildings, in City square, met with a painful accident Tuesday while on a trip to Scituate on his motor cycle. In going through that town he lost temporary control of his machine and ran into a sand bank. He was thrown off and one of his legs badly sprained.

He had plenty of grit however and determined to return to Quincy before consulting a physician. He got a man who happened to be passing to assist him onto his motor cycle and started for Quincy. On reaching City square he made up his mind that when he alighted from his motor cycle that it would be on the side of his good leg. In some way however he missed his calculations and when he got off the machine he stepped on his injured leg with the result that he fell to the sidewalk with the machine on top of him.

Not only did he further injure his leg but his motor cycle was also somewhat smashed. He was taken to his rooms and a physician summoned. It is not thought that his leg is fractured although it was badly sprained.

UNIQUE SCHEME.

The young people of the Wollaston Congregational church are carrying out a unique scheme this week to raise money for the parish house fund. The plan is to station themselves at the Wollaston depot and serve box lunches to people taking the trains leaving that station between 7 and 8.30 A. M. Wednesday was the first day the scheme was tried and it proved a great success as the supply of lunches was quickly sold out. The lunches were very tempting and the purchasers declare they were up to expectations. The plan was carried out again this morning and will also be done on Friday morning.

PLAN FOR FIELD DAY.

The committee having in charge the St. John's Day outing of Quincy Commandery, Knights Templars, on June 24, is busy at work on the details and the trip promises to be a jolly one. The place of the outing is in Middleboro, at King Phillip Tavern. On this occasion the ladies will accompany the Sir Knights. The party will go from Quincy on special electric cars and on arrival will indulge in a series of field sports for which suitable prizes will be awarded the winners. There will also be dancing for those who wish. Dinner will be served in the tavern.

GREAT MASS OF PROOF

Reports of 30,000 Cases of Kidney Trouble, Some of them Quincy Cases.

Each of some 6,000 newspapers of the United States is publishing from week to week, names of people in its particular neighborhood, who have used and recommended Doan's Kidney Pills for kidney backache, weak kidneys, bladder troubles and urinary disorders. This mass of proof includes over 30,000 recommendations. Quincy is no exception. Here is one of the Quincy cases.

Charles J. Somers, barber, 17 Newcomb street, Quincy, says: "I had a lame back and weak kidneys for ten years. Nothing ever relieved me until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. They soon restored my kidneys to their proper working order and corrected the other ailments. I publicly recommended Doan's Kidney Pills after they helped me so much and I have watched their effect in other cases since. I use Doan's Kidney Pills off and on and I wouldn't be without a supply."

ITALIAN TROOPS STILL ADVANCE

Believed to Have Opened Way For Assault on Rovereto

Permysl Centre of One of Most Sanguinary Conflicts of War and Battle Continues With Unabated Fury—Lack of Ammunition Said to Have Caused Czar's Troops to Fall Back Many Miles—Three Thousand Russians Reported Captured by Germans During Month of May—Turks Lose Heavily In Dardanelles Night Fighting Against Allies

Rome, June 3.—The capture of the town of Store by Italian troops advancing up the Giudicaria valley, west of Lake Gara, is believed to have opened the way for a general assault on the outer defenses of Rovereto, a strongly defended town through which the Italian army must pass in its investment of Trent.

These troops have effected a junction with the Alpine chasseurs, with the apparent intention of attacking Riva, an important position at the head of the lake, then marching on to the Revereto defenses from both east and west, the troops which are moving up the railway from Verono being prepared to co-operate.

While the Italian invaders of the Trentini have so far met with little resistance from the Austrians, it is felt that the first serious engagement in that region will be fought when the actual attack on Revereto is begun.

Italian artillery began the bombardment of Mori, three miles southwest of Revereto, but violent rainstorms prevented the hauling of big guns up the sides of the hills now held by the Italians.

Situation Around Permysl

In the eastern theatre of the war, the battle for the possession of Permysl, which is proving one of the most sanguinary of the war, continues with unabated fury. Both sides have been heavily reinforced and attacks and counter-attacks are constant.

German and Austrian reports claim that some of the forts on the northern front already have fallen, and that on the southeastern front their troops are progressing towards the railway that joins the fortress with Lemberg. But the latest Petrograd report declares that the Germans who got into one fort were driven out, and makes no mention of the capture of Styr or other successes claimed by the Teutons.

In the capture of Stry, military observers see a preliminary move to the total eviction of the Russian army from Galicia. Official German reports now show that Stry is entirely occupied, and that a third army is moving north into position to advance upon Lemberg, to the rear of Permysl, and almost the last Russian base in Galicia.

It is known that the Russians are retreating northward over plains which can be swept by the heavy artillery of the Teutons until they come to the swamplands of the Dneister, farther to the north. The month of May has ben disastrous to the Russians, who have retreated in some sections as far as ninety miles and in others up to forty-five miles. Lack of heavy ammunition to withstand the drive of the Germans is declared to be the cause.

Turks Suffer Heavy Losses

The Turks have suffered terrible losses in night attacks on Gallipoli peninsula in the past twenty-four hours. Mytelene dispatches say the heavy Turkish casualties in the recent fighting make it appear probable that their losses since the Dardanelles fighting began will total close to 100,000.

Officered by Germans, the Turks are hurling themselves against the allied positions near Gaba Tepee in close formation. From their warships the allies have brought ashore powerful searchlights, which have been posted on the cliffs. At a signal from the outposts, the advancing enemy columns are swept with a glare of light and then riddled by machine gunfire.

Roumania Ready to Enter War

Roumania is making active preparations to enter the war on the side of the allies if Austria rejects her territorial demands. Dispatches say the success of the Italian armies has aroused wild enthusiasm in Bucharest. A "war" party is bringing pressure to bear on the government and the situation is growing more critical.

Dispatches corroborate the report Roumania has made formal demand on Austria for the cession of territory as the price of continued neutrality. As in the Italian negotiations, Germany will play the role of mediator. The Frankfort Gazette suggests Austria make terms with Roumania "on an equitable basis."

Germans Take 300,000 Russians

An official report issued by the Berlin war office says:

"In the month of May 863 officers and 268,869 men were taken prisoners in the eastern theatre of war, while 251 cannon and 576 machine guns were captured. Of these numbers, the capturing of 400 officers, including two generals; 153,254 men, 160 cannon, including 28 heavy ones, and 403 machine guns is to the credit of the troops under General Mackensen.

"Including prisoners taken in the eastern theatre of war, as well as those announced previously, the total number of Russians who have fallen into the hands of the Germanic allied troops during the month of May amount to about 1000 officers and more than 300,000 men."

Report of "Eye Witness"

Fighting under a hail of lead, the Germans in the recent battling around Notre Dame de Lorette became so demoralized and confused they couldn't distinguish north from south, the official "eye witness" attached to the French army reported.

"Among 5000 German dead found after the battle was the body of a Captain Sievert," said the "eye witness." "In his pocket was found a written account of the fighting from May 10 to 21 in that region.

"The Germans," he wrote, "lacked ammunition. Their orders were so badly given that there was great confusion in every sector, the soldiers being unable to sense directions. The morale was bad.

"Hundreds of wounded lay in the German trenches waiting for the ambulance men, who failed to arrive. The men fought for hours without food. Their officers telephoned for reinforcements, but they did not come. Then, after each severe shelling, they sent runners back to ask about the reinforcements, but none came.

"The account of Sievert, a five-page recital, closed with the line: I wonder how long the thing will last?' The German captain's own story shows the French attack made the enemy's position a hell of bullets, grenades and shells behind which the French came charging with their bayonets. It proves what superhuman efforts Germany needed to demand of her men even before Italy's entry into the war."

Rheims is again under bombardment by the Germans. An official statement from Paris said the Germans have shelled the famous cathedral.

"The Germans have shelled Rheims twice in the past thirty-six hours," said the statement. "The cathedral and other parts of the city have been repeatedly bombarded."

BIG LUMBER YARD FIRE

Haverhill Concern Practically Wiped Out of Existence

Haverhill, Mass., June 3.—Fire, which practically destroyed the lumber and coal yards of the Taylor-Goodwin Lumber company, caused damage estimated at $150,000, communicating itself to an adjoining grain elevator and setting fire to buildings in a radius of half a mile.

Water pressure in the Bradford section of the city, where the fire was, was found to be so low that the firemen had to carry their hose over the Haverhill bridge to the city proper in order to get a sufficiently high pressure.

Tied at the docks of the lumber yard, on the Merrimac river, were two coal barges carrying 500 tons of coal and coke. These caught, and, when their hawsers had burned through, floated down the river. A flotilla of motor boats was called on to go out and head them off. They sunk, however, before they had done any damage.

Freight cars, which were on the lumber yard siding, were destroyed. A wrecking crew of the Boston and Maine railroad arrived to clear the Georgetown branch tracks, which were completely blocked.

Five thousand tons of coal and coke in the lumber yard are still burning.

BIG SHOE ORDERS

Brockton Factories to Work Night and Day to Fill War Contract

Brockton, Mass., June 3.—Orders were issued at the factory of the Fred F. Field Shoe company to operate the plant night and day as a result of an order for 1,000,000 pairs of shoes from the Italian government. The output from now on will be 400 dozen shoes each day. The order will not be filled before October.

The Charles A. Eaton company has recieved an order from the same government for 750,000 pairs of shoes. These two orders are the only large ones that have been received by Brockton shoe manufacturers since the beginning of the war.

BRYAN DENIES REPORTS

State Department Not Informed That Lusitania Was Armed

Washington, June 3.—Secretary Bryan denied reports that the state department was in possession of affidavits asserting that the Lusitania was armed and carried explosives, in violation of United States laws, when it left New York on its last voyage.

He had had the matter investigated, he said, and no such affidavits had reached the department.

He was also without official information, he stated, concerning the story that the American liner St. Paul was chased by a German submarine.

BRIEFS

The City Council committees on public buildings and licenses will meet Friday evening.

The committee on sewers and drains of the city council will go out on a view Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. M. A. Laing and little grandson "Jackie" Knowles of Bedford street have returned from Bennington, N. H., where they were visiting over the holiday.

Mrs. James Ring of Greenleaf street left Wednesday to visit her son, Morton Ring, who is in the graduating class of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Miss May Gavin entertained a few friends at her home on Irving place Wednesday evening at whist. The proceeds will be given to the annual lawn party and field day of St. John's parish.

Rev. George M. Bailey will give a stereopticon lecture entitled "The Challenge of the Mountains," in the Wollaston Methodist Episcopal church Friday evening. The proceeds will go to the Sunday School Base Ball club.

Tomorrow afternoon the regular monthly meeting of the Quincy Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at three o'clock with Mrs. Albert M. Thompson of 198 Whitwell street, and a large attendance is hoped for by the committee.

The first lot of poll tax bills went out in Wednesday night's mail. The bills for the other wards will go out as fast as made ready. Payment of the poll tax is due within fourteen days, otherwise a summons will be issued, which add twenty cents to the amount.

Several improvements have been made in the past few weeks at St. Mary's hall. A new platform and steps have been placed at the entrance and the letters have been gilded. A fine lawn has been made at the front and when the grass comes up it will present a very pretty building.

A crowded house attended the second night's performance of "The Irish Rebel" at Quincy Adams Hall Wednesday evening under the auspices of the Div. 5 Dramatic club. The actors took their parts as though they were more experienced and entered into the spirit of the play with more vim than they did on the first evening. The club plans to give another play early in the fall.

The Comical Trio will repeat their performance Monday evening after the meeting of the St. Mary's C. T. A. & M. R. society The trio have been rehearsing faithfully under the direction of "Jack" Joyce and "Batty" Flaherty. Several new songs and lances have been added to the sketch. It is planned to enliven the interest during the next few months by holding some kind of a performance after each meeting.

UNITY CIRCLE GIVE RECEPTION

The annual reception of Unity Circle, Kings Daughters, to the older friends of the circle was held Wednesday afternoon in the chapel of Bethany church, and as usual the afternoon proved a most delightful occasion, not only to the older friends present, but to the members of Unity Circle as well who as hosts made the afternoon one long to be remembered by those present.

Friends of the circle furnished automobiles and the older friends were transported to and from their homes There were upwards of thirty who accepted the invitation, among this number being three who had passed the age of 90 years.

Mrs. Victor E. Miller, leader of the circle, spoke briefly in welcoming the friends after which there was a short entertainment, which included a piano and violin duet by Miss Gertrude Shaw and Guy Shaw, and readings by Mrs. McDonald.

Following the entertainment the guests of the afternoon were escorted to the dining room where daintily arranged tables had been laid and a lunch of sandwiches tea and ice cream and cake were served. At each plate there was a flower and a bag containing candy.

RECEIVES BLACK HAND LETTERS

When Frank Zeni, an Austrian, was arraigned in court this morning for the alleged threatening of John Carello of Filbert street, West Quincy, his Italian father-in-law, black hand letters were introduced in support of the charge.

The letters, written in Italian, stated he "would never be secure in his own house" and that his house "will be sent into the air" and further demanded reimbursement for pay lost during a period of non-employment. The letters closed with poorly drawn skull and cross bones and were signed "Black Hand." Zeni denied he sent the letters and exhibited a similar one he claims to have received Saturday. He said he believed a third party was responsible and said he was willing to take an oath on that statement, with both hands upraised if necessary.

Zeni was married two years ago. Unpleasant relations have recently developed between him and his wife. He was arrested in Boston Wednesday. At headquarters he submitted specimens of his handwriting to Inspector Goodhue. That writing was similar to that in the letters and Judge Avery intimated this morning he thought Zeni guilty and continued the case to Friday morning to see if reconciliation could be effected between he daughter of Carrella and the defendant. The girl at present is a patient at the hospital on Long Island, Boston Harbor.

The receipt of the black hand letters created no end of excitement in West Quincy and last Sunday, the last day given to meet the demands, was an eventful one on the Carrella family.

CONTINUE WAR PREPARATIONS.

(By United Press).

Laredo, Texas, June 3—Evidently preparing for further hostilities instead of a get-together plan as requested by Pres. Wilson, Parrantas today took across the border 400,000 rounds of rifle ammunition. They will be distributed to arsenals in Northern Mexico. Further shipments ahead of a possible embargo are expected soon.

SPORTING COMMENT

It is more than likely that the Saturday afternoons of the fall and winter can be passed in witnessing High school teams in action. It is understood that if the present schedules can be rearranged football will be given a place. Many of the basket ball games will be played on that day.

And, speaking of races—there is one in which simon pure amateurs are seldom entered, and that is the mayoralty race.

Quincy may be the scene of a cross country run if the hopes of some of the local boys develop. Well known athletic promotors strongly intimate that they will arrange a Labor Day event which will put the city on the map. The Board of Trade should take up this proposition.

Gus Lehive, familiarly known as "Gus Lenny" in the boxing world, is now living in Quincy and makes his home on Revere road. Not so many months ago Gus claimed a South Quincy girl as his bride and since then has lived in South Boston. The choice of Quincy as his residence should offer some encouragement to the local boys who aspire to ring honors. Lenny retired last fall, after battling for 11 years. During his career he met the fastest in the game, always acquitting himself creditably. He may perhaps be induced to put the finishing touches on a few of the would-be champs who have sacrificed innumerable opportunities by sticking to second rate managers.

One group of boys in the city at least will get a taste of life in the open this summer. They are the members of the Machine Gun company which will go to camp in August.

The topic of the hour in base ball circles is why did Charlie Knight decline to pitch for the Fore Rivers against the United Shoe Machinery Co. last Saturday. The accepted answer is that he sidestepped the visitors when memories of the pounding they gave him last year were refreshed. With Knight we do not believe Fore River can be a winning combination. The players act as though they had no confidence in him. It's dollars to doughnuts that with Stan Bates or someone as good the team will come into its own.

Allen Connor, the best middle distance runner in the city today and a member of the North Dorchester club, continues in training and works out daily. Connor will probably rest during the hot weather and resume competition in the early fall.

The fight between the Gridleys and Massachusetts Fields for the championship of the National grammar school ends Friday night. It is expected that fully a thousand will see the game to settle the leadership.

Quincy and Brockton High schools were again rivals today when the track teams met on the Merrymount oval.

GOING TO THE FRONT.

Forty-three of the sixty-six young people going out this year as missionaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions have been in Boston recently in attendance on the annual Candidates' Conference. Twelve were excused from coming because of the distance or for other good reasons and eleven have already departed for their posts. All sections of the country had their representatives, from California to Massachusetts, from the Carolinas to Maine.

The famous missionary families are well represented this year. There are two grandsons of Dr. Elias Riggs, that learned gentleman who had a working knowledge of twenty languages and who translated the Bible for Armenians, Bulgarians, and other Turkish races besides writing over 400 hymns for his oriental Christians. One of these descendants, Charles H. Riggs, is going as an agricultural teacher and missionary to Albania; the other, Mr. Theodore D. Riggs, a tall, stalwart-looking man with fine, earnest face, has been successfully practising law, but the work has called him and he, taking his wife and little son with him, will go as business agent to the Western Turkey Mission. He is the fifteenth Riggs to be appointed by the Board and has already four brothers and one sister in the ranks.

Miss Adelaide Fairbank and Miss Alice Cary are daughters respectively of Rev. Edward Fairbank of India and Rev. Otis Cary of Japan. They are going back to the lands of their birth, as is also George DeForest White, the son of President George E. White of Anatolia College, in Marsovan, Turkey.

Miss Dorothea Kielland, a slender, fairhaired girl, with a Cornell B. S. behind her, is going out to South Africa, to teach domestic Science in Inanda Seminary, that is she is to show the Zulu girls how to make and keep Christian homes.

Dr. Amy Metcalf is the first physician to go to China on the Rockefeller Foundation. She was born on a ranch in Colorado, earned her own education, going through the Denver schools, the University of Colorado, the Woman's Medical college of Pennsylvania and coming to the Board from a hospital position in Worcester. She will teach in the Union Woman's Medical college in Peking and she has the vitality, strength and poise that one asociates with the ideal doctor.

It would take far too many words to tell of even the most interesting of these recruits—of the printer who is going to run bibles, text books and dictionaries off the mission press in West Central Africa for the use of the Ovimbundu tribe, of the industrial expert trained at Tuskegee and of the young Jamaican, a grand nephew of Warren Hastings, India's brilliant governor general, who are also going to Africa ,or of the others, doctors, nurses, teachers, preachers destined for China, Japan, Turkey, India and Spain.

All these young people have met and conferred with the Board officers. They have received instructions as to their relations with their home churches, with their own and other governments, with their fellow missionaries and those of other Boards and with the natives and native religions. They have been shown how to make effective missionary addresses and given an idea as to writing effectively for the press. They have been taught how to plan and order their outfits before they go and their supplies after they reach their fields. They received their commissions at an impressive service on a Sunday morning and on the same evening they gave in a sentence or two their farewell words to an audience which packed one of Boston's largest churches.

By the end of August most of them will be well on their ways to, or will have reached, the fields and the work to which they look forward so eagerly and where they are needed as perhaps never before since the Board was founded.

CHARGED WITH BREAKING INTO H. L. RICE HOME

William Johnson Is Held For Grand Jury In $3000 Bonds

Dressed, the police say, in clothes belonging to Harry L. Rice of Adams street and carrying some of the articles stolen from his home Monday night, William Johnson of parts unknown, was arrested about midnight by Patrolman Jeremiah Dineen. This morning in court he was charged with breaking and entering. He waived examination and was held for the grand jury. Bonds were set at $3000.

The Rice home according to a report furnished the police was burglarized Monday night during the absence of the family and jewelry valued at $200 is known to have been taken. The loot included two gold watches, shirt studs and clothing. An inventory now being taken may disclose more to be missing. Entrance is thought to have been gained through a broken window.

Johnson was arrested on the steps of the Rice home by Patrolman Dineen who states he offered no resistance. He was sent to police headquarters on a charge of being a suspicious person. A search revealed some of the stolen porperty on his person the police say and also that he was attired in some of the clothing of Mr. Rice.

When arraigned this morning Johnson lost no time in telling the court he didn't want a hearing and preferred to go before the superior court. A charge of being a suspicious person, lodged against him, was dismissed.

Johnson will be taken to Boston today where he will be viewed by the police of that city. An attempt will also be made to see if he has ever before been implicated by the police with burglary. His capture is considered an important one.

AMERICAN NOTE READY TO SEND

President's Attitude is Unchanged

(By United Press)

Washington, June 4—President Wilson's note is ready for delivery but when it will be sent is not known The stand taken in the note is practically the same as that taken when Germany declared a blockade and when the Lusitania note was sent and that stand is that America wants Germany to recognize the international law governing the freedom of neutral ships on the high seas and impress upon them that these people are free to travel with the belief that their government will stand behind them.

THREE VESSELS ARE TORPEDOED

(By United Press)

London, June 4—Three neutral ships all from Scandinavian countries, have been torpedoed and sunk by German submarines in the North Sea within the past 24 hours.

The Swedish steamer "Lappland," carried four women pasengers. With 19 of the crew they were landed this morning at Peterhand, Scotland. The "Lappland" was torpedoed and sunk during the night while en route to England with a cargo of iron ore. No warning was given by the submarine commander acording to the "Lappland" officers. The ship began sinking rapidly. The women dressed hurriedly and were lifted into boats as the steamer disappeared in the darkness.

The other neutral victims of the German undersea craft were the Danish ship "Salvador," whose crew landed at Harwick, Scotland, early today, and the Norwegian steamer "Cabano," torpedoed off the Flannon island.

TALKS WITH SIX SURVIVORS OF ILL FATED "LUSITANIA"

"Jack" Arnold Returns After Six Years in Government Service in Philippines

Six of the survivors of the Lusitania disaster, who were passengers on the Philadelphia with John R. Arnold of this city, denied before docking at New York Thursday that that vessel had a gun mounted at the bow or carried others below deck, according to Mr. Arnold this morning.

Mr. Arnold, who is the son of Mrs. Zenas S. Arnold of Coddington street, reached home Thursday evening some days ahead of his expected arrival and after a long trip during which he passed through the very centre of the war zone and saw but little evidence of the conflict raging in Europe. He is connected with the executive department of the Civil Service Bureau in the Philippine Islands and is on a leave of absence.

Arnold was appointed to the government service six years ago this month and since then most of his time has been devoted to commercial reporting in the island. His activities in that direction have taken him to practically all of the centres of the Philippines.

His passage across the Atlantic on the Philadelphia was made with six survivors of the Lusitania. He said they gave a graphic description of the sinking of the ship and that all of them were inclined to believe that there was no gun mounted as claimed by the Germans. The entire party were Canadian business men who were traveling for pleasure, all destined to different parts of England. Only one of them was on deck when the explosion came. All escaped by jumping overboard, and one of them was picked up by a torpedo boat engaged in rescue work after hanging to a plank for five hours.

Mr. Arnold actually started his homeward trip at Hong Kong. In his travels he touched India and various other places. The trip from Marseilles to Liverpool was directly through the heart o fthe war zone. He said passengers were not uneasy but were alert for the death-dealing torpedo.

The vessel had a gun mounted at the bow before clearing at Marseilles and the gun crew in command held target practise so to be prepared to fire in deefnse of the ship in case of attack. Passengers, he said, were instructed to be ready to seize life preservers on an instant's notice and the boats were swung clear in the davits while crossing the English channel.

Mr. Arnold said that there was little on the surface to indicate that a great war was raging although there was some evidence of anxiety. Incidentally he mentioned several peculiarities of the English point of view compared with that of residents of the United States.

How long Mr. Arnold will remain here is uncertain, although he will probably stay with his mother several weeks unless advices from Washington carry a new assignment.

ORDERS ZENI TO KEEP PEACE

Alleged Blackhander Enters Appeal

Italian and Austrian faced each other again in the district court this morning when the continued case of Frank Zeni, charged with having sent black hand letters to John Carrella of Filbert street, West Quincy, his father-in-law, was called.

Carrella came into court, accompanied by his daughter, the wife of Zeni. She carried a small infant dressed in white clothes. Carrella went immediately to the desk of the clerk of the court where he handed over correspondence which figured in Thursday's hearing as testimony and while Judge Avery and Clerk Lyons were in conversation he turned and faced the prisoner.

Drawn up to his full height, with apparently every muscle contracted, he presented the appearance of a giant in strength, while his eyes flashed forth some message.

Zeni returned the look, calmly at first, but suddenly he remarked: "He tried to kill me once," and with that the little mother called "Papa" from a spectators bench where she sat and Carrella turned away.

Judge Avery found Zeni guilty of threat and bound him over in the sum of $300 to keep the peace for a month in default of which he was to be committed. Zeni entered an appeal and sureties were set at $300.

POWER OF COLD FACTS.

A remarkable instance of the power of the newspaper press has just been given in England. A complete readjustment of the cabinet governing that country has just been forced, and it is said to have been due to a dispatch from a correspondent of the London Times. This dispatch dwelt on the fact that the army was being supplied with too much shrapnel and too few high explosive shells.

If the downfall of the English cabinet is thus truly explained, it is an instance of the power of careful and accurate statements of fact, both in newspaper work and in political campaigning. There are too many newspaper men in this country who are mere armchair critics. They can write brilliant and slashing articles, but they lack a foundation of solid investigation.

The political stump is full of off hand statesmen, who can get you up a slam-whanging speech in a half hour. It exposes the absurdity and futility of opponents, and is clever, witty, and sets the galleries to cheering. But when the thoughtful citizen gets home he asks himself, What more do I know about my government? To which he must answer, Nothing.

Probably one reason why political rallies are not well attended is that there is too much arm swinging and too little real information.

American newspapers are all the time presenting carefully prepared statements of fact, that are just as influential in a more limited field as has been the dispatch that is said to have broken the English cabinet. But the national temperament interposes obstacles in the way of the most accurate work. The public demands its news quick. It would rather take an unverified rumor today than to have an editor spend 24 hours getting more accurate information and come in late with his story. The public blames the newspaper press for inaccuracy, and then forces the newspapers to compete under conditions that make accuracy difficult if not impossible.

PASSING OF DIME NOVELS.

F. K. Mathews, chief librarian for the Boy Scouts of America, told the American Booksellers convention at New York a few days ago, that the dime and nickel novel is fast disappearing. Publishers that used to issue these fictions are complaining that their business has been hurt by the picture shows.

Most grown up men have passed through the cheap novel stage as boys. These fictions were secreted in desks at school, in the hay mow, and in remote corners of the attics. The old time large sized folding geographies were highly popular with the boys. They could be erected conspicuously on a desk at school and behind it the pupil could freely read about the adventures of Bloody Bill.

Many of these stories were sound on all the Ten Commandments. Their worst error was in the alluring picture that they gave of lives of roving adventure. They made it seem an off hand matter for a boy to live by luck and deeds of daring. There always seemed to be a purse of money or a gold mine lying around loose. Life at home on the farm looked humdrum after these golden pages.

If the dime novel is disappearing, it is probably because the modern boy is bright enough to see through them. These marvellous tales of fourteen year olds able to perform tasks that would daunt bold and resourceful men, are too much of a fairy story. Even a seventh grader may be inclined to scoff at them.

Probably a lot of the time that used to go into reading these thrillers is today given by the youngsters to the baseball news. Also many of the popular writers of boys' books, whose work is received in good libraries and welcomed to the family book shelf, are pretty close to the thriller order. The time has gone by when the boys will sit down and peruse the Rollo books. It is a wise parent that can distinguish between morbid sensationalism and healthful adventure.

MR. COFFIN'S DEATH.

According to the finding of Judge Frederick E. Austin of the First Bristol district court, who presided at the inquest,the death of William A. Coffin of Quincy at the Insane Hospital in Taunton last April was caused by choking and a brutal assault upon the part of some person or persons unknown to the justice between the afternoon of April 17 and his death three days later. During this time the unfortunate man was an inmate of the hospital, constantly under the care of an attendant or attendants. As indicated in the exclusive account of the finding in Thursday's Ledger Judge Austin was unable to fix the responsibility for the crime upon any specific individual or individuals.

To find out who the guilty party or parties may be is the task of the district attorney of Bristol county, whose duty it is to make a thorough investigation and seek to bring the guilty one to justice. This is not the proper time to urge the district attorney to do his duty, for it is unthinkable that he will fail to act in view of the inquest finding. Quincy is confident that an earnest attempt will be made to see to it that the killing of one of its citizens shall not go unpunished. If the proper officials are derelict in their duty then this city should take vigorous action. Until then Quincy can afford to wait patiently.

Christopher Columbus, fined $20 in the district court Thursday for violation of an auto regulation did not even have an opportunity to try his famous egg stunt on the court.

If Przemysl is really captured it may be hoped that the Germans will take advantage of their opportunity to insert a few more vowels into the name.

The worst has happened: Diminutive San Marino has hurled its declaration of war right into the teeth of the Dual Monarchy.

The letter writing campaign of city officials is on again.

The June brides are with us, bless 'em.

IMMERIATE AID.

The appeal of the Associated Charities in behalf of the unfortunates in the city should meet with an immediate and generous response. Rev. F. W. Perkins, president of this noble organization, sets forth the pressing need of financial aid to carry on the work it has assumed. Its resources have been strained to the limit, caring for over 200 cases in March, 200 in April and May bids fair to show a similar record. The cases needing relief are unusual, arising, in most cases, from temporary unemployment. As Mr. Perkins well says, "Their distress is not their fault, our common generosity is their only refuge." He reminds the people that they would gladly have contributed to a public relief fund and he asks: "Will you not give now?" The appeal is less spectacular, but the need is just as real. "Help us," he urges, "as an act of common brotherliness to keep self-respecting men and women, who cannot get work, from becoming city paupers." The very earnestness of his appeal is prof of the great necessity that presses upon the Associated Charities to relieve the distress of which they have intimate knowledge? Shall they appeal in vain? Let the answer be an emphatic negative in the shape of checks and money from those who are able to give liberally and also from those who can only help a little. Let the aid be promptly given, remembering that he gives twice who give quickly.—Lynn Item.

A WAR PROPHET.

Block, who 20 years ago wrote a monumental work to prove that war was becoming imposible, has been a butt for much ridicule since last August, yet much has occurred to justify him. He did not deny that Europe might plunge into war, but he held that he results hoped for would not be realized, and that each side would reach bankruptcy instead of victory. It is still to be proved that he was wrong, and he has ben vindicated in his prediction in naval warfare of a return to the conditions of barbarism. In his day the submarine was not yet in actual use, though submarines are allowed for, and are to be taken as included when he says that in so ferocious a war as the next would be merchant ships would be sunk with passengers, crews and cargoes as a means of cutting the communication and paralyzing the comerce of the enemy. —Milford Gazette.

SUMMER SLIP COVERS.

Making Them at Home Saves Much Financial Outlay.

This is an excellent time to get the summer slip covers made, for dressmaking will probably be at its height just at the time they will be needed. Making slip covers at home is a most economical procedure, for well made slip covers are usually rather high priced when ordered from a good upholsterer. No special skill is required for the making of such covers, but a great deal of patience and care will be essential. No sketchy fitting or sewing may be tolerated and the finished effect must be distinctly tailored. Choosing slip covers is like choosing rugs or pictures—one makes selection for a lifetime, so good material of substantial weave and attractive color should be sought, and it will be wise to purchase several yards more than the estimated need, so that new chairs added to one's collection later may be covered.

Linen in tan or striped green and tan is delightfully cool for summer slip covers and all edges should be bound with green cotton braid which comes for the purpose. Plain tan linen is liked best by some housekeepers. In some rooms cretonne slip covers will be charming. English drawing rooms are almost invariably slip covered in flower chintz during the summer months, and the effect with light muslin curtains and plenty of fresh flowers about is delightful. A winter bedroom done in pink may be changed to blue or green in summer by fresh slip covers, curtains and bed cover of cretonne.

Cut a pattern for every slip cover first. For this pattern an old sheet or strong wrapping paper may be used—and the tape measure should not be spared, for guesswork is not to be commended in making well tailored slip covers for a formal room. Pin the paper pattern over chair or lounge just as the slip cover is to go, then cut out your material. Snap fasteners are better than buttons and buttonholes, for they prevent gaping and sagging of the fabric. Make long bags also for the portieres and snap fasten them together at the top, between the hooks of the portieres.

DR. ANDERSON SEEKS DIVORCE

Alleges Desertion and Abusive Treatment

Dr. John H. Anderson, has filed a petition with the clerk of courts at Dedham, seeking a divorce from his wife, Eva E. Anderson, to whom he was married March 11, 1912. Dr. Anderson alleges in his petition that his wife deserted him and he also charges her with cruel and abusive treatment. The father asks for the custody of a son born Dec. 5 1912.

WORK BY CITY PLANNING BOARD

Mention was made editorially in this paper of the City Planning Board. What is it doing to justify its existence? As far as the general public knows it has been little more than an ornamental board. A number of meetings at which important matters have been discussed have been held, however.

One of the problems which has been studied is a rearrangement of the car tracks in City square near the public fountain. It is reported that in the very near future the Board will be heard from in a recommendation to the City Council that the ornamental, and useless, public fountain in City Square be done away with. The Massachusetts Cattle Commissioners will not allow it to be used as a public drinking fountain by animals and the State Board of Health will not allow the use of a public dipper by human beings. The State Board of Health, however, will allow a bubble fountain for the use of the public. Room in City square is too valuable it is argued to take up so much space with a large fountain which can not be used.

If the fountain were removed and a small bubble fountain erected the additional space could be thrown into the street. It would then be possible to move the car tracks in front of the Hancock House property to the east. This would not only straighten the street car line but give some much needed room between the car tracks and the sidewalk in front of the Hancock House property, it is pointed out.

Another matter which the Planning Board has been considering is a public waiting room in City square and on this proposition the Board is working with a special committee of the City Council. It is understood that the Board and special committee have reached a solution of the problem and that they will shortly make a report to the council with recommendations. Just what their plans are in this respect are not made public, although it is rumored that they will recommend that an addition be erected at the rear of City hall, in which will be located a public waiting room.

ENJOY GENUINE CORNISH DINNER

The Women's Guild of Christ church held an all day sewing and business meeting at the home of Mrs. Archibald McLeod, Washington street, on Thursday. The hostess served a Cornish dinner, which was greatly enjoyed by those present who know and appreciate the value of genuine Cornish pastry.

Plans have been made to hold these meetings at the homes of the members of the guild throughout the summer. They afford a most excellent opportunity to increase the efficient work of the guild for the church and parish and are inspirational, full of good will, earnestness of purpose and hearty cooperation by rector and people.

Government Experts State Is Little Danger In Frozen Fish

WEEKLY MARKET REVIEW

Local market prices for fish and meats do not differ materially from last week. The market however is not so well supplied with fresh fish so that most kinds bring more money. Salmon, without which no July Fourth dinner would be called complete, is very plentiful, but there is but little demand for it at the present time, with the result that prices are much lower than usual. Native halibut continues high as a rule owing to the small receipts. Bluefish and mackerel have also advanced slightly in price owing to the small receipts.

The holiday demand for lobsters has left the market a little bare of chicken lobsters, but the large ones are plenty enough. As this week practically marks the end of the lobster shipments from Nova Scotia until the season opens about the middle of December, it means that the supply will be drawn from the storage cars. Lobsters can be taken during the present month at Halifax, N. S., but the long distance from Boston, makes large shipments from this point unlikely as few consignments would come through in good shape, and profits at best are not large on lobsters

Speaking of fish recent investigations carried on by the Department of Agriculture appear to indicate that the prejudice against the eating of fish, especially frozen fish because of alleged danger of ptomaine poisoning is quite unfounded. A partial decomposition of either fish or meat may result in formation of certain substances that cause digestive troubles. These substances are popularly known as ptomaines, although many of them have not yet been fully studied and their nature determined. There is no reason, however, for assuming that there is any more likelihood of ptomaines in fish than in meat. The new process of preserving fish by freezing glazing, and cold storage make it as safe an article of food as meat.

Some objection is also made by housekeepers to keeping fish in refrigerators with milk and other foods on account of the fishy odor that is transmitted to these foods. Fish can be kept in refrigerators without affecting other foods if they are first put in a tin vessel with a tightly fitting lid. As a matter of fact, however, fish should be eaten as soon as possible after it has been received from the retailer. They should not be allowed to soak in wafer, as a certain amount of their food value is thus dissolved. Instead they should be thawed slowly in an ice box and cooked as soon as this process is completed. When frozen fish is to be thawed in a refrigerator containing other food susceptible to odors they should first be put in a tightly closed tin bucket or kettle.

In spite of the cold weather early spring vegetables continue to be very plentiful and very reasonable as well. Lovers of vegetables need not deny themselves for it is very doubtful if they will ever be any cheaper than at present. A greater part of the vegetables in the market today are Southern or hot-house grown but the season for native vegetables is very near at hand. Then the prices will naturally rise a little until the markets become overloaded when prices will drop. The vegetables in the market today even if Southern grown are very fine.

It is hardly necessary to mention the various kinds of vegetables for there is an abundance of all kinds with the exception of peas. There are of course some peas but the cold weather has set them back and they are not over and above plentiful and what there are in the markets are rather too high for most pocketbooks.

Fruit of all kinds is also plentiful and reasonable, in fact it is so cheap as to almost be a drug on the market. However, there are various ways of serving fruit and it makes a delicious dessert, aside from being very appetizing for between meal eating.

Meats vary but little in prices from a week ago and the demand is light. Glancing through the markets one finds that one can buy rump roasts at 22 and 25 cents a pound, fancy pot round at 22 cents, rib roasts at 20 cents.

Steaks are also considerably lower. For instance rump steak is selling for 35 cents, sirloin at 28 cents, top of round for 28 cents and hamburger at 15 cents.

Fresh shoulders are marked at 14 cents and smoked shoulders at 12 cents, corned beef at 12 and 16 cents according to the kind desired. Pork to roast is 25 cents, pork chops 20 cents and lamb chops 25 cents. Here is given almost every variety in the meat line and variety enough to please the most fastidious.

As for butter, cheese and eggs they remain about the same. Fine creamery butter is selling for 32 cents and eggs are as cheap as at any time thus far this season. So plentiful are eggs that many of the wholesalers are putting them in cold storage, until such time as prices shall advance.

Rev. Dr. Perry of Brookline has been secured as the speaker at the graduation exercises of the High school, Wednesday, June 30.

UNCONSCIOUS AFTER FALL

William T. Raymond of Greenwood street, a Wollaston milk dealer, was found unconscious on the tracks on Farrington street shortly after 11 o'clock Thursday evening. A bicycle was near him on the street. While he was being treated he was asked if he had fallen from the wheel and he nodded his head.

Raymond was found by people who were passing. They informed Patrolman Avery and he took him to the home of Dr. W. C. Curtis. Dr. Curtis was out and Dr. E. R. Johnson and Dr. E. D. Whitehouse were summoned They found a bad gash over the right eye and believe internal injuries will develop. He was taken to his home.

It is thought that the rear wheel of his bicycle caught in the rail or struck the edge of a paving, causing the fall.

BUSINESS MEETING.

A short business meeting was held after the weekly prayer meeting at the Wollaston Baptist church Thursday evening. The meeting was to act on the applications of 28 who seek to join the church. Some of these join by letter from other churches and some by confession of faith. Twelve of the applicants will probably be received next Sunday, and the remainder at future meetings, after baptism.

Nothing new has developed in relation to the gymnasium which it is proposed to build in connection with the church. This matter is in the hands of the trustees, and is expected to assume definite shape soon.

THIS YEAR'S BUILDING BOOM BIGGEST EVER

Number of Permits is 428 With Value of $658,872

Quincy has experienced a building boom this year that far surpasses any other year in the history of the city. The Ledger has published from week to week the number of building permits issued at the office of the inspector of buildings, as well as making special mention of large buildings.

It will be surprising to many, nevertheless, to learn that for the five months ending June 1, this department issued 428 building permits, the aggregate value of work contemplated by the permits being $658,872. The corresponding period last year was also an active one but nothing as compared to this year. During the same period in 1914 there were 304 permits issued the value of the work contemplated being $481,909. It will be seen therefore that this year is $176,963 ahead of last year.

In the matter of dwelling houses alone this year the estimated value is $477,570 against $329,540 for the corresponding period last year. Another class of buildings which shows a large increase over last year is mercantile building. Last year the estimated value was $22,300 against $75,975 this year. The following table shows the number of permits issued each month in 1914 and 1915 together with the value of the buildings contemplated by the permits.

JOHN BARRYMORE STARS.

Kincaide's Theatre Presents Strong Bill.

An unusually entertaining bill was put on at Kincaide's theatre Thursday for the balance of the week. The leading vaudeville act is Bush Bros. acrobatic comedians. In this act the stage is set to represent a battleship. Ahe act is startling in the extreme and is full of comedy situations. Then there is Berri & Wilheim who delight with singing and impersonations and Mack & Stillwell, skilled in piano playing and singing.

Heading the pictures is the comedy photoplay, adapted from the famous stage version, entitled ""Are You a Mason?" John Barrymore, prince of comedians and well known to theatre goers, stars in this conglomeration of laughter. The twenty-second episode in "The Exploits of Elaine" maintains the same remarkable standard established in the preceding installments of Mr. Reeve's masterpiece.

KEEPS TRAMPS AWAY.

Is your place marked? Many in town wish they knew the secret to keep the tramps away. One merchant in town has found the secret and he is not bothered any more. Some time ago he was washing his windows and he found two words written on the side of one of his show windows. He washed them off and the next day he was flooded with men asking for something to eat. He went out and wrote the two words again and he has not seen a man since. The two words were "Duck it."—Milford Cabinet.

WILSON RIGHT SAY DIPLOMATS

Approve Course of President In Mexican Affairs

OFFICIALS ARE INTERESTED

Statement Sent to All Rebel Leaders Calls Upon Them to Settle Their Differences Quickly and Establish a Government That the United States Can Recognize

Washington, June 4.—News of how President Wilson's demand on the leaders of the various military factions in Mexico for prompt restoration of peace is being received by them was awaited with intense interest in official and diplomatic quarters.

The president's statement, which was sent to Generals Carranza, Villa, Zapata and others, publicly called upon them to settle their differences quickly and establish a government which the United States can recognize. The president warned them that failure to do so "within a very short time" would constrain the United States "to decide what means should be employed" to save the Mexican people from further devastations of internal warfare.

The communication was interpreted by officials, diplomats and Mexicans to mean that the United States would bring pressure to bear first to unite the factions in the choice of a provisional president. Failing in that, the United States would accord its active support to the elements that did agree. Possibility of ultimate intervention was considered. That would result, however, only in the event of a reign of anarchy which the Mexicans themselves were unable to remedy. Speculation continued today as to what the American government meant by lending its active moral support "to some man or group of men, if such may be found in an effort to ignore, if they cannot unite, the warring factions of the country."

The official explanation was that the United States heretofore had maintained neutrality as between the factions, but now was preparing to choose between them or to give its support to those elements in the existing factions which gave most promise of success. The United States would aid the chosen elements by issuing an embargo on arms preventing the shipment of war munitions and cutting off their other means of support to the factions which ignored the demand for peace.

Distribution of American Red Cross relief supplies has begun in Monterey. Consul General Hanna reported that one car of corn, one car of beans and a car of flour had arrived. The people are not allowed to buy more than three pounds of either at one time. The Red Cross will push on supplies to other interior points as transportation facilities are restored.

Five persons, nationality unreported, were killed in a raid by Mexicans on Querobabi Tuesday night. State department dispatches from Nogales say that after looting the town the raiders burned five railway bridges.

A Vera Cruz dispatch, dated June 1, says the crowd gathered there Monday to buy the daily food supply was informed the government's store was exhausted.

SALUTES MEMORIAL DAY

Cruiser Washington Fires Twenty-One Guns and Carranza Battery Replies

Washington, June 4.—Rear Admiral Caperton cabled the navy department that when his flagship, the armored cruiser Washington, at anchor in Vera Cruz harbor, fired a salute of twenty-one guns in honor of Memorial day a similar salute promptly boomed from a Carranza battery ashore.

On being informed that the Mexicans had saluted in honor of the American Memorial day, Admiral Caperton said, he sent an officer ashore to express his thanks for the courtesy.

FILES IMMUNITY PLEA

Based on Testimony Billard Gave At New Haven Hearings

New York, June 4.—By permission of the federal court a plea of immunity was filed by John L. Billard to the indictment charging him and twenty former and present New Haven railroad directors with criminal violation of the anti-trust law.

Billard claims immunity from prosecution because he gave testimony before the grand jury and the interstate commerce commission. These are practically identical contentions with those contained in his former plea of abatement, which was denied by Judge Grubb.

The court set next Wednesday for the appearance of Edward D. Robbins to hear judgment on his motion for immunity.

RIOTS AT TOKIO

Anti-Government Mass Meeting Is Cause of Disorders

Tokio, June 4.—The holding of an anti-government mass meeting in Tokio resulted in serious disturbances. Many arrests were made, and the manifestos issued by the organizers of the meeting were confiscated.

Reinforcements of police were sent everywhere throughout the city.

The resolution introduced in the house of representatives by the opposition, expressing lack of confidence in the present administration, was rejected by a vote of 133 to 232.

Extreme disorder marked the session. All the members of the cabinet were in their seats. Premier Okuma and Foreign Minister Kato defended the recent negotiations with China, and K. Hara, M. Inukai and H. Ogawa attacked them.

Hoots, jeers and wordy altercations interrupted the speeches, but the ovations for Premier Okuma and Minister Kato smothered the cries of the opposition.

PREDICTS EXTRA SESSION

Cummins Thinks Wilson Wants Congress to Share His Burdens

Seattle, June 4.—Senator Cummins of Iowa, in a statement, predicted President Wilson would call a special session of congress by September.

"I do not believe the president will care to assume entirely the cares and responsibilities and problems of our international relations, but that he will be glad to divide the burden with congress," said Cummins.

"The policy pursued by the president in our relations with Europe during the war," the senator continued, "has my hearty approval. The people of the United States do not want war and do not intend there shall be war, but they do intend that the rights of neutral nations shall be observed, and if they are not they believe measures should be taken to make their protest effective.

"There are means of doing this without going to war."

NEW HAVEN ROAD SHOWS GOOD GAIN

Net Income For Ten Months Amounts to $1,214,223

Boston, June 4.—As against a deficit of $1,108,809.93 for the ten months of the fiscal year ending April 30, 1914, the report of the New Haven issued for the corresponding time this year, shows a net corporate income of $1,214,223.62.

This shift is due largely to the increase in rates and the era of economy which has been put into effect by the management, and is generally regarded as a hopeful sign for the future.

For the month of April, 1914, the deficit of the New Haven was $238,180.15, as against a net income for the same month this year of $357,530.69.

A noticeable feature of the report is the increase in the operating income of the road for the ten months of last year ending April 30, as against the same period this year. The railway operating income for these ten months of last year was $12,065.31, as against $14,112,378.29 this year. The operating revenues for ten months of last year were, however, $55,969,519.87, as against $53,296,467.95 this year, or a decrease of $2,673,051.82.

SON IS ACCUSED

Body of Hopkins, Long Missing, Found In Shallow Grave

Gloucester, Mass., June 4.—Three bullet wounds were found in the body of Charles F. Hopkins, which was discovered buried in a shallow grave in West Gloucester, and his son, Drew Hopkins, with whom he was last seen, was arrested, charged with murder. Two of the bullet wounds are in the head, one behind the left and the other behind the right ear.

Drew Hopkins is the first person to be charged with murder by the Gloucester police in twenty-eight years. All efforts to obtain information from him have failed. His father has been missing for four months, and the police were baffled by the disappearance. Several times during this period they sought information from the son, but each time he insisted that he knew nothing of what had happened to his father.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 4.—The submarine K-8, in battle practise off San Pedro, hit the monitor Cheyenne, moving at an unknown speed, at a range of 4000 yards with two torpedoes out of a possible two, it was learned.

The navy trophy for perfect scores in battle practise now is held by the H-1.

NEGRO GIVEN TEN YEARS IN PRISON

Faints in Court When Sentenced on $8 Theft

Washington, Penn., June 4.—When Alfred Black, a Washington negro, heard Judge McIlvaine sentence him to the western penitentiary for not more than ten years and not less than six, he threw up his hands and fell unconscious to the floor of the courtroom. Black had pleaded guilty to stealing $8 from a grocery store.

The negro was caught in the act of rifling the till of the grocery store and admitted taking $8, which was found in his possession. The district attorney showed that Black had been previously convicted of numerous offenses, and the court told him that public safety demanded that he be locked up for a few years.

QUINCY LOSES TRACK MEET BY 8 POINTS

Brockton Too Much For High School Boys

TRACK MEET SUMMARY.

	Brockton Points	Quincy Points
100-dash	4	5
220-dash	4	5
440-run	9	0
880-run	5	3
Mile-run	6	3
High Jump	3½	5½
Broad Jump	6	3
Shot Put	2	7
Totals	39½	31½

The track meet of the Brockton and Quincy High school teams of the South Shore league at Merrymount oval Thursday afternoon returned Brockton a winner by 39½ points to 31½ points. It was Brockton's meet without much question, the win being undoubtedly due to better preparation.

"Kid" Williams in Mile.

The prettiest race of the day was the mile run, won by Anderson of Brockton, with Dennehey of Quincy second. Anderson took the lead and held it consistently the entire distance. Trailing him and running well was Dennehey who lost by about five yards. Ball and Lewis of Brockton fought it out for third place, the former winning after a spurt expected from a 440 yard man. A feature of the event was the performance of Williams, an 85 pound Quincy freshmen. In the pink of condition he left the tape with the bunch. When the leaders split the men into two divisions he tacked onto the second and his baby strides made him the center of attraction of the trio. He finished the distance, showing courage and possibilities through his work. Hunt had to drop out because of poor condition.

Paul Larkin took the dash events, in good time. He and Smith of Quincy and Johnson of Brockton qualified in the second trials, while Grady, Kennedy and Dennison, all of Brockton, qualified in the first trials, beating Desmond, Minnehan and Burgin of Quincy. Larkin and Grady ran a pretty race in the finals, the former finishing several feet ahead.

In the 220 Larkin secured a remarkable start. Fully five feet ahead when the bunch left the mark he led them to the tape by nearly that distance. He secured ten points for Quincy.

Browne Flops Near Finish.

Flatley of Brockton had no trouble taking the quarter. For most of the distance however it looked as though Whet Browne was to come through. He jumped into the front at the start, ran fast until within 40 yards of the finals and then dropped out, unable to stand the pace. Flatley trooped over a winner, trailed by two of his team mates. Jepson of Quincy died on the first half, his attempt to catch Browne being too much for him.

O'Brien Disqualified.

O'Brien, who took second place in the 880 yard run lost his position through elbowing and cutting. He was disqualified by Inspector Estey. Hunt who finished third jumped to second. No one finished to fill third place.

The shot put was run off under the new schedule, no put being declared if a man left the ring until the measurement was taken. Several suffered. O'Donnell and Richmond of Brockton were tied for second place.

Bob Davis Wins

In the high jump Bob Davis of Quincy cleared 5ft. 2in. Sample winner of the broad jump was second. Crosscup and Roach, both of Quincy, tied for third. Elliott of Brockton broke the bar on his second try and a new one had to be provided.

What form the team showed, but little at that, is the result of the efforts of Mr. Paulson of the faculty, coach, who has been assisted by Mr. Thomson of the faculty. The men met with a poor response and some performances were unexpected. The summary:

100-yards dash—First Heat, won by Grady; Kennedy second; Dennison, third; all of Brockton. Time 11 1-5s.

220 yard dash—won by Larkin of Quincy; Moncewicz of Brockton, second; Grady of Brockton, third. Time 24 2-5s.

440 yard run—won by Flatley, Geilich, second; Knight, third. All of Brockton. Time 61s.

880 yard run—won by Moncewicz of Brockton; Hunt of Quincy second. Time 19 2-5s.

Broad Jump—won by Sample of Brockton, 18 ft. 3 in.; Crosscup of Quincy, second, 18 ft. 2 in.; Elliott of Brockton, third, 17 ft. 10 1-4 in.

12 lb. Shot Put—won by Crosscup of Quincy, 31 ft. 8 in.; O'Donnell of Quincy and Richmond of Brockton, tied for second with 30 ft. 7 1-2 in.

INVADERS HOLD THEIR POSITION

ENTRENCHED AT MONTE NERO

Advance Continues Under Great Difficulties as Heavy Rains Have Made It Impossible to Ford River—Tolmino Is Now Menaced From the Rear—Permysl Again In Austro-German Hands After One of the Greatest Battles In History of World—Losses Will Reach Int Hundreds of Thousands

London, June 4.—Austrian troops have made repeated efforts to dislodge the Italian forces which have succeeded in establishing themselves on Monte Nero ridge, across the Isonzo river, along the front north of the gulf of Triest. According to advices reaching London, the Italians are still in possession of the ridge.

The advance of the italians across the Isonzo has been accomplished in the face of unusual difficulties. In consequence of heavy rains it was impossible to ford the Isonzo except for detachments of cavalry, whose horses swam across the river. Engineers, protected by artillery, constructed pontoon bridges for the infantry.

Once the troops had reached the further bank of the river, still greater difficulties were encountered. The rain had transformed the mountain paths into beds of swift running streams. Water pouring down the mountain sides uprooted trees and obstructed progress at every turn. The few mountain bridges left by the Austrians were carried away by the floods. Rest for the troops was impossible as the mountain sides were too exposed, while the valleys, knee deep in water, were unsuitable for camping places. Thick fog hung over the whole region, making it impossible to see for any distance.

Progress was slow but the inavders made their way up the mountain side, taking with them heavy artillery, ammunition and transports with supplies. They occupied Drozenaca, Cosec, Karfreit and other smaller villages below Monte Nero, and finally obtained possession of the ridge.

Monte Nero dominates the whole Friuli valley. Possession of this ridge enables the Italians to menace Tolmino from the rear. This town, together with the batteries recently constructed on Santa Maria and Santa Lucia hills, presents one of the most formidable obstacles to an Italian advance across the Isonzo at that point.

Capture of Permysl

Permysl, the prime objective of the first phase of the new Austro-German campaign in Galicia, has been captured by the Teutonic allies. The battle for its possession was one of the greatest in the history of the world and more men were engaged than in any previous single operation.

The victory has been won at tremendous cost to both sides, the casualties figuring in the hundreds of thousands. This success will restore Austrian prestige, which was seriously shaken when the Russians captured the fortress in March last.

While the importance of the feat, which carried with it the retirement of the Russians from their position of advantage in the Carpathians, is not to be minimized in the least it must be understood that this does not mean that a decisive victory has been won.

The Russians apparently have been outfought at one point of their long line but their main armies remain intact. So long as this is so Austria and Germany must maintain great forces in this part of the theatre of war to meet the pressure that the Russians will continue to exert. We are likely to hear claims that Russia has "collapsed," but of course they are entirely without justification.

The Russians have been thrown out of a part of Austrian territory which they have held for some time, and they apparently have been pretty badly punished, but they are dogged fighters and a forced retirement does not destroy their fighting capacity.

Violent Fighting Near Lorette

Further violent infantry fighting occurred in the contested region near Lorette. The French war office states that no advantage was won by either side in this engagement. Except for slight progress for the allies in the maze of trench works named "The Labyrinthe" the situation along the western front is unchanged.

Charges Against British Cabinet

An unexpected turn was given to the first meeting of the British coalition parliament when Ginnell, a Nationalist, attacked Premier Asquith and the rest of the government, charging them with lacking "characters."

O'Brien, another Irish member, raised the question of home rule, or rather what had become of the Irish ministry.

None of the new cabinet, including Mr. Asquith and Arthur J. Balfour, who succeeds Winston Churchill as first sea lord, was present to meet the allegations. They were necessarily absent because until a new law is passed authorizing them to hold office without re-election, they cannot attend parliament in an official capacity. Evidently it is not to be plain sailing for the new ship of state.

Small Gain at Gallipoli

The following official communication concerning the operations against the Dardanelles was made public at London:

"During the first of June close hand-to-hand fighting occurred on our northern front. At the northern section of our position two saps of the enemy were rushed by our men with the intention of filling them in, but a heavy bombing checked the work and one party had to fall back. The other party still holds on to its position between our firing line and that of the enemy.

"The action necessitated artillery support to which the enemy replied vigorously, regardless of expense. Throughout the fighting the enemy again lost heavily.

"On the southern sector, the Turks made repeated attacks during the night of June 1-2 against the French right, and twice reoccupied a fort captured May 29. On both occasions the enemy was driven out and the new French front remains intact.

"On the British front all was quiet."

Official announcement was made in London that a British submarine had torpedoed a large German transport in the Sea of Marmora. This submarine is said to be one of the several which have made their way through the Dardanelles and are now operating in the Sea of Marmora.

THE ROUMANIAN DEMAND

Wants Russian Land as Price For Entering War With Allies

Roumania has made territorial demands on Russia as payment for her entrance into the war on the side of the allies.

Reports reached London from Rome that not only does Roumania want assurances from the allies that she can retain all Transylvania territory her troops occupy, but that she want Russia to cede to her at least part of Russian Bessarabia. King Victor Emmanuel, the Rome dispatches said, has offered to mediate between Russia and Roumania in an effort to reach an amicable understanding that will insure Roumania's participation.

Diplomatic circles here received the reports with considerable surprise, as Bucharest dispatches for several days have indicated Roumania was satisfied with the allies' guarantees that if she marched against Austria she would be allowed to retain all territory she occupied. The Rome dispatches indicated a new development in the negotiations that may at least delay Roumania's entry.

Bessarabia is one of the richest of the Russian southeastern provinces, and separates Roumania from Russia. Its population is 50 percent Roumanian, and for several years Roumanian diplomats have cast longing eyes on it.

IS DELAYING MIGRATION

Ice Blockade on Newfoundland Coast Endangers Shipping

St. John's, June 4.—The unusual persistence of the ice blockade of the Newfoundland coast is delaying the annual migration of fishermen and their families to Labrador and is endangering those vessels which have ventured out.

The mail steamers have not yet been able to make a trip up the northeast coast. About 1200 schooners, mostly little fishing smacks, ordinarily participate in the expedition.

Searchers Find Body In Stream

Bangor, Me., June 4.—The body of Andrew Murphy, 69, was found in the stream near his home in Milford by searchers. The finding of his clothes at the shore led to a search of the stream. Ill health is thought to have unbalanced his mind.

"TEENEY" BROWN IS SANTA CLAUS

Passes Batter in Sixth And Gives Cranch Game

RESULTS LAST NIGHT.
Adams 6, Coddington 1.

"Teeney" Brown, pitcher for the Wollaston, played the part of Santa Claus Thursday afternoon when he passed a man in the sixth inning with the bases being full and sent over the run which gave Cranch a 1 to 0 win. It was the first time this has occurred in grammar school circles this season. The bases were filled through passes and errors. When the fourth ball was called there were two strikes and three balls on the batter. The score by innings:

Batteries—Olson and Broberg; Brown and Stewart.

The Adams contingent beat the Coddingtons 6 to 1 in a loosely played game Thursday afternoon. Russell was in the box for four innings and Deacon for two. The score:

Batteries—Russell, Deacon and Trumbull; McDonald and Higgings.

SPORTING COMMENT

A tendency to make fun of visitors who were competing against Quincy at the oval Thursday was noticeable, particularly in the shot put. Such an attitude is to be regretted. As a matter of fact those who were given the "Ha ha" displayed better knowledge of shot putting than the entire Quincy representation. Perhaps if some of those who stood on the side lines would get out and practice and do something to try and bring their school into its proper place in athletics they would appreciate form. That Quincy did not win the meet was not the fault of the coaches but the pupils who haven't gimp enough to do their bit and train.

"Bull Moose" Brown of Wollaston and Daniel O'Connell, students at Syracuse University, are home for the summer. They reached their respective bailiwicks last week. Brown is in the pink of condition and looks every bit the athlete he is.

The Norwood Press of Norwood and the Fore Rivers play at Merrymount Park Saturday afternoon.

The Willard A. C. would like to hear from 17 and 18 year old teams of the city. The challengers can arrange it with Manager R. Pangraze, 22 Willard street.

POPULAR NOVEL DEPICTED.

The first of a series of moving picture shows with the new church machine was given in the Wollaston Unitarian parish house, Wednesday evening, when George Barr McCutcheon's "Brewster's Millions" was shown in five reels. The novel lost none of its interest by being turned into a motion picture and all of the 215 scenes held the constant attention of the audience. Preceding the feature film, war pictures and other current events were displayed. Between the parts vocal solos by Mr. Murphy accompanied by Mr. Bullock were enjoyed. A number of other high class photo plays are booked for the near future and it is expected that a respectable amount will be realized by the society.

COMPETITIVE DRILL.

F. of A., of Lowell and Abigail Adams lodge of Quincy, will take place Sunday, June 6, in Hibernian hall, near Dudley street Roxbury. The judges will be Frank Flowers of Quincy, Mr. Gorman of Fitchburg, Mr. Robblee of Waltham and Mr. Magee of Natick. Cordial invitations to members and friends have been extended. Delegations plan to leave Quincy at 12.15 and 12.45.

CATHOLIC CLUB'S ANNUAL BANQUET

Fr. M. J. Owens is Guest of Honor

The annual banquet and reception to the retiring and new officers of the Quincy Catholic club took place Thursday evening in the rooms of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, with nearly 100 present.

The special guest of the evening was Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor of St. John's parish and director of the organization. In a short address he congratulated the society on its work.

The speaker was Mrs. Milo Burke, president of the Twentieth Century club of Brockton. Accompanying her was Miss Nellie Finn, a past president of that club. Mrs. Burke talked on club work and gave the members a comprehensive summary of her wide experience in that line of work.

The entertainment program of the evening consisted of readings by Mrs. Mabel Whenman Crane of Malden and vocal solos by Miss Angela McCarthy who rendered "A Dream So Fair," by Hawley and "On the Shore" by Neiglinger.

The entire program was well received and appreciated by those present. A short business meeting preceded the banquet at which reports of various officers were read. The affair was in charge of the officers, headed by Pres. Mrs. William Reardon.

SERVICES FOR MR. SHEEHAN

The funeral of Thomas Sheehan, who died at his home Wednesday morning, was held this morning and was attended by a large delegation of relatives and friends of the deceased. There were also delegations present from the various societies of which the deceased was a member. A requiem high mass was celebrated at St. Mary's church at nine o'clock by Rev. James J. Mooney. The musical portion of the mass was under the direction of Mrs. Mary Reardon. There were many floral tributes. The pallbearers were Thomas Rogan, Peter Gilraine, John Ryan, James King, James Devine and Thomas O'Neill. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

THREE PITCHERS USED IN VAIN

The Hinkies used three pitchers in six innings in a vain endeavor to defeat the Blue Hills Thursday evening in the Twilight league at West Quincy. Bonafini, the Hinkies catcher, split his finger in the second inning and had to retire in favor of Gardiano. The final score was 14 to 6. Patriarch and W. McDonald were in the points for the winners and E. McDonald, Desmond, Sullivan, Bonafini and Gardiano for the losers. Last evening's game counted as two games as the contenders were playing off a postponed game.

"LITTLE GREY SHOP" OPENS.

Original and exclusive, dainty and dignified! What better terms can better describe "The Little Grey Shop" which opens its doors at 1478 Hancock street to the women of Quincy tomorrow afternoon at half after one.

Mme. Helene, creator of those striking and original gowns fashioned upon the chic French or popular American lines, has opened this little Grey Shop for discriminating patrons who are particular in their tastes and at the same time unwilling to pay exhorbitant prices.

It is well worth a visit. Dull restful tones of grey quiet the eye and create a peaceful atmosphere. The shop breathes the artistic tastes and the original touches of Madame whose critical eye has become well trained after many years of painstaking experience.

The Little Grey Shop specializes in hygenic corsets, brassiers, well fitting garments, hosiery, petticoats, original shirt waists and tasty neckwear. The small and insignificant button, often the disfigurement of a well tailored suit receives careful consideration, most buttons being made to order under Madame's original pattern.

Points for Mothers

A Christening Party.

Christening parties usually are not very large ones, since even the fondest young parents can scarcely expect that there are many persons outside of their immediate families who will be deeply concerned in the new baby.

There may be a few friends living at some distance who should be invited rather formally by written invitations, but the grandparents and near relatives need be bidden only over the telephone or verbally.

If you wish to send formal invitations the following would be a correct wording:

Mr. and Mrs. John Brown
Request the Pleasure of Your Company at the Christening of Their Daughter
On Thursday, April 16,
At 4 o'Clock,
37 Bank Street.

The traditional color for a boy baby is blue and for a girl pink. Many mothers, however, prefer to have no touch of color in the little christening outfit for the baby, feeling that white better typifies the purity and innocence of babyhood.

The decorations for the house and for the christening feast, if you are to have one, may be either delicate blue or pink or in white. The choice of most mothers would be delicately tinted flowers rather than all pure white.

The christening should take place in daylight, preferably. If for any reason it is done in any room that is slightly dark and candles are lighted, these should have white shades. If the ceremony is sufficiently elaborate to include music, the most proper music would be cradle songs.

The christening feast should be in no way elaborate. Cake and wine are frequently the only refreshments served.

Story Telling.

All small children prefer to be told a story rather than trouble to read for themselves, and nothing is more delightful when time is at one's disposal than to weave a fairy romance or unfold a tale of heroism to a group of attentive and interested young people. In this way their interest is aroused, and soon when it is impossible for mother or father to sit down and spin these fancies for the children the little hands will open a nearby book, and the boy or girl will search for romance or adventure in the printed pages.

This is a precarious time in the mental development of a child. In this early age it will be determined whether a love of good literature or an interest in "trash" is to accompany the boy or girl through life, for if when young only good books are brought before the children's eyes you can be sure only good books will be read by the youngsters, and once having made the acquaintance of literature of a high order and enjoyed the adventures and romances written by some of the best word painters there will be no incentive to take to cheap, trashy books, for these latter will seem tame and uncouth after a taste for good books is developed.

Give a growing lad all he wants of Robert Louis Stevenson's adventures, of Scott's romances and some of Poe's mystery tales and you will find he will never be tempted to look into the pages of a cheap dime novel or to seek the lure of a love story of the trashy order.

Some children seem to be born with a love of books, and these youngsters instinctively take good care of their treasures.

Respect a Child's Mind.

It is very often an agonizing experience to a child to be discussed in his presence, as if he were not there at all and not to be considered—at any rate, as a person to be considered about what is said in his presence. Then there is the stranger who will ask questions and make comments to a child about his appearance that a grownup would resent with indignation. Not all children like openly expressed admiration; rather do they resent it.

Another type of child is made pert, forward and unattractive by the same treatment. The pity of it is that it is always the child who suffers and not the older people, who cause it all. Does it not seem to you as if we might treat all children with the courtesy and consideration that we show to equals? There have been many examples of children to prove that the secret of good training and decent upbringing lies in being decent to the child.

About Regular Habits.

Wise folks know that all rules are meant to be broken, but it is not safe to let the children find it out too soon. It happens that some grow up without ever finding out, and a hard time of it they have ever after.

With very young children it is essential to have a fixed regularity in the daily routine, if it can possibly be carried out. This is necessary, because it is the only way of getting children into the habit of disposing of the daily necessities in a routine way. In the matter of eating, sleeping and dressing, in putting away toys and clothes, in table manners and in the details of courteous conduct, the routine must be observed, with never an exception. It is apparently the only way of making sure of the habits.

SIXTY FIVE INITIATED

Lodge Skandia Has Big Meeting

Sixty-five were initiated to membership in Lodge Skandia, Vasa Orden, Thursday evening at one of the largest class initiations ever held in the city. Letters of regret were received from 17 others who were unable to be present. Three halls were used in carrying out the program.

The lodge held its business meeting in Protection hall at seven o'clock where they welcomed a large delegation from Enhiget lodge of Brockton. Members and candidates then marched to Alpha hall where they tendered a reception to Grand Master Carl Benson of Concord, N. H., head of the national organization; District Master G. D. Flodstrom of Dorchester head of the state branch, and District Deputy Mrs. Eva Holmberg of Brockton, deputy of the local lodge.

When the degree team of Klyppan lodge of Roxbury took the floor to give an exhibition sword drill fully 500 packed the sides of the hall and balcony. During their drill they formed the letter "S" for Skandia, "K" for Klyppan, and V. O." for Vasa Orden. They then exemplified the initiatory degree.

Speeches by the visitors followed. Mrs. Eva Holmberg presented Lodge Skandia with a large silver loving cup in behalf of the members of Enhiget lodge, as a token of the mutual friendship between the organizations.

Refreshments were served in Union hall. The evening closed with dancing, music being furnished by Johnsen's orchestra.

WILL VISIT POND HOME

Delegations from local branches of the King's Daughters are planning to attend on Saturday the annual donation day of the Pond Home for aged people at Pondville. The day is held yearly under the auspices of the King's Daughters and Sons of Norfolk County. The most convenient train leaves the South station at 11.54 A. M. for Pondville, via Wrentham. There are other trains in the afternoon. It is hoped that the donations from Quincy friends will be as generous as usual. Donations may be sent to Mrs. Thomas Fenno, Wollaston.

This is the only home in the county for aged, worthy people. It was opened thirteen years ago and has cosy accommodations for the seventeen members of the family. Mrs. Eliza N. Hartshorn of Walpole and Alfred Harding of Medfield were among the first to enter the home, and they celebrated their ninetieth birthday on St. Valentine's Day.

The assistance of friends of the home is asked on donation day, for the money and supplies received at that time are an important contribution towards the maintenance.

TRIBULATIONS OF H MEN.

No Class Day For Men On Crew and B. B. Team.

Members of the Harvard crews and of the Varsity baseball team which go to New Haven for their respective contests during Commencement week undergo disadvantages which partially offsets the honor of representing the college; they are unable to attend the class day exercises. To members of the senior class this is particularly hard as they cannot attend the big day of their college career. Huntington R. Hardwick of this city as captain of the baseball team must accompany the squad to New Haven and will be unable to attend his own class day.

OFFICER TAKEN ILL.

NORRIS BLOCK.

Contractors Morgan & Bolt of East Milton have broken ground for this building which for beauty of design and architectural features is said to be unusual. The entire frontage of about 300 feet is of moulded Terra Cotta in a new shade and texture and all glass fronts are of polished plate with prism glass reflectors set in copper over the show windows.

The first appearance of Wollaston on alighting from trains is anything but impressive at present, but the erection of this modern and well designed building will completely remedy this defect as far as the appearance to the left is concerned.

Nearly all of the fifteen stores have been optioned as well as the eight bowling alleys in the basement toward Greenwood avenue. Notwithstanding the fact that it is proposed to change the grade of Beale street, work is progressing on the excavation, and as soon as the grade is established a large force of men will be put on in order that the stores may be occupied in the early fall.

EXCITED ONE ACCUSES JUDGE

The session of the district court today was interrupted by a midly excited individual who accused Judge Avery of putting an attachment on his pay.

The man entered the court room and asked Court Officer Marden if he could see his honor right away. He was escorted to the bench where he made the charge.

"I did not" said Judge Avery, but the man insisted it was so. He then produced a writ bearing the printed name of his honor. When it was explained that the writ was only a notification and that it was not the original paper he left in search of the attorney who made the attachment.

TWO ARE BURIED DEEP UNDER WRECK

Aged Man and Boy In Wagon Struck By Electric Car

ESCAPE SERIOUS INJURY

Henry Dryer, 75 years, and John Shea, his 13 year old grandson, were buried under the wreckage of a wagon which was demolished when struck by a trolley car on Quincy avenue Friday afternoon but both miraculously escaped injury.

The wagon was owned by James Shea of South street, son-in-law of the aged man and the boy, who was driving, was his son. As the wagon turned on to Quincy avenue from Scammel street a large automobile travelling at high speed in the direction of Weymouth whizzed by under the nose of the horse. The animal bolted directly across the track in front of a Quincy bound electric car, carrying Fore River shipyard employees.

The car struck the wagon midships, tipping it upside down and spreading the load of rhubarb in the street. The aged man and boy were buried under the debris. Mr. Shea although shaken up said he was uninjured. The boy was slightly scratched.

QUINCY LOSES TO WELLESLEY

Umpire Earns Enmi y of Local Boys

Quincy High school visited Wellesley Friday afternoon and for the fourth time this season played a team and an umpire. The defeat was by a score of 6 to 3.

O'Neil of Newton who officiated earned the enmity of the Quincyites on his first decision. He called a Wellesley man safe as the short stop threw to first. That baseman dropped the ball, the "ump" wasn't looking and refused to change his decision.

Kulewein made a homer after he had been fairly struck out in the eyes of the fans, but not the umpire. His drive was an unusually long one and went over the tracks beyond the field. Dorley duplicated his performance but the ball hit the rail, bounded back and he was stopped at second. W. McCabe, centre fielder, robbed Quincy of a possible homer when he speared a long drive in deep centre.

It was the feature catch of the game.

Three Quincy men figured in a poor play,—Hultin catching at third, Hamlin who was on second and Bryan who was on third. The runners started forward. Bryan returned, Hamlin didn't see him and Hultin was napping. Both were pinned on the bag and one was out.

The score:

TO CONTRIBUTE TOWARD ORGAN

Word was received at the business meeting of the Young Peoples' society of the Swedish Congregational church Friday evening from the Carnegie fund commission stating that it would contribute the sum of $750 toward the new organ which the church desires to buy, the gift being conditional upon the church raising a similar amount by a certain time.

The announcement was received with great pleasure and steps were immediately taken by the young people to raise funds. It was decided to organize a contest between two teams, the Reds and the Blues. The Reds chose Hazel Johnson as their captain and the Blues Paul Palmgren.

Both teams, are very much interested in the scheme and will start at work immediately to raise funds. It was also planned to hold a mid-summer carnival at the church June 24, and tickets for this were distributed among the young people for sale.

Accident Happens in City Square at 3 O'clock This Morning

John V. McClure of 207 Squantum street lost control of his automobile while passing through City square between 2 and 3 o'clock this morning and before he could regain control the machine ran into one of the iron poles of the street railway near the corner of Hancock and Saville streets. The woman who refused to give her name, received a cut on the hand and McClure received a slight cut on the head.

From what McClure told Officer Galvin, who was on dufy in City square, he had been to Nantasket and was on his way home. He denied that he was running very fast but said as he passed through the square his hand was resting lightly on the wheel, and he thinks that he must have struck a stone or some obstruction in the street for the next intsant he had lost control of the car and it ran to the sidewalk and struck the pole.

QUINCY 425 QUINCY 1910

A CREED FOR AMERICANS.

I believe in the United States, one and indivisible; in her mission as the champion of humanity—as the friend of the weak and distressed; in the singleness, dignity and inviolability of American citizenship; in the validity of our national traditions; in peace with honor; in friendship with all nations that respect our rights; in entangling alliances with none; in reasonable preparations for national defence by sea and land; in shirking no sacrifice needed to hand down to the future the priceless treasures bequeathed to us by the past; in the necessity of keeping the western hemisphere free from the intrusion of European institutions and ambitions; in the capacity of free men for self-government; in the love of home and country, and in the unflinching resolution that government of the people, for the people, by the people shall not perish from the earth.—Chicago Record-Herald.

GERMANS ARE WINNING.

Przemysl has fallen and with it the last delusion that the much heralded hosts of the Czar are any better soldiers than when they were whipped by Japan.

The sympathies of the American people are largely with the Allies. Although we may prate about neutrality of action there is little neutrality of thought. Wherever our sympathies chance to lie it is fairly plain that the Germans have the best of the argument so far. The British were going to do this, the French were going to do that, the Russians were going to do everything and end the war.

But the Germans are still firmly entrenched in Northern France, Constantinople is still in the hands of the Turks, and the Russians have lost Przemysl. Moreover, the British Navy, that mighty force which was to make the world tremble, is doing little. All of which serves as a reminder that the odds are not so much against the Germans and their allies after all.

A FUSSY REGULATION.

The new regulation based on the Interstate Commerce Commission's ruling, that railroad passengers must declare the value of their baggage, is causing a good deal of adverse comment. Large railroad stations are commonly a place of disorderly turmoil at busy times of day. Sometimes it seems impossible to get attention unless a liberal tip is handed out. Imposing new formalities and red tape means simply to pile up duties on overworked baggage men.

The American people have a habit of arriving at the station about ten minutes before train time, and expect to complete all their business in a hurry. To get there a half hour ahead of time impresses them as an interminable wait. It is easy to see how much thought and pains will be given to the declarations of the value of baggage.

This unpopular regulation might serve one possible use, however, if it would lead people to acquire the habit of getting to stations in sufficient season to attend to details with less hurry, flurry, and scurry.

Four hundred and twenty-eight building permits issued in this city during the past five months. This is a record breaker. Now put up your hammer for a while, old croaker.

Although it would be interesting to hear what Mr. Arnold has to say about the Philippines it would also be interesting to hear what he thinks of Quincy after an absence of six years.

President Wilson surely has selected an appropriate time to send an ultimatum to Mexico, the United States being wholly free from any danger of foreign complications.

Lodge Skandia, Vasa Orden, seems to be sinking into insignificance. It initiated only 65 the other night.

The dose which Turkey has been receiving is proving to have been a very bad thing for a sick man.

HAD BEEN DEAD FOR TWO YEARS

Find Body of Unknown Man in Woods

In an advanced state of decomposition and with the roots of nearby trees and shubbery grown through the clothing in such a way as to have made an effectual fastening, the body of a middle aged man was found in the Cohasset woods Friday afternoon. Beside it lay an empty revolver. A revolver near at hand, a bullet wound in the temple and a lodged bullet in the skull pointed to suicide.

Medical Examiner Jones of Quincy and Peterson of Hingham and Undertaker Snow, to whom the body was turned over, agreed that death had occured about two years ago. The man appeared to be 50 years of age, 5 ft. 11 in. in height, and probably weighed about 170 pounds. The clothing was of good quality and heavy. Rubbers covered the shoes. Nothing but small articles were found in the clothes and identification may never be made. John Manuel found the body in the rear of the estate of the late Henry D. Hyde.

LOOKS LIKE TOO MUCH JOHNSON

Prisoner Identified As Hold Up Man

Friday afternoon Capt. McKay of the police department took William Johnson, arrested Thursday on the steps of H. L. Rice's house to the home of Alice Collins on Summit street, Wollaston, where she positively identified him as the man who held her up on Newport avenue the night before and tried to take her wrist bag containing a small sum of money and other articles from her.

Miss Collins was on her way home Thursday evening from City square and when on Newport avenue was approached by a man who attempted to grab her wrist bag. She fought the man off and before he was able to obtain possession of the bag the approach of other people caused him to make his escape. The attempted hold-up was reported to the police, Capt. McKay had a suspicion that Johnson might know something about the hold-up and after court he took him to Miss Collins' home.

Still later in the afternoon word was received from the police of Station 9, Boston that Johnson answered the description of a man wanted by officers of that station and these officers will look him over.

Acting Chief McKay and Patrolman Dineen took Johnson to Boston yesterday. His picture was found in the rogues gallery and the record against him is that he served from four to six years in State prison for having burglar's tools in his possession.

The capture is considered a most important one and Acting Chief McKay complimented Patrolman Dineen at roll call Friday evening.

BURGLAR ALARM CAUSES FUROR

But It Was Only a Clock After All

The violent ringing of a bell at 11 o'clock in the jewelry store of C. F. Pettingill gave Patrolman Riley a bad half hour Friday night and created considerable excitement among passersby. The bell jangled out on the night air as Patrolman Riley passed. He made an immediate examination of the premises and found everything in good order.

He notified police headquarters and Sergt. Larkin phoned Mr. Pettingill. When the latter arrived he thought it was the burglar alarm bell. The store was in good order and an alarm clock with an electric attachment, set for 11 o'clock, was found to have been the cause of the excitement. The similarity of the tones of the bell and the burglar alarm are similar.

WILLARDS LACK PEP.

Errors were the program in the American league game between the Coddington and Willard on the lower Merrymount Park field Friday afternoon, won by the former by a score of 6 to 2. The Willards lacked the pep they exhibited in many of its games. The score by innings:

Willard	1 0 1 0 0 0—2

Batteries—Deacon and Trumbull: Pagnano and DiBona.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

Over 200 school children and citizens attended the first Bird Day exercises ever held in Milton, which took place at Cunningham Park, Thursday afternoon. The children showed such an appreciative interest in the exercises that the observance of each a day will, without doubt be an annual event. Mr. Forbes, of the Brush Hill Bird club acted as chairman and in his words of welcome he made it known that the members of the Bird club and the trustees of the Park were planning to convert their part into a bird sanctuary. Jesse B. Baxter of the trustees welcomed the children to the park and invited them to make a thorough inspection before going home. He also urged them to build bird houses in their own yards.

Mr. Gorst, the famous bird song imitator of Boston then gave some perfect imitations of various birds. It seemed as if every tree concealed a bird, each one giving his song. The songs were most beautiful and the discriminate distinction made between the notes of the various birds was delightful to listen to.

Miss Mabel E. Turner, instructor in school gardening, gave a very interesting talk on the value of certain birds to the farmer and she urged the boys and girls to show their love for birds by caring for them. Dr. Harris Kennedy of the school board instructed the children how they may procure a very inexpensive bird box.

GERENUK.

Some time ago the Smithsonian Institution at Washington announced that it had mounted a large bull moose and placed it in the permanent collection. Now it announces that it has done the same thing with a "gerenuk." What in the world is a "gerenuk?" The Institution describes it as "a peculiar mammal having a long neck and thin legs," and adds that "when cornered it sneaks off at an awkward trot through the bushes, with head and neck stretched out straight in front." Another of its peculiarities is that it "has an odly shaped prehensile upper lip, covered with a tough membrane, enabling it to reach and seize what would be beyond the grasp of other species." From the description it looks as if the "gerenuk" might be another new political party.—Pathfinder.

LOCAL BOYS ON WAY TO STATE CHAMPIONSHIP

Seven Victories And no Defeats Is Tennis Team's Record

The St. Mark's tennis team which defeated Quincy High last season 5 to 0 was defeated by the local team at Southboro Friday afternoon in a whirlwind contest by a score of 3 to 2. The matches were the hardest fought in which Quincy has participated this season.

The St. Mark's team trooped onto the courts with a clean record of a dozen wins and no defeats. Included in their victims were leading "prep" schools of the state—Milton Academy, Worcester Academy and others.

The win gives the Quincy boys a clear road to the state championship, being unbeaten by any school team. It is the seventh straight school victory for Quincy. There were no stars in the contest, all of the local boys playing at their best. All matches which Quincy won went an extra set. The hardest fought match was Barstow and Pfaffmann's who were defeated 9-7, 11-9.

The balance of the Quincy schedule is Huntington school next Tuesday and Newton High next Friday on the Quincy Tennis club courts. It is probable that a match will be arranged with Exeter or Andover before the local school term closes. The scores:

SINGLES.

Favreau, Quincy, beat Rand, St. Mark's, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5.

Crocker, Quincy, beat Sears, St. Mark's, 7-5, 2-6, 9-7.

DOUBLES.

Crocker and Favreau, Quincy, beat Rand and Sears, 7-5, 3-6, 6-2.

Fenno and Chapin, St. Mark's, beat Barstow and Pfaffmann, 9-7, 11-9.

OUTLOOK CLUB GIVES PLAYS

Annual Dramatics Draw Big Audience

A large and appreciative audience greeted the performers at the annual dramatics of the Outlook club held, Friday evening, in Wollaston School hall. Two plays were presented, and in both the actors deserved the highest commendation.

In the first, a one act farce entitled "The Fortunes of War" the honors were carried off by Alan Painten who assisted the Outlook club in this production.

The scene is laid in the sorority room of the Tau Phi Gamma, a college girls' secret society. Dressed as a girl Mr. Painten is initiated into the mysteries of the society.

When he is later discovered it is only by the promise of chocolates, flowers and other pacifiers that he averts the wrath of the fair damsels. Mr. Painten made an attractive girl and added much to the success of the play. In the program his name was twisted to Lana Tanpine, that his identity might not be previously discovered.

In the cast were:

Lucille, president of the Tau Phi Gammas — Freda Klingenhagen

Members of the Tau Phi Gammas

Polly, secretary — Natalie Scott
Flora — Dorothy Brown
Evelyn — Stella Henry
Mildred — Hazel Henry
Miss Durand — Alan Painten

The second, a longer play, was in two acts and was entitled "A Case for Sherlock Holmes." The scene was laid at Deer Head Light on the Maine coast, whither Eugenia Michalford, a bride, had brought her group of bridesmaids.

The two acts, laid in the sitting room of the Whitcomb home, had to do with the adventures of the party. All of the parts were well taken and the difficulty of having a large number of characters on the stage most of the time was well handled. A number of songs and recitations interpolated in the action of the piece added to its interest.

Eugenia Michalford, a bride — Anna Bjorkman
Wilifred Sherman, maid of honor — Marion Snow

Bridesmaids.

Olive Lovering — Mabel Doring
Helen Pinkley — Esther Briggs
Julia Marden — Edna Shay
Ruth Winship — Jennie Kennedy
Estelle Freeman — Priscilla Brackett
Margaret Malory — Alena Kilpatrick
Cyrene Whitcomb, Eugeneia's aunt — Ethel Axberg
Lavinia, age 16 — Mildred Burke

Bewteen the acts candy was sold. The Outlook club is a girls' organization of the Park and Downs church. Its officers are: Miss Freda Klingenhagen, president; Miss Alena Kilpatrick, first vice; Miss Dorothy Brown, second vice; Miss Mabel Stewart, secretary; Miss Daisy Brown, treasurer. Its membership numbers 33.

NEW DEGREE TEAM INITIATE

Many members of the Quincy lodge, N. E. O. P. attended the first initiation conducted by its recently organized uniform degree team in Protection hall Friday night. The degree was exemplified on one candidate. The members were very complimentary.

The team includes Edmund V. Sawin, junior past warden; Mrs. Isabel Sawin, warden; Hoyt Macauley, vice warden; Mrs. Bertha Thompson, chaplain; Mrs. Louise Lanfair, guide; Mrs. D. J. Donahue, guardian; Archie Lightbody, sentinel to junior past warden; W. L. Thompson, sentinel to chaplain; Miss Mary E. O'Neil, Mrs. Amenia E. Lindsay, Miss Agnes Colligan, Miss Theresa McCormick, banner bearers; Charles Lightbody, floor marshall; Alexander S. Kennedy, director of the staff.

The committee in charge was Past Warden Chester I. Brown and Mrs. Bertha Thompson. The staff was organized a few weeks ago and has drilled under the direction of Alexander S. Kennedy, drill master of the staff of John Hancock lodge, I. O. O. F., of Wollaston.

The general public is invited to attend the peace meeting to be held at the Wollaston Unitarian church this evening. There is no admission and everybody will be welcome.

GRIDLEYS ARE LEAGUE CHAMPS

Defeat Mass. Fields By Close Score

AMERICAN LEAGUE GAMES.

Coddington 6, Willard 2.

The Gridley Bryant boys demonstrated superiority over the Massachusetts Fields boys at Merrymount park Frida afternoon when they won 2 to 1 and took the championship of the American league division of the grammar school league. They will play the winner of the Hancock-Montclair game of next Monday night in the world series which will probably start Wednesday evening.

Nearly 1000 men, women and children saw the contest and accompanied their cheering with violent handclapping. The game was full of life and the plays were made in big league fashion.

The game was a pitchers' battle, the entire six innings, during which Crowley substantiated the claim of Principal Johnosn of the school that he was a better box man than Foster Ganzel of the Fields school. Crowley fanned seven men against two by Ganzel. He also figured in seven assists and a double play. In the third inning he threw a man out at third with two men on and pulled himself out of a bad hole. In the fourth inning he choked a man at home, preventing a tie and in the sixth inning he took a pop fly and doubled a man at first for the third out. Ganzel worked hard but was hit frequently.

The only run scored by the Fields was a homer by Morris. His drive beyond left field rolled across Hancock street and was one of the cleanest wallops made on the field this season.

Gridley's runs were scored in the third inning. Carella, Gridley's catcher, on a pretty hit scored a man from second who had been passed. He came in when the Field's third base man let a throw go by.

Umpires French and Robertson had their hands full. French's decision at the plate was not questioned and a close one at first by Robertson was accepted, but the fans protested the double play ruling on the grounds that it was a pop fly with two men on. David Goodspeed, principal of the losers, O. K'd the decision however, since the runner had taken a chance.

He congratulated Principal Johnson and the winning team on the field and wished to congratulate the winners publicly through the Ledger.

The score by innings:

Gridley	0	0	2	0	0	0	—		2

Batteries—Crowley and Carella: Ganzel and Morris.

LAST MEETING OF CABINET

Friday evening in the Boys' Rooms the Boys' Cabinet of the Quincy Y. M. C. A., held its last meeting of the year preceded by a supper which was enjoyed by all present.

The supper, consisting of beans, ox tongue, cocoa and rolls, ice cream and cake, prepared and served by the members of the cabinet was enjoyed by President Frank Burgess, J. A. Sedgwick, and the new general secretary, Robert S. Gaskell, beside the regular members of the cabinet.

Before the regular reports were called for by President Sturgis Hunt the invited guests were requested to make a few remarks which they did in a very capable manner, giving the boys some helpful advice.

The yearly reports followed, showing that the work of the Boys Division has been progressing since last fall, and that much help has been given the boys. At the Saturday morning meetings held during the season over 2400 boys have been present with 36 boys winning the prizes offered for attending eighteen out of twenty-six meetings.

The Bible study work also closed in a flourishing condition, due to the hard work of Joe Beal, chairman of that committee earlier in the season, with an enrollment at one time of ninety boys. The other committees also showed the work and interest of the boys including reports of basketball games played, trips taken, etc.

President Hunt closed the meeting with a few well chosen words of appreciation for the work done by the different committee chairmen.

President, Sturgis Hunt.
Secretary, Herbert Hendry.
Chairmen of Committees: Frederick Kingsbury, Frederick Tobbenboske, John MacNeil.

This group of fellows were responsible for the planning and carrying on of the work in the boys' division during the past year and deserve considerable praise for their efforts and efficient work.

SPORTING COMMENT

Hint to the police

Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director of the public schools, and the principals are responsible for the remarkably successful grammar school base ball season. A good portion of the expense has been shared by these men.

At the games there have been times when they had to act the part of police and clear the enthusiastic boys and girls off the side lines. Friday's crowd was no different, only it was larger. How about a little co-operation between the police and the principals at the game Monday evening and the world series. It would be more than appreciated if Acting Chief McKay would send down a man.

Scraps can be avoided

When Quincy and Milton High schools play at Merrymount Monday afternoon we expect to see a gentleman's game. We expect that the "rough stuff" pulled by Milton at Milton will be eliminated and we expect Quincy players to retain self control. Milton can be assured of a square deal. The teams should meet each other half way.

No objection is made to intense if friendly rivalry but may the proprieties of the diamond be observed. Furthermore we will censure no player for resenting deliberate interference if the umpires do not take summary action when it occurs. It might first be well for the player retaliating to make sure the umpire has cold feet, however.

Deplorable Condition

Half a thousand young men High school pupils and but half a score of track athletes is discouraging to coaches. It is hardly worth while attempting to increase the corps in the few remaining weeks of the term. Next fall the boys should fall in line. We know Messrs. Paulson and Thompson know the game and can train them properly. Good condition strengthens the brain. Properly directed exercise temperately taken, never hurt anyone.

Chance for Board of Trade

A cross country run should be held here in the fall, either under the auspices of the city or the Board of Trade and suitable trophies should be offered If the latter organization doesn't take it up Mayor Campbell should. Some such event would help advertise the city.

Crowley of Gridley, we believe, demonstrated an ability superior to Ganzel of Massachusetts Field in Friday's game. He has another hard row to hoe in the world series, however.

But little gets into print about the Woodward Institute athletes. Those who question the presence of the athletic girl should get headed the proper direction. The first stop should be the tennis court and the second the gymnasium.

FIVE HEARINGS.

Monday night's meeting of the city council will be devoted largely to public hearings, five of which are scheduled for this meeting. Hearings will be held at 8, 8.45, and 9.10 o'clock on accepting streets, at 9 o'clock on granting gasoline permits and at 9.20 o'clock on granting pole locations. In addition to these matters a number of reports will be received from the finance and other committees.

Dependability——versus——Ingenious Claims

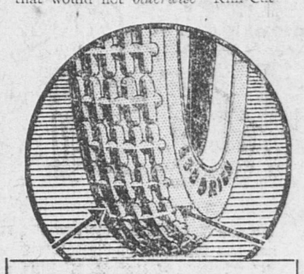

MORE than 75 Concerns now manufacture Tires.

We believe that every one of these makes as good Tires as he knows how, at the lowest Cost his Experience, Equipment and Methods make possible.

We believe that the average Tire Manufacturer is fair in the treatment of Adjustments, and that few deliberately misrepresent their product, either verbally or in Print.

We believe that no Tire Manufacturer can afford to make statements in print about his product, which statements cannot be borne out by the performance of his Tires, in actual use.

We believe that the Tire has never been made which will not "Rim-Cut" if run "flat" for any considerable distance, and that many makers, including ourselves, have always produced Tires that would not otherwise "Rim-Cut"

Made as always,—the same reliable Construction, the same dependable Service—without anything whatever taken out of Quality, no matter what reductions in List-Price are ever made.

We believe that many more Tires "Break-at-the-Bead" than Cut at the Rim.

W believe that the Rubber Riveting System of attaching the Tread to the Carcass, by means of a loosely woven fabric, which permits the raw Rubber to percolate through its meshes and then Vulcanize to Carcass and Tread) prevents, to a large extent, Tread-Separation.

We have long used this in "Goodrich" Tires, as a commonplace part of our Precision policy, but without laying any particular stress upon it.

We believe that the "Double-Cure" process, common with a great many Tire Manufacturers under different names, adds unnecessary expense to Tire Cost, which expense the Methods of the Goodrich Factory eliminate through its Precision "Single-Cure."

We believe that the cutting out of needless expenses like this (which our Precision Methods save) constitutes one of the strongest reasons why the largest Rubber Factory in the World (Ours) produces the greatest Mileage—per Dollar of Cost—in its Tires.

And—

WE believe that the House which sticks to the Truth in its Advertising, is reasonably sure to stick to the Facts in its Selling.

You have never yet found anything in Goodrich Advertising which was not in the Goods it advertised.

Hence you may pin your faith to the following statement:

—Goodrich Safety - Tread Tires give, with most UNIFORMITY, the greatest MILEAGE, and Resilience, at the fairest Cost, per MILE, to Tire Users.

Test them and see!

AMUSEMENTS

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

Following out its policy of presenting each week through the summer a different star in an established success, supported by that excellent stock company, the Lonergan Players, at the Majestic Theatre, the management announces Richard Carle in Richard Harding Davis' screaming farce, "The Dictator," as the attraction for the coming week, beginning June 7. Mr. Carle is well known to Bostonians as a star comedian who has headed his own companies many times in this city in popular musical comedy successes.

"The Dictator" is the lightest but jolliest sort of farce imaginable. The plot is tangled up in ridiculous knots that could never possibly be untied in a plausible way, but there is never a necessity of being plausible, one hilarious situation being followed by another still more riotously funny, and they keep on piling up, one upon another, until the final curtain.

The action of the piece takes place in the vicinity of Porto Banos, Republic of San Manana, Central America, and concerns the fortunes of a young American who is obliged to leave New York under mysterious circumstances.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Another stupendous array of startling features, the very biggest and best obtainable in the world of films, will be offered at the Boston Theatre the week of June 7. Caro'ine B. Nichols and her Boston Fadettes, the great ladies' orchestra which has created a furore among motion picture fans in Boston, will offer an entirely new concert programme before the regular performance, in addition to supplying the orchestral accompaniment for the motion picture plays. The great dramatic attraction will be the multiple reel production, "On The Night Stage," with W. S. Hart in the star role. This is a stirring story of the wild and wooly West, with some wondrously spectacular scenic and staging effects. Weber and Fields, the famous musical comedy stars, will be seen again in a new comedy production while Billie Reeves will also be offered in a new and laughable farce comedy success As has been the custom since the opening of the Boston Theatre as a gigantic motion picture palace, there will be a sweet Mary Pickford romance and an uproariously funny Charlie Chaplin comedy upon the bill.

B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE.

Fritzi Scheff, the queen of light opera favorites, whose runs in "Mlle. Modiste" and similar pieces gave her a tremendous vogue on the legitimate stage, will head the big bill offered at B. F. Keith's Theatre the week of June 7th. Miss Scheff will offer a series of her greatest song successes. She will wear some wonderful gowns. Miss Scheff is one of the biggest stars offered in Boston vaudeville this season. Blessed with a beautiful voice, a delightful personality, and a chic air which endears her to her audiences instantly, she enjoys a niche all her own upon the operatic and musical comedy stage. Clifton Webb, the Back Bay society dancer, assisted by Gloria Goodwin and the Imperial Russian Balalaika Orchestra, will present the very newest dances, and other big features will include Hawthorne and Ingliss, the two nuts from Brazil, in "A Fool There Was;" Sylvia Loyal, and her Pierrot, with a great troupe of 70 pigeons, all snowwhite in color, which appear in some wonderful feats of intelligence; Toohey and Noman the elongated dancer and the pretty girl, who offer something new and Leo Deers, the entertainer to New York's ultra-fashionable "400."

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The great crook play, "Within the Law," by Bayard Veiller, which had a long and successful run in New York and two seasons on the road, will be the bill at the Castle Square Theatre next week.

The story of the play deals with Mary Turner, unjustly accused of theft by the store for which she works. The real culprit is another clerk who has hidden the loot in Mary's locker to avoid suspicion. The department store owner to set an example to the girls has Mary given the maximum sentence in prison. As she is being taken away she swears vengeance on her employer. Three years later she emerges from prison with her heart filled with plans for revenge. She is clever and gains a livelihood by crooked dealing, always keeping "within the law" however. She meets and marries the son of her old employer under another name. The denouement of her identity is to be her vengeance. How she goes to her husband's home to save an old pal who is about to burglarize it, how he shoots and kills a detective and how her husband takes the blame for the murder constitutes the rest of the play. There is no dull moment throughout a performance of "Within the Law." Each character is a distinct type from the clever Mary Turner to tough little Aggie Lynch, the blackmailer, with her slang and her innocent eyes.

POPS AT SYMPHONY HALL.

The thirtieth season of "Pop Concerts" in Symphony hall, Boston opened with its usual brilliant success Tuesday evening. The audiences have been uniformly large and a special note is made of the fact that the largest orchestra in the history of the concerts is being used, seventy men. Mr. Maquarre is again one of the most popular conductors the concerts have ever had. The coming week will be his last and he has arranged some very entertaining programs and at the same time there will be several special nights. June 7 will be the annual "Amherst night" one of the best of the college nights; Tuesday evening, "Tech night," when the entire house is taken by the Institute of Technology for their alumni gathering, greeting to the graduating class and stunts. There will be a limited number of balcony seats. Boston College, with good singing, will come June 10; the Roxbury Latin school has taken the entire house for June 11, for a benefit. June 12 will be Mr. Maquarre's last concert and he has arranged a special programme for the occasion. He will be followed as conductor by Ernst Schmidt.

THE DISTRICT SCHOOL.

Friday night found Bates Opera House Braintree filled with an interested audience. Their interest was centered on a drama entitled, "The District School," given by the Sacred Heart Church under the direction of Mrs. Bryan Hall of Commercial street and Andrew J. Dinnegan of West Quincy. The cast consisted of about twenty-five people from Weymouth and East Braintree who were amply able to get off some excellent local hits which caused much laugher and applause.

After the drama dancing was enjoyed until twelve o'clock. To add to the profit as well as to the pleasure of the many guests, home made candies were sold. The affair was given for the benefit of the fancy table at Field Day which is to be June twenty-sixth in Dywer's field, Weymouth.

QUINCY PHYSICIANS LEAVE FOR WAR ZONE

Two Doctors and Five Nurses From Here to Serve in Hospital

Quincy is well represented in the Harvard war unit, which is to leave Boston June 21, via the Fall River line for New York and from the latter port, June 22, via Holland-American Liner Noordam for Falmouth, England, where they will be assigned to duty. It is expected that they will be placed for service in some hospital in England, though there is a possibility that they will be sent to the Continent. It is also worthy of note that with one exception the Quincy City Hospital is the only hospital outside of Boston in the state that has been honored by having some of its physicians and graduate nurses elected to become a part of the unit of 32 surgeons and 75 nurses in the party.

Dr. William J. McCausland and Dr. F. Ramon Burke were also asked to go with the party but were obliged to decline. Dr. Nathaniel S. Hunting and Dr. Daniel B. Reardon are the two Quincy surgeons selected although it is announced that Dr. Hunting is to go for but six weeks Each of the surgeons and nurses who will make up the party have been vaccinated for small pox and innoculated with typhoid fever serum and photographed for his passport.

SURGEONS.

Dr. Nathaniel S. Hunting
Dr. Daniel B. Reardon

NURSES.

Miss Susan Marshall, 21 Saville avenue, a graduate of the Quincy City Hospital.

Miss Flora M. Wilson of 40 Churchill Lane, Milton, a graduate of the Massachusetts Homoeopathic Hospital is also in the party.

D., of the Church of Our Saviour, Longwood, will make an historical address As Dr. Howe was the rector of Christ church, Quincy, when the present church was built, and has always been interested in the history of the parish, he will have some interesing things to say.

CELEBRATES HIS FIRST MASS

Fr. Madden Takes Up Duties At Houghs Neck

Rev. Fr. Mark E. Madden celebrated his first public mass as pastor of the new parish of St. Frances-by-the Sea at Houghs Neck Sunday morning at ten o'clock. While Fr. Henry Madden officiated at the eight o'clock mass he headed confessions. The district was made a seperate parish by Cardinal O'Connell a few days ago.

Father Madden comes to a comunity of more than 3000 Catholic families and during the summer months the population is enlarged to such an extent that the capacity of the church is taxed at all masses. Many of the summer colonists are members of the parish of St. Thomas at Jamaica Plain where Father Madden was assistant for 16 years.

Father Madden is at present the guest of Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor of the mother parish of St. Johns where he will stay until arrangements for a parish house are completed.

The church of St. Frances was erected some years ago The land on which it is located and its furnishings were contributed, many of them by old time residents of that section. The church was named in recognition of Mrs. Frances Day, deceased, who donated the land.

STOPS AUTOIST WITH LANTERN

It cost Harold Eastman, a Boston salesman, $25 in court today for refusing to stop at 1 A. M. Sunday morning for Patrolman Malone. Eastman operated a car carrying five men and two women. All were singing coming up Quincy avenue. Near the Central fire station they were ordered to stop. The engine was shut down and they coasted along. On discovering it was an officer's hail Eastman opened up and sped by.

Patrolman Corbett, who was at Walshs corner, about 400 feet away saw the occurrence and grabbing a red lantern he jumped to the street, violently swinging it. With visions of open ditches or trenches the party sat up and took notice. Eastman lost no time in coming to a stop.

Both officers rode to police headquarters. One man was arrested for drunkenness and released Sunday morning. Eastman furnished $25 cash bail and this morning pleaded guilty.

COMPLIMENTS POLICE OFFICER

Harry L. Rice in a letter today pays a compliment to the police department particularly to Patrolman Dinneen who captured William Johnson Wednesday night on the Rice estate. Johnson is believed to be the man who burglarized the Adams street home of Mr. Rice last Monday night. The letter follows:

Daniel R. McKay, Acting Chief,
Quincy, Mass.,
Dear Mr. McKay:

Your suggestion that we might expect a return of the thieves proves to have been based on sound reasoning. You were fortunate in having a patrolman so alert as Dinnen and he should be most highly commended for his vigilance. It should be gratifying to citizens and residents of Quincy that its police department is so efficient.

Yours truly,
(Signed) Harry L. Rice.

NOVEL MEANS FOR ADVOCATING PEACE

Audience Enjoys Program of Speaking, Reading and Music

GIRLS SING FOLK SONGS

A most unusual means of forwarding a public propaganda was employed at a meeting in the Wollaston Unitarian parish house, Saturday evening, by the local branch of the Massachusetts Woman's Peace party, when a program of speaking, music and readings was enjoyed.

It is safe to say that if other public movements used this pleasant way of spreading their message their meetings would result in larger attendance and more adherents. If Wollaston people had appreciated the excellence of the program to be presented there would not have been standing room.

In opening the meeting, Miss Harriet E. Turner, chairman of the local branch said that as we had heard so much about war it might be a welcome change to hear something of peace She read a striking editorial from a current magazine entitled "Seeing Things Straight."

Mrs. J. Malcolm Forbes, chairman of the Massachusetts Woman's Peace party, delivered an address on peace She said that nothing could carry on the peace movement as the present war was doing. Everyone was being brought to the realization of the facts that the peace advocates had been teaching for years.

She read a letter from Folkestone England, which described some of the horrors of war as realized through serving the wounded Belgians that flocked into England. "Is it possible" the letter concluded "for men to inflict on each other such harm for any cause under the sun?"

The woman's peace movement now active in 20 states and counting 1,000 members in Massachusetts desired to make woman's protest against war and all that makes for war.

"When we seek to abolish warfare we are not training a race of mollycoddles but simply seeking to risk life in serving rather than destroying humanity. Most people need a new conception of the ethics of war and peace.

"No peace movement advocates total disarmament. What we want is a simultaneous gradual disarmament of the larger nations." Mrs. Forbes spoke in favor of the "League of Nations" and told of the meeting in Philadelphia on June 17 with this end in view.

"We should wage relentless war on war systems," said the speaker in closing. "All must help in the fight. When all women of the country demand abolition of war systems our peace will be won."

The Fuller sisters, a group of three comely English maidens in quaint costumes of long ago, were introduced by their brother. The songs sung were English and Scotch folk songs; genuine folk songs of the peasantry about the old wars, "These" said Mr. Fuller "showed the attitude of the peasant and are more genuinely patriotic than those in present favor in England." The singing was accompanied on the harp by one of the sisters.

The first was a Devonshire song of the Spanish succession, "I would that the wars were well over." Next came a Kent children's singing game "The Roman soldier," showing the folly of war.

Next a duet "High Germany," an echo from King George's War of 200 years ago, was sung. The fourth was an ancient Scotch song of the same period called "My love's in Germany" The sisters with their pretty English voices, old fashioned coiffure and hoop skirts won loud applause.

A peace play by Katrina Trask "In the Vanguard" was dramatically read by Mrs. Richard Gorham of Milton. It tells of how a gallant solider boy who goes marching to the front is brought to realize that war is simply legalized murder. "We blow men to pieces in the name of patriotism and patch the pieces together in the name of humanity" was a striking phrase.

The play prophesied a new order

SAYS NO GUNS ON LUSITANIA

(By United Press.)

New York, June 7—"Not a gun nor even a gun carriage" was aboard the Lusitania when that ship sailed from New York was again reiterated by J. E. Leach, through Frank Winch, a San Francisco newspaper man, who arrived from London a few days ago. Leach is the Lusitania stewart referred to in Gustave Stahl's affidavit presented to the State Department by a German Ambassador, as the man who took him on the torpedoed liner the day before she sailed and showed him four mounted guns.

AMERICAN REPLY STILL DELAYED

(By United Press.)

JOHN EDWARD NEVINS,

(United Press Correspondent)

Washington, June 7—The American rejoinder to the Germans' note was still held up today. Twice placed in the hands of the State department legal experts it has been twice recalled by the President. Today the same statement was made concerning it as was made immediately after last Friday's cabinet meeting—"It will probably be cabled tonight."

Friends of the administration say delay is justified by the necessity of making the note so clear that a direct answer from the German government cannot be avoided. Others openly hint that extreme pressure is being brought to have it changed so that further diplomatic exchanges will be certain, thus muddying the issues in the diplomatic stream and getting the entire question between the two governments so involved that weeks of correspondence will be needed. It has been no secret that Secretary Bryan was opposed to adopting a tone of finality in various notes. His purpose was so sincere that prior to last Friday's cabinet meeting President Wilson felt impelled to have a private conference with the secretary.

POLICE SAY THEFTS MAY TOTAL NEARLY $4000

Davenport Pleads Not Guilty In District Court Today

Ralph Davenport, 31 years, of Beverly, who said he was Arthur Berry when arrested in Boston Saturday for alleged larceny of Pyrene extinguishers from the Baker Yacht Basin and who admits the police say that he has stolen marine fixtures from shipyards in this state to the value of between two and three thousand dollars, was in court this morning. He pleaded not guilty and his case was continued to June 16. Bonds were set at $1000.

An odd style straw hat worn when he made a recent sale of articles resulted in his description being furnished the police and his alleged recognition in Boston Saturday by Inspector Goodhue of Quincy and Inspectors McCauley and Rooney of Boston after a two days hunt.

Davenport, the police say, has admitted the part he played in the disappearance of goods from shipyards. He is thought to have been operating the past four years and is reported to admit that the loot from the Baker Yacht Basin will total $1000. Approximately as much more has been taken at the yard of Stearns and McKay at Marblehead and he is said to be responsible. He is also said to have admitted visits to Lawleys at Neponset, several yards in Dorchester, South Boston and other places.

At police headquarters Davenport is said to have told how he operated in the guise of a prospective buyer with a hidden screw driver and pliers in his pocket. Most of the articles taken were such as could easily be removed. The loot comprised marine clocks, binnacles, compasses, logs, batteries, amperemeters and other yacht fittings. Davenport is said to have made his sales direct to yacht owners.

Inspector Goodhue said this morning that he had recovered property to the value of about $1000 and because of its variety and the many places visited there will be some delay in finding out the owners. He said he would not be surprised if it developed that the value of goods stolen would total $4000.

Davenport had several articles, alleged to have been stolen, when arrested and others were found in his room in Boston. Davenport was somewhat of a "Beau Brummell" and occupied well furnished apartments. He is assisting where he can in the recovery of the property, the police say.

A FRIENDLY GIANT.

Chinese and American capitalists have united to form a Chinese-American bank, to be capitalized at approximately $6,000,000.

Brown University defeated the Chinese University of Hawaii, 4 to 0, Saturday.

The above items summarize two important events, not so divergent as they may appear. The bringing into existence of the Chinese-American bank is an important achievement and will undoubtedly result in much material benefit to both countries. China is a sleeping giant, whose awakening will shake the world. It is a country with enormous physical resources, most of them hardly touched. The establishment of this great bank at Shanghai with its chief branch in San Francisco may do much to further the development of commerce.

The United States may come into commercial conflict with Japan, but what of that? Japan has only herself to blame for a lost opportunity. Japan's entry into China was dramatic but apparently wholly selfish. Throughout history the relations of the nations of the world with the Celestial Empire were promoted by greed and selfishness. No nation has acted toward China from motives of friendliness.

There is one important exception and China, drowsy though she may be, has not failed to see that in the family of nations she has only one true friend. The United States some years ago returned to China a few million dollars, a part of the amount awarded her as indemnity for Boxer uprising. The United States found the amount too large. The action of this country was promoted by nothing but a love of fair play, but it has paid for itself many times over. China has never forgotten this action of a great power, any more than she has not forgotten the acts of self aggrandizement by other nations. She has noted other acts of friendliness in our dealings toward her.

The progressive part of China, the small part which has awakened looks to the United States as a friend and counselor. Chinese students have come to our shores for education. The Chinese have come in direct contact with us in Hawaii and they have come to learn that we can be trusted. Most striking of all they have become baseball enthusiasts. They play the American national game, and they play it well judging by the score in the game given at the beginning of these remarks. Chinese who have learned to know and trust the American people have returned to China and spread their knowledge. This confidence had to exist or no successful Chinese-American Bank could have been established.

A MAN WHO ACTS.

All true Americans will be glad to learn that ex-President Roosevelt has nearly recovered from his recent injury. Many of us disagree with his policies and his methods sometimes, but we do not forget that this man has contributed much to his country. At least he is a man who does things. Recently when various kind hearted individuals in New York city were appointing committees and discussing ways and means to help the unemployed Col. Roosevelt, saying nothing, mounted the lecture platform where he said much. The result, in dollars and cents, went to relieve immediate distress. As usual, he acted while others merely talked and planned.

INADEQUATE.

Although only three years old the son of Col. John Jacob Astor, who perished when the Titanic went down, finds that $20,000 a year is not sufficient for the support of his babyship, according to his mother, Mrs. Madeline Force Astor. The mother asserts that in the past three years she has exceeded the allowance of the court by $23,639. It is only fair to say that the cruel tax assessors are no respecters of persons or ages and that Baby Astor has to hand over $10,000 yearly.

A DESERVED HONOR.

Trade unions have more than once given practical and emphatic evidence that they will recognize and reward honesty and efficiency in office. The latest case in point is that of our fellow citizen, James Duncan, who has been reelected international president by the granite cutters. Mr. Duncan's long and faithful service rendered him eminently deserving of the honor and we were pleased to record his success.

A "gentleman burglar" in real life was the college graduate who took the name of William F. Smith and for two years passed a pleasant life in New York city opening safes with the skill of a "Jimmy Valentine." He did the stunt for Inspector Faurot at police headquarters, just to show that distinguished officer that he was in truth a scientific student of burglary. Educations counts, even in increasing efficiency in crime.

A wagon carrying five hundred pounds of dynamite through the streets of Medford the other day came into collision with an automobile at a street corner. Fortunately there was no explosion but it is not pleasant to think of what might have been. No such quantity should be carried through the public streets at one time, permit or no permit. The laws should be more drastic and their enforcement more vigorous.

After you have finished with Hancock street, between Granite and School streets, take a stroll up South and West Quincy way, Mr. Commissioner. You are doing good work. Keep it up if you can induce the City Council to let you.

The Germans perhaps found some compensation for Italy's leap into the whirlpool; it gave them a good excuse for delaying their reply to the American note.

Mayor Campbell is quick to see an evidence of work well done on the part of a city employee and does not hesitate to express his appreciation.

Woodrow Wilson's headache may postpone the Kaiser's.

We frequently hear it said that New England will never again furnish a President of the United States. That New England has had its day and that the great agricultural and industrial states of the Middle West will furnish the presidential timber for a good while to come. This tradition was pretty nearly knocked over two years ago when Wilson was nominated and elected from New Jersey. Ohio and Indiana have certainly had their full share and New York has furnished its full quota. We don't believe, however, that locality counts for so much. If New England could produce another Daniel Webster or James G. Blaine they would be welcomed and probably elected although both of these men failed to land the prize, but not because they came from New England. Another name is now being conjured with in connection with this high office. A native of New Hampshire, a resident of Massachusetts and a member of the United States Senate, Washington correspondents say demonstrated capacity for leadership of John W. Weeks has so greatly impressed many of his colleagues in the House that already there is much serious talk of him as a republican standard bearer in 1916. In response to series of questions submitted to him as to issues of 1916 Presidential campaign, Senator Weeks said: "The issues for the campaign of 1916 cannot be definitely determined until disposition of the question of an extra session of Congress has been made; but, assuming that there will not be an extra session, I think it may be safely stated that the issues will be: First the tariff; second, the foreign policy of the Administration; third, the broad question of regulation or supervision of business; fourth, the adoption of a policy which will result in development of an overseas merchant marine; fifth, proper consideration of a national budget system."—Milford Cabinet.

FALSE ALARM AT SAILORS HOME

The alarm from Box 154 at 11.10 Sunday sent the department on a useless run to Fenno street near the National Sailors Home, for it was a false alarm. It is thought that the alarm was rung in by some belated auto party going over the boulevard.

The Central Station auto and chief's car responded to a still alarm at 2.15 this morning for a chimney fire in a house on Oakland street, Post Island, owned by John W. Hunter of Dorchester and occupied by W. H. Downs. The family built a fire in the open fire place Sunday evening. The soot in the chimney took fire. Some sparks also alighted on the roof, burning a few shingles. The damage was very slight.

NOTE MAY OPEN WAY FOR PEACE

Optimism Prevails In German Quarters at Washington

WILSON DOCUMENT PREPARED

Made So Explicit as to Leave No Room For Doubt as to Attitude of United States—Crisis Over Lusitania Case Is Believed by Many Officials to Have Been Passed

Washington, June 7.—President Wilson's note to Germany will be cabled to Ambassador Gerard tonight or early Tuesday, according to word from the White House.

The only reason for the delay, it is said, is the president's desire to make the phraseology of the note so explicit as to leave no room for doubt or further argument concerning the position of the United States government—that the right of visit and search must be exercised and passengers and crew of the armed ships on which neutrals are voyaging transferred to a plame of safety before any prize is destroyed by a belligerent warship.

Officials familiar with the contents of the note say it is a forceful reiteration of the principles expressed by the United States in its note of Feb. 10, when the government announced that it could not admit the right of the German admiralty's proclamation of a war zone to infringe upon the right of neutrals to travel anywhere on the high seas on peaceful merchantmen, and that the German government would be held to "strict accountability" for any violation of American rights.

There may be some further discussion of the document with legal officers of the government, but it is expected to be put in cipher and sent on its way to Berlin tonight.

In German quarters the optimism which has been apparent since Ambassador von Bernstorff talked with President Wilson continues, the impression being given that the road to an understanding is made clearer than it had been since the Lusitania was destroyed.

The belief is constantly expressed in German quarters that the crisis over the Lusitania case has passed. It is frequently pointed out, too, that the present correspondence over neutral rights may lead to a discussion of the general subject of the freedom of the seas, and some German officials have suggested that out of the exchange of notes with Germany followed by further correspondence with Great Britain on neutral rights, the way may be opened even to the making of peace.

That Berlin has either lacked adequate reports from the United States or else has completely misread them, is the conclusion reached by many officials from published dispatches asserting that the German authorities and the public there no longer regarded the submarine issue with the United States as one of serious proportions.

That the second note of President Wilson will go far toward imparting to Germany a clearer understanding of the firm stand of this government is the expectation in official quarters.

German officials in Washington estimate that if the American note reaches the Berlin foreign office not later than Thursday, a reply probably would require a week's time at least, and would not be in Washington much before June 20.

Financial Review

The event of last week from the stock mark point of view was the Steel decision. It proved quite in line with intelligent and fair-minded opinion. The United States Steel Corporation is not a monopoly, for its competitors have been growing faster than itself. The charge of watered stock is offset by the large investments in plant made out of earnings, and the Tennessee Coal and Iron purchase is not regarded as improper. The former price-fixing policy is criticised, but has already been abolished, and control of this feature is referred to the Federal Trade Commission which is now coming into power.

The whole decision is in line with recent decisions by the Supreme Court in the celebrated Standard Oil and Tobacco cases. The significance of this case goes far beyond the United States Steel Corporation. It is one more evidence that reason has been read into the Sherman Anti-Trust law and that particular menace to business initiative has been removed. Monopoly is now under proper restraint, and that restraint will no longer be pushed to the point of paralyzing business. The changed spirit of the public and the Government toward big business, together with these recent court decisions, mark a new era of encouragement.

The Lusitania incident is now on the fair road to settlement. The best evidence is overwhelmingly against the reports that she was an armed vessel. The statement that she was an auxiliary to the British navy is also untrue, for while the Admiralty held an option on the ship, yet as that option had not been exercised, she could in no sense be classed as belonging to the British navy. Both legally and actually she was nothing but a peaceful merchantman acting fully within recognized law and custom. When Germany learns the true facts, as she undoubtedly will under Ambassador von Bernstorff's recent arrangement with the President, the way for a final adjustment of this problem should be comparatively easy.

Another satisfactory development of the week has been a growing confidence that the American business community is determined to take as calm and cheerful view of the situation as possible. President Wilson's announcement regarding Mexico, although it plainly suggests the possibility of intervention, caused scarcely a ripple. A year ago such a message from the White House would have severely shocked the whole financial fabric. Our relations with Germany for the last few weeks have been seriously strained and full of ugly possibilities. Yet the whole country has maintained a remarkable degree of calmness and self-restraint. This was not because the serious possibilities ahead of us were not realized. On the contrary, they have been keenly appreciated by press, public and Government alike. But a fine confidence has developed in the American people as a whole; confidence in our own resources and abilities, also in him who guides the ship of state, and above all, confidence in the attitude of justice and humanity which America has assumed toward the warring nations of Europe.

In keeping with this growing steadiness of temper, American business men are becoming accustomed to hard knocks. Their nerves are strengthened. Events are measured more nearly at their real value. Exaggerated fears are scorned and courage is rising, as the advantages of our neutral position are recognized. So also is the fact that this war must terminate, and reconstruction eventually begin anew. Many of our most sagacious business leaders believe that America has discounted the worst effects of the war, so far as concerns ourselves; and that while shocks are still to be expected because of the many remaining uncertainties, their effects will not be severe or lasting.

The call of the German Ambassador upon President Wilson showed a mutual effort to preserve pleasant international relations; and this comparatively trivial incident was sufficient to give the market quite a lift; indicating a quicker responsiveness to good news than to bad. Unfortunately, however, the war remains a controlling factor, and whatever happens which prolongs the war must be expected to cast their shadows upon the situation on this side of the Atlantic.

Ten months of foreign trade ending April 30, left an excess of exports over imports amounting to over $851,000,000. Compared with a year ago this was an increase in the balance of $377,600,000, brought about by an increase of $179,700,000 in exports and a decrease of $197,900,000 in imports. This violent derangement of our foreign trade promises to continue until the war is over, and it is estimated that for the twelve months of the current fiscal year the excess of exports will reach about one billion dollars.—Henry Clews, Banker.

O'KEEFE AT LAST BECOMES SANE

As a result of the conference held by the mayors ,selectmen, city clerks, building inspectors and fire chiefs with Fire Prevention Commissioner O'Keefe Friday he has slashed some of the red tape that has entangled private automobile owners and hindered city government officials.

The necessity for delays, hearings, public advertisements, and time-consuming formalities in connection with the keeping of gasoline and the building of garages has been reduced to a minimum and the new regulations have been fixed and will go into effect immediately. Under these new regulations it is provided that from now on the power lies with the heads of fire departments throughout the district to grant licenses without a hearing for gasoline tanks up to 130 gallons capacity.

DRANK FOAM OFF HIS BEER

Another Entertained As Trick Dog

Three Weymouth men, charged with violations of the liquor law at Weymouth, were before Judge Avery this morning. Joseph Grande pleaded guilty to two charges and was fined $100 and given three months in the House of Correction. Sentence was suspended to June 28, 1916.

Rocco Labriole, withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty, was fined $100 and given three months also. His sentence was also suspended for the same period.

Albert Grant was fined $125 and given the same sentence. He questioned Patrolmen Phillips and Hinchon who secured the evidence. When sentenced he appealed and called two men as sureties.

The examination of the proposed sureties had just commenced when Theodore Ferallo, one of them, was recognized as a man who was fined $75 some months ago, $25 of which was still unpaid. He didn't have the money with him and was surrendered by the probation officer.

Farella and the man he was to bail were both taken to the detention room downstairs and are in the custody of the court.

Patrolman Hinchon in testifying said during his visit to the barn occupied by Grant he saw one of two men drink the foam off beer and appear satisfied while another demontrated how a toy dog could do tricks on a table.

CHURCH AND CHOIR

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. H. H. French, D. D., who has just completed a pastorate of 20 years at the First Congregational church in Malden occupied the pulpit at the Bethany church Sunday both at the morning and evening services. Rev. Dr. French is a most powerful and interesting speaker. In the morning he took his text from John 4:14, the subject of his sermon "Surplus and Deficits." His subject for the evening service was "Sanity and Faith."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN

There was a good attendance at both services, despite the rain. In the evening, six persons were admitted to membership, one by transfer from a church in Canada and five on profession of faith. At the evening service the Last Supper was celebrated after an appropriate sermon by the pastor. According to custom, the sacrament was followed by singing of a selection from the seventy-second Psalm by the congregation, to the tune of "Coronation", a dignified and impressive feature of the service.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST

Notwithstanding the storm there was a large attendance at the morning service. The pastor, Rev. Joseph Walther, preached an inspiring sermon from the subject: "Fairest Lord Jesus." Text: Psalm 45:2. The observance of the Lord's supper followed the preaching service. Several received the hand of fellowship.

At 12:15 the Sunday school assembled for the study of God's word.

John Leavitt lead the C. E. meeting at 6.00. Subject: "Body Under Soul on Top". 1 Cor. 9: 24—27.

Rev. Harris Barbour, a former member of the church and Sunday school preached at the evening service at 7.00. The choir sang, morning and evening.

Tuesday evening, at 7.45, the Nearer and Farther Lights society will meet in the parsonage. Miss Ruth Bartlett will speak.

Thursday evening, at 7.45, the regular meeting for Praise, Prayer, and Testimony, will be held in the chapel. Subject: "Lessons From the Sermon on the Mount."

WILLIAM ARNOLD.

G. A. R. Veteran Dies at Home of Daughter.

William Arnold passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Hiram A. Morse, Bellevue road, late Saturday evening. Since the death of his wife about a year ago Mr. Arnold has made his home with his daughter in Squantum and has enjoyed good health up to about a week ago when he had a sick spell which did not seem to be serious until the past two days, so his death is a shock to the community.

Mr. Arnold was born in Portland, Me., and received his education is that city. When quite a young man he came to Boston and was married here to Mary Cody whose death occurred at the Arnold homestead, Stoneham, about a year ago. He went to war with Co. K 39th regiment in "61" and served until "65" and saw active service all that time. Memorial Day of this year was the first time he has missed being with his comrades of Post 33 Woburn. He has held all the offices in connection with this post.

Mr. Arnold was in the iron business but has been retired for a number of years. Had he lived two weeks longer he would have been 81 years old.

Two children survived him, Mrs. Hiram A. Morse of Squantum and Charles H. Arnold, president of Arnold & Zeiff Rubber Co., N. Y., whose home is in Stoneham and several grandchildren

Funeral services will be held from the home of Charles H. Arnold, 92 Williams sreet, Stoneham at two o'clock Tuesday. Burial will be in Woodbrook Cemetery, Woburn.

RETURNS FROM CALIFORNIA.

Miss Hazel S. Estey of the Quincy Mansion school has returned from a five weeks trip throughout the Western states, stopping at both expositions in California. Several days were spent in the Grand Canyon of Colorado, where she descended into the lower chasm on burros. She describes the Massachusetts building as a facsimile of the state house in Boston.

Final preparations were made Sunday afternoon at a meeting of the committee in charge of the Parkway district table for the dance to be held this evening in St. Joseph's hall. Dancing will be from eight to twelve.

Milady's Mirror

Remedy For Loss of Facial Contour.

We all know it in other people—the loss of the clear line of the jaw, the droop of the cheeks and mouth, the lumpy appearance under the chin And it has nothing to do with superfluous flesh, although it is commonly considered to be the result of fat. Indeed, in many cases an increase in plumpness hides rather than emphasizes the condition. The mischief goes back to the underlying muscles and so disproves the old adage that beauty is only skin deep. And nothing has a more disastrous effect upon these muscles, which, like little cushions, support the superstructure of the face, than anxiety and worry added to the strain of unaccustomed work, lack of accustomed exercise, and so on.

And the remedy?

Well, this is, in the early stages anyway, easily found in massage with a cream of slightly astringent character. Which make is used is a matter for individual choice, but it should be not merely an emollient or a cleansing cream, but one which incorporates ingredients to strengthen the muscles and rejuvenate the tissues.

Once possessed of this, it should be put in little lumps on the jawbone and above it to the temple if there is any tendency to falling in the upper part of the cheek, as will probably be the case after the first quarter century is passed; then with the tips of the fingers gently work the cream into the skin, beginning at the chin and stroking upward and outward along the line of the jaw, continuing the process in parallel lines, as it were, above this first and most important one. You will understand that the strokes—which is the most expressive word to use—should in each case begin at the chin or base of the nose and end more or less about the ear. There must be no rubbing to and fro, no hint of pressure downward or a return journey of the massaging hands.

Some six or eight strokes, each given slowly with firm, though gentle, pressure, should be given to the jawbone itself, when the best position will be to place the middle finger of the hand on the actual bone, with the first and third above and below it respectively. This is the most important part, and the amount of repetition which is devoted to the part above depends more or less on the time which can be given to the treatment and the state of slackness in which the face has fallen.

Control Thoughts For Lip Beauty.

The mouth is often said to be the greatest index to character, and the beauty of the mouth, more than any other feature, depends upon the woman herself. Thought and action are the sculptors of the mouth, and these are under the individual's control. As the lips are a nucleus of nerves surrounded by very many muscles, their contour is changed with every passing thought, and of all features they are the most susceptible of action and the most direct indices of the feelings.

Thin lips are formed by a constant thought and battle against minor difficulties. Persons of weak will have habitually compressed lips.

A woman can spoil a beautiful face by an unlovely expression of the mouth. It is therefore of vast importance that you should give serious attention to the fact that the mouth is in such intimate sympathy with your every thought and feeling.

If you will cultivate a critical faculty you will find many curious and absurd tricks and mannerisms by which otherwise attractive women are made ugly.

Habitual pouting enlarges and coarsens the lower lip.

Do not twist your mouth, either in scorn or thrust the mouth and chin forward, as is often done under a fancied sense of injury. These unfortunate contortions are often acquired by imitating others or from just witnessing others' actions. It therefore behooves the woman to be careful how she uses her mouth, for there is no period in life when these subtle and silent agents—the muscles and their controlling nerves—are not at work making or marring the beauty of the face.

Lip Salve Recipes.

No one need have dry or cracked lips. The application of carbolated vaseline, glycerin and rosewater, camphor ice made of refined lamb tallow, two ounces, and a piece of gum camphor the size of a butternut contain splendid healing properties. Before going out in the cold weather apply the vaseline softly and then wipe off. Do not chew and wet the lips.

A good healing compound for chapped lips is: Cocoa butter, twenty-four grams; white wax, four grams; essence of bergamot, one gram. Melt and beat together.

A good salve for the lips is: Spermaceti ointment, one ounce; balsam of peru, fifteen grains; alkanet root, fifteen grains; oil of cloves, five drops.

Digest the alkanet in the ointment at gentle heat till the latter is a deep rose color; then pass through a coarse strainer. When slightly cooled stir in the balsam; give a few moments to settle; then pour off the clear portion and add the oil of cloves.

PICTURESQUE FROCK.

Lingerie Gown That Makes Wearer Look Like Frameless Picture.

PRETTY EVENING DRESS.

"Ah! Isn't she a picture?" is heard once in perhaps a very long while, and immediately every one within hearing covertly or frankly turns to look at what promises to be a pleasant vision. And these "pictures" have not been any too plentiful recently, particularly in the not long gone period of tube skirts. But fashion now holds out the pretty promise that it is the thing to be picturesquely dressed, and the woman who comes nearest to looking like a canvas belle that's lost her frame will elicit the biggest buzz of admiration.

This gown is picturesque in the extreme, being a combination of wonderful old lace and hemstitched taffeta. The underskirt is of accordion plaited pink chiffon. The bodice is decollete and sleeveless. The sleeveless bodice is very becoming to a young girl.

GOSSIP AND ADVICE.

Scrap Books Excellent Way of Conserving Much Valuable Information.

Many times you have seen in a magazine or newspaper an article or suggestion that you determined to save—and then either lost the magazine or clipping or threw it away during some cleaning up period. Why not reform?

One woman of methodical habits keeps a series of scrap books for just such articles and finds this a very neat and effective way of preserving ideas for future use.

One book is marked "Garden." In this book she has pasted every illustration or item of information on the subject that has intrested her. There are pictures of trellises, arbors, pergolas, water gardens, benches or bordered paths, which she hopes to be able some time to add to her own garden; suggestions about flower or vegetable culture; advertisements she wishes to keep for reference; garden plans from various garden magazines, etc.

The other half of this book is devoted to notes on her own garden—dates on which she has planted, her success with various plants and seeds, the garden expense account, and any point that she may wish to recall at any time.

Another book is marked "House." In this she keeps articles and suggestions on household decoration. Samples of chintzes, denims and upholstery materials; illustrations of fireplaces, window seats, cupboards, stair railings, etc., that have appealed to her. Here, too, are written down the dimensions of each room, the number of windows and amount of material needed for curtains, the dates on which the last papers, rugs and curtains were bought, and the price of these. This system saves much time and trouble when a room is to be redecorated, for all the necessary information is at hand.

A large part of the book is devoted to the kitchen. In these pages are all the suggestions that have interested her. There is a list of various brands of tinned goods, cereals and other foodstuffs. This is labeled "Pure Food Products," and only tested and approved brands are listed.

In the kitchen pages also are pasted notes on or advertisements of improved utensils and labor saving devices—washing machines, mayonnaise mixers, butter churns, silver cleaning pans, in fact, any approved labor saving device that she may wish to purchase.

In this way every item of household information that has interested her is preserved in accessible form with very little trouble. Recipes are not put in the scrap book, as they occupy little space and are more conveniently kept in a card index box on a shelf.

CHILDREN'S DAY AT FIRST PARISH

"In their tiny heads they hold the future. It will be good or evil as they shall make it." Thus said Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson in speaking to the members of the Sunday school of the First Parish church at the annual Children's Day exercises Sunday morning.

Continuing Rev. Mr. Hudson said: "The unfolding of the spring time into summer is illustrated by these children. Before we realize it they will have come to taking their part in the world's work. I would like to be here a hundred years from now to see what things will happen. What their lives will see in the changes of progress. Many changes have taken place during our lives but I look for still greater changes that are to come in the lives of these Sunday school children. With these boys and girls it is a question what their contribution will be to the world's progress. They are to take their places in the world's work.

"This parish has a tradition for furnishing men and women who have nobly faced the responsibilities of life and have rendered true and helpful aid to the world. It is not among the impossibilities that this parish will furnish Presidents and Governors in the future, but whatever happens they will become a part of that great body of men of progress and responsibility. We here are preparing them to do their work."

In concluding his remarks he spoke of the most loyal and faithful corps of teachers, who were making their best contribution to the civilization that is to come.

Miss Minnie Packard, the superintendent of the Sunday school, extended her thanks to the teachers for their helpfulness; also to the members of the parish and parents for their interest in the Sunday school, and extended a most cordial invitation to all to visit the parlors after the service and see the exhibition of the work which the school was trying to do. There were many interesting things and they were doing a splendid work, she declared.

The school had by vote decided how its contribution of $109 should be expended. It was to be divided among the Floating Hospital, the Home for Crippled Children, the Children's Mission and the Associated Charities of Quincy. The birthday collection which the members of the school had made is to be given to the Children's Country Week.

She also spoke of the Sunday chool and parish picnic which would be held Saturday June 26. The school and parish will unite in a picnic and would assemble at the church at 10 o'clock and be taken to the picnic grounds in automobiles.

In giving the statistics of the Sunday school Miss Packard said the total enrollment was 157 and the average attendance 103 for 35 Sundays. There were eighteen regular teachers and two kindergarten teachers.

The program, a most interesting one, opened with the processional, "Onward Christian Soldiers," during which the school marched in from the vestry and took seats in the centre of the church. The remainder of the program included scripture reading, responsive reading by the intermediate department, verse by the kindergarten class, singing of hymns and the christening of children.

Six children were christened:
Sylvia Bellamy Loomis
Elizabeth Jane Mansur
Ernest George Paige
Edith Boylston Paige
Aivah Nathaniel Pierce
Marion Foster Souden

In christening the children Rev. Mr. Hudson referred to them as being consecrated to purity and truth and in presenting each with a flower he said that the "Flower was but a symbol of the unfolding grace of a beautiful life."

Another interesting feature was the presentation of the certificates, books, diplomas, bronze, silver and gold pins for perfect attendance. In presenting the pins it was announced that the bronze pins were given for perfect attendance for two years. At the end of four years perfect attendance they would be exchanged for a silver pin and at the end of six years perfect attendance the silver pins would be exchanged for gold pins, which would be retained permanently. Certificates were given for one year's perfect attendance, books for three years and engraved diplomas for five years. Those of the honor roll to be awarded the certificates, books, diplomas and pins were as follows:

ALL STARS ARE DEFEATED 3 TO 1

The All Stars, a team composed of the cream of the Quincy Grammar schools in base ball talent, lost to the crack Saturday Evening Post nine Saturday by a score of 3 to 1 at Merrymount park.

Galvin the Post pitcher, had the schoolboys at his mercy. He allowed but one hit and but one man reached first. Aside from Galvin's performance in the box, Asklund was the star for the Post nine. His long two bagger sent in two runs and his fielding was of the first order. Forbush's hard wallop through the box scored the other run for the winners.

With the exception of the playing of Ganzel there were no features for the All Stars. Ganzel scored the only run for the school boys besides being the only one to get to Galvin for a hit.

The game was witnessed by a large crowd. By winning this game the Post Team demonstrated that it is to be seriously considered for the Quincy Junior Championship and the cup offered by Mayor Campbell to the best team in the Newsboys' club. The team has won seven out of ten games this season.

The score:

Stars	0 0 1 0 0 0—1 1 0

LOCALS DEFEAT SOLDIERS 8 TO 4

North Quincy Catholic Club Victorious

The No. Quincy C. C. journeyed to Winthrop Saturday, and defeated the soldiers of Fort Banks 8-4.

Michaels went into the game in the third inning and only one run was scored off his pitching. The soldiers made a rally in the seventh when they filled the bases with none out but Michaels struck out two of the heavy batters and caused the third to be an easy out and prevented a score while the C. C. boys by good hitting and base running scored enough to win the game.

The features were the pitching of Michaels and the batting of Cox who secured four hits including a double in four time up.

The score by innings:

FORE RIVERS GAIN VICTORY

Large Crowd See Close and Exciting Game

The Norwood Press was defeated by the Fore River team in a Manufacturer's league game Saturday afternoon at Merrymount park by a score of 3 to 2. All that prevented an extra inning was the fanning of the last man in the ninth by Knight when the bases were filled. There was a large attendance.

Two home runs were made during the game. Sid Duggan drove a ball onto the street in the first inning and scored Gillis who had doubled. The other was made by Clark who sent a ball to left field toward Theo Galvin, in all probability who would have fielded the ball but it took a bad bounce and passed him. Realizing he was unable to overtake it before it went under the fence Galvin dove after the ball and went partly under the wires. His attempt failed. Gillis made the third run when he tripled and was scored by a single by Cain. Hitting gave the visitors their second run.

Knight and King each fanned 14 men. What hitting there was was clean. Norwood bumped nine off of Knight and Fore Rivers secured seven. Knight was in good form for six innings and then commenced to tire. Utilizing reserve strength he retired the last batsman and probably saved his own game. The summary:

A modern poem on the present war was next sung by the Fuller sisters. This novel piece was called "The Five Souls" and represented a spirit from each of the warring countries.

The shades to speak were a Polish peasant, Tyrolese, French weaver, German wine grower and English boat builder. The lament of each ended in the same words "I gave my life for freedom—this I know; for those who bade me fight had told me so."

The final number was a Scotch song "The Flowers of the Forest," depicting the lament of the women after the battle of Flodden. An informal reception was tendered the visitors at the conclusion of the program.

The FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

AUTHOR'S FOREWORD

This little story is the outcome of two trips (neither of which was in the Bear Tooth forest) during the years 1909 and 1910. The golden trail is an actuality for me. The camp on the lake was mine. The rain, the snow I met, the prying camp robbers, the grouse, the muskrats, the beaver, were my companions. But Berea McFarlane was with me only in imagination. She is a fiction, born of a momentary powerful handclasp of a western rancher's daughter. The story of Wayland Norcross is fiction also. But the McFarlane ranch, the mill and the lonely ranger stations are closely drawn pictures of realities. Although the stage of my comedy is Colorado, I have not held to any one locality. The scene is composite.

It was my intention originally to write a much longer and more important book concerning Supervisor McFarlane, but this is merely the very slender story of a young western girl who, being desired of three strong men, bestows her love on a tourist whose weakness is at once her allurement and her care. The administration problem, the sociologic theme, which was to have made the novel worth while, got lost in some way on the low trail and never caught up with the lovers. I'm sorry, but so it was.

CHAPTER I.

The Happy Girl.

THE stage line which ran from Williams to Bear Tooth (one of the most authentic then to be found in all the west) possessed at least one genuine Concord coach, so faded, so saddened, so cracked and so splintered that its passengers entered it under protest and alighted from it with thanksgiving, and yet it must have been built by honorable men, for in 19— it still made the run of 120 miles twice each week without loss of wheel or even so much as molting a scrap of paint.

And yet whatever it may have been in its youth it was in its age no longer a gay dash of color in the landscape. On the contrary, it fitted into the dust brown and sage green plain as defensively as a beetle in a dusty path. Nevertheless it was an indispensable part of a very moving picture as it crept, creaking and groaning (or it may be it was the suffering passenger creaking and groaning), along the hillside.

After leaving the Grande river the road winds up a pretty high divide before plunging down into Ute park, as they call all that region lying between the Continental range on the east and the Bear Tooth plateau on the west. It was a big spread of land and very far from an eastern man's conception of a park. From Dome peak it seems a plain; but, in fact, when clouds shut off the high summits to the west this "valley" becomes a veritable mountain land, a tumbled, lonely country, over which an occasional horseman crawls, a minute but persistent insect. It is, to be exact, a succession of ridges and ravines, sculptured (in some far off, post glacial time) by floods of water, covered now, rather sparsely, with pinons, cedars and aspens, a dry, forbidding but majestic landscape.

In late August the hills become iridescent, opaline with the translucent yellow of the aspen, the coral and crimson of the fire weed, the blood red of huckleberry beds and the royal purple of the asters, while flowing round all, as solvent and neutral setting, lies the gray-green of the ever present and ever enduring sage brush.

Through this gorgeous land of mist, of stillness and of death a few years ago a pale young man (seated beside the driver) rode one summer day in a voiceless rapture which made Bill McCoy weary.

"If you'd had as much of this as I have you'd talk of something else," he growled after a half dozen attempts at conversation. Bill wasn't much to look at, but he was a good driver, and the stranger respected him for it.

Eventually this simple minded horseman became curious about the slim young fellow sitting beside him.

"What you doing out here anyhow—fishing or just rebuilding a lung?"

"Rebuilding two lungs," answered the tourist.

"Well, this climate will just about put lungs into a coffee can," retorted Bill, with official loyalty to his country.

To his discerning eye "the tourist" now became "a lunger." "Where do you live when you're to home?"

"Connecticut."

"I knew it."

"How did you know it?" The youth seemed really interested to know.

"I drove another fellow up here last fall that dealt out the same kind of brogue you do."

Bill was prevented at the moment from pursuing this line of inquiry by the discovery of a couple of horsemen racing from a distant ranch toward the road. It was plain, even to the stranger, that they intended to intercept the stage, and Bill plied the lash with sudden vigor.

"I'll give 'em a chase," said he grimly.

The other appeared a little alarmed "What are they, bandits?"

The traveler apologized. "My eye aren't very good," he said hurriedly.

He was, however, quite justified in his mistake, for both riders wore wide rimmed sombreros and rode astride at a furious pace, bandanas fluttering, skirts streaming, and one was calling in shrill command, "Oh, Bill!"

As they neared the gate the driver drew up with a word of surprise "Why, howdy, girls? Howdy?" he said with an assumption of innocence "Were you wishin' fer to speak to me?"

"Oh, shut up!" commanded one of the girls, a round faced, freckled romp "You know perfectly well that Berrie is going home today. We told you all about it yesterday."

"Like nothin'!" exclaimed the maid "You've been countin' the hours till you got here. I know you."

"Goodby. Run down again."

"I will. You come up."

The young passenger sprang to the ground and politely said: "May I help you in?"

Bill stared, the girl smiled, and her companion called: "Be careful, Berrie, don't hurt yourself, the wagon might pitch."

The youth, perceiving that he had made another mistake, stammered an apology.

The girl perceived his embarrassment and sweetly accepted his hand. "I am much obliged, all the same."

Bill shook with malicious laughter. "Out in the country girls are warranted to jump clean over a measly little hack like this," he explained.

The girl took a seat in the back corner of the dusty vehicle, and Bill opened conversation with her by asking what kind of a time she had been having "in the east."

"Fine," said she.

"Did ye get as far back as my old town?"

"What town is that, Bill?"

"Oh, come off! You know I'm from Omaha."

"No; I only got as far as South Bend."

The picture which the girl had made as she dashed up to the pasture gate—her hat rim blown away from her brown face and sparkling eyes—united with the kindliness in her voice as she accepted his gallant aid, entered a deep impression on the tourist's mind, but he did not turn his head to look at her—perhaps he feared Bill's elbow quite as much as his guffaw—but he listened closely, and by listening learned that she had been "east" for several weeks, and also that she was known, and favorably known, all along the line, for whenever they met a team or passed a ranch some one called out, "Hello Berrie!" in cordial salute, and the men, old and young, were especially pleased to see her.

Meanwhile the stage rose and fell over the gigantic swells like a tiny boat on a monster sea, while the sun blazed ever more fervently from the splendid sky, and the hills glowed with ever increasing tumult of color. Through this land of color, of repose, of romance, the young traveler rode, drinking deep of the germless air, feeling that the girl behind him was a wondrous part of this wild and unaccountable country.

He had no chance to study her face again till the coach rolled down the hill to "Yancy's," a ranch house, where they were to take dinner and change horses.

With intent to show Bill that he did not greatly fear his smiles the youth sprang down and offered a hand to assist his charming fellow passenger to alight, and she, with kindly understanding, again accepted his aid, to Bill's chagrin, and they walked up the path side by side.

"This is all very new and wonderful to me," the young man said in explanation, "but I suppose it's quite commonplace to you—and Bill."

"Oh, no—it's home!"

"You were born here?"

"No. I was born in the east, but I've lived here ever since I was three years old."

"By east you mean Kansas?"

"No. Missouri," she laughed back at him.

She was taller than most women and gave out an air of fine unconscious health which made her good to see, although her face was too broad to be pretty. She smiled easily, and her teeth were white and even. Her hand he noticed was as strong as steel and brown as leather. Her neck rose from her shoulders like that of an acrobat, and she walked with the sense of security which comes from self reliant strength.

She was met at the door by old lady Yancy, who pumped her hand up and down, exclaiming: "My stars! I'm glad to see ye back! 'Pears like the country is just naturally goin' to the dogs without you. The dance last Saturday was a frost, so I hear—no snap to the fiddlin', no gimp to the jiggin'. It shorely was pitiful."

Yancy himself, tall, grizzled, succinct, shook her hand in his turn. "Ma's right, girl, the country needs ye. I'm scared every time ye go away fer fear some feller will snap ye up."

The young tourist—he signed W. W. Norcross in Yancy's register—watched her closely and listened to every word she spoke with an intensity of interest which led Mrs. Yancy to say privately: "'Pears like that young 'lunger' ain't goin' to forgit ye if he can help it."

The Girl Behind Him Was a Wondrous Part of This Wild and Unaccountable Country.

"What makes you think he's a 'lunger?'"

Thereafter a softer light—the light of pity—shone in the eyes of the girl. "Poor fellow! He does look kind o' peaked. But this climate will bring him up to the scratch," she added, with optimistic faith in her beloved hills.

A moment later the downcoming stage pulled in loaded to the side lines, and everybody on it seemed to know Berea McFarlane. It was hello here and hello there and how are ye between, with smacks from the women and open cries of "Pass it around" on the part of the men, till Norcross marveled at the display.

"She seems a great favorite," he observed to Yancy.

Berea's popularity was not so remarkable as her manner of receiving it. She took it all as a sort of joke—a good, kindly joke. She shook hands with her male admirers and smacked the cheeks of her female friends with an air of modest deprecation. "Oh, you don't mean it," was one of her phrases. She enjoyed this display of affection, but it seemed not to touch her deeply, and her impartial, humorous acceptance of the courtship of the men was equally charming, though this was due, according to remark, to the claims of some rancher up the line.

She continued to be the theme of conversation at the dinner table and yet remained unembarrassed and gave back quite as good as she received.

"If I was Cliff," declared one lanky admirer, "I'd be shot if I let you out of my sight. It ain't safe."

She smiled broadly. "I don't feel scared."

The northbound coach got away first, and as the girl came out to take her place Norcross said, "Won't you have my seat with the driver?"

Norcross understood. She didn't relish the notion of being so close to the frankly amorous driver, who neglected no opportunity to be personal. Therefore he helped her to her seat inside and resumed his place in front.

Bill, now broadly communicative, minutely detailed his tastes in food, horses, liquors and saddlers in a monologue which would have been tiresome to any one but an imaginative young eastern student. Bill had a vast knowledge of the west, but a distressing habit of repetition.

In this informing way some ten miles were traversed, the road climbing ever higher and the mountains to right and left increasing in grandeur each hour, till of a sudden and in a deep valley on the bank of another swift stream they came upon a squalid saloon and a minute postoffice. This was the town of Moskow.

Bill, lumbering down over the wheel, took a bag of mail from the boot and dragged it into the cabin. The girl rose, stretched herself and said: "This stagin' is slow business. I'm cramped. I'm going to walk on ahead."

"May I go with you?" asked Norcross.

"Sure thing! Come along."

As they crossed the little pole bridge which spanned the flood the tourist exclaimed: "What exquisite water! It's like melted opals."

He would gladly have lingered, listening to the song of the water, but as she passed on he followed. The opposite hill was sharp and the road stony, but as they reached the top the young easterner called out, "See the savins!"

Before them stood a grove of cedars, old, gray and drear, as weirdly impressive as the cacti in a Mexican desert. Torn by winds, scarred by lightnings, deeply rooted, tenacious as tradition, unlovely as Egyptian mummies, fantastic, dwarfed and blackened, these unaccountable creatures clung to the ledges. "What do you suppose planted those trees there?"

The girl was deeply impressed by the novelty of this query. "I never thought to ask. I reckon they just grew."

"No, there's a reason for all these plantings," he insisted.

"We don't worry ourselves much about such things out here," she replied, with charming humor. "We don't even worry about the weather. We just take things as they come."

They walked on talking with new intimacy. "Where is your home?" he asked.

"A few miles out of Bear Tooth. You are from the east, Bill says—'the far east,' we call it."

"From New Haven. I've just finished at Yale. Have you ever been in a city?"

"Oh, yes! I go to Denver once in awhile, and I saw St. Louis once, but I was only a yearling and don't remember much about it. What are you doing out here, if it's a fair question?"

He looked away at the mountains. "I got rather used up last spring, and my doctor said I'd better come out here for awhile and build up. I'm going up to Meeker's mill. Do you know where that is?"

"I know every stovepipe in this park," she answered. "Joe Meeker is kind o' related to me—uncle by marriage. He lives about fifteen miles over the hill from Bear Tooth."

This fact seemed to bring them still closer together. "I'm glad of that," he said pointedly. "Perhaps I shall be permitted to see you now and again? I'm going to be lonesome for awhile, I'm afraid."

"Don't you believe it! Joe Meeker's boys will keep you interested," she assured him.

The stage overtook them at this point and Bill surlily remarked, "If you'd been alone, young feller, I'd 'a' give you a chase." His resentment of the outsider's growing favor with the girl was ludicrously evident.

As they rose into the higher levels the aspen shook its yellowish leaves in the breeze and the purple foothills gained in majesty. Great new peaks came into view on the right, and the lofty cliffs of the Bear Tooth range loomed in naked grandeur high above the blue green of the pines which clothed their sloping eastern sides.

At intervals the road passed small log ranches crouching low on the banks of creeks, but aside from these—and the sparse animal life around them—no sign of settlement could be seen. The valley lay as it had lain for thousands of years, repeating its forests as the meadows of the lower levels send forth their annual grasses. Norcross said to himself, "I have circled the track of progress and have re-entered the border America, where the stage coach is still the one stirring thing beneath the sun."

At last the driver, with a note of exultation, called out, "Grab a root, everybody; it's all the way down hill and time to feed."

And so as the dusk came over the mighty spread of the hills to the east and the peaks to the west darkened from violet to purple black the stage rumbled and rattled and rushed down the winding road through thickening signs of civilization and just at nightfall rolled into the little town of Bear Tooth, which is the eastern gateway of the Ute plateau.

Norcross had given a great deal of thought to the young girl behind him, and thought had deepened her charm. Her frankness, her humor, her superb physical strength and her calm self reliance appealed to him, and the more dangerously because he was so well aware of his own weakness and loneliness, and as the stage drew up before the hotel he fervently said, "I hope I shall see you again?"

RAILROAD CLERKS HAVE GRIEVANCES

Will Strike Unless Settlement Is Soon Forthcoming

Boston, June 7.—President Elliott of the New Haven system has consented to meet a representative of the federal board of conciliation in connection with the grievances of the Brotherhoood of Railway Clerks of the New Haven road, who, by more that a 98 percent vote of their membership of 2000, decided to strike unless their grievances against the road are settled.

No developments of any kind are likely to change the situation until after Tuesday, at which time Elliott and the member of the federal conciliation board will confer regarding the grievances, in New York. Whatever develops at this conference will determine the future course of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

The committee from the brotherhood has for some time been endeavoring to adjust their difficulties with the road through General Manager Bardo, but it is believed that differences as to what should be taken up suspended further conferences.

It is said the railway clerks' contention is that the railroad is not living up to the contract that it made with their organization.

ASKS POLICE TO AID HIM

Can't Start Auto For Spark Plugs Stolen

Rumors that a fight had occured at an East Braintree motor inn about midnight drifted to Quincy police headquarters about 1 A. M. when a man whose name has been witheld by the police requested the assistance of officers in getting his auto to his home

The man then explained his predicament as being due to the theft of the spark plugs from his machine and in the conversation mentioned that a fight had occured. Assistance was not given because it was outside the jurisdiction of the local police.

HOW TO TAKE CARE OF LAWN

ARTICLE ONE.

GENERAL MANAGEMENT.

Washington, D. C. June 4—The improvement of an old lawn is a very much more difficult problem than establishing a new one. In many cases it is impracticable to attempt the improvement of an old lawn that is in bad condition, say the specialists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. However, if a reasonably good turf obtains, it is possible to better it materially by reseeding, fertilizing, and watering. In the majority of cases improvement is desired in the spring, since at this season many bare spots are in evidence as the result of the preceding winter. If the areas to be improved are small, they can be handworked and reseeded with little difficulty. If they are large, it is usually advisable to spade them up, work thoroughly and seed, as in the case of starting a new lawn. In any event, reseeding should be done early in the spring with a liberal quantity of the mixture before described.

When the stand of grass is thin over the entire lawn or a greater portion of it, a special seeder equipped with small disks has been found very satisfactory for cutting the seed into the sod and thereby producing favorable conditions for germination and subsequent growth. In the early spring, however, the soil is usually loose as a result of the freezing and thawing and is in sufficiently open condition to permit the seed to be covered with little difficulty. After seeding, if the ground has become quite dry, rolling is usually beneficial. Care should be taken when mowing or watering the newly seeded areas to avoid disturbing the young grass. This caution always applies in a measure to fall seeding, although there is not so much danger of damage in the case of the latter.

FERTILIZING.

The management of the lawn after it is once established is an extremely important matter, and there are a few general practices that should be followed carefully. Beginning in the early spring, the first thing to do is to remove with a rake the top dressing that has been applied the fall before. After removing this it is usually advisable to apply some fertilizer, even though the soil is already reasonably fertile. One of the very best fertilizers for the lawn in the spring is nitrate of soda, but on account of its quick action and its caustic effect extreme caution should be used in its application. Five pounds of nitrate of soda are sufficient for 1,000 square feet of lawn, and if applied in solution with the watering pot and the grass then thoroughly watered with a hose, there is little danger of scalding. Bone meal is probably the best commercial fertilizer to use on a lawn, considering the danger from the misuse of nitrate of soda. Bone meal can be used without taking any special caution in its application, as it is in no way injurious to the grass. Eight pounds to 1,000 square feet is a liberal application. Any commercial fertilizer that is used should be applied early in the spring when the grass begins to grow. In fact, bone meal can be used to advantage every month during the growing season, except perhaps July and August. Fertilizing through the season is especially beneficial in keeping the grass stimulated at times when it would otherwise be more or less inactive. Pulverized limestone as a top dressing is very helpful, and an application of this substance can be made either in the fall, winter, or spring. Lime corrects the acidity of the surface soil and is useful in checking the growth of moss and various other plants that are detrimental to the grass.

BIG FESTIVAL IN MILTON

Large crowds attended the Junior Suffrage League festival, held Saturday afternoon and evening on the F. L. Milliken estate, Brush Hill road. This was the first time that anything so large has been carried on in Milton and it proved a stupendous success, both socially and financially. The entertainment offered was most generous and from the hour of opening to the very close there was something doing every minute.

In the afternoon Mrs. Tom Thumb the dwarf who has been with Barnum and Bailey's circus, was present and told the story of her life. She laid great emphasis upon the fact that she was an ardent suffragette, M. W. Barrett, the bee king, of Hyde Park gave an exhibition of trained bees, which proved to be exceedingly interesting. Moving pictures were run for three hours steady. Mrs. Wyman's dancing class of Boston gave an exhibition of fancy dancing on the front lawn. This was the big event of the afternoon and the gracefulness of the children brought forth loud applause.

The chief entertainment in the evening was the play entitled "Election Day," presented by members of the Junior league. The parts were acted exceptionally well, due to the excellent coaching of Mrs. James. The cast included:

Following the play Miss Carey gave several excellent readings which were enjoyed by all. The day ended with dancing which continued up to 10.30 P. M.

In the rear of the house all sorts of eatables could be procured. The roulette wheel, William Hoxie in charge, proved a big attraction. The chairmen of the tables were candy, Edith Stocker, hot chocolate, John Swift; sandwich, Marion E. Hathaway; home made cake,Dorothy Lawton; ice cream, Kenneth D. Johnson; grabs, Marjorie Piper.

MONTCLAIRS ARE CHAMPS

Defeat Hancocks By Three To One

The Montclairs beat the Hancocks and won the championship of the National grammar school league at Merrymount park Monday afternoon by a score of 3 to 1. Both teams were evenly matched and played good base ball.

The work of the batteries was especially good. The pitchers were in fine shape, clear headed and collected and communicated the feeling of how much was at stake to their associates.

Montclair scored its first two runs in the third when they commenced to find Dahlberg. The third run was scored by Callahan who took every kind of chance in working his way home when a low throw sent down to second to choke him off went by the centre fielder.

A double play, Thompson, to Burgess to Lemieux at third put the brakes on the vehicle which was carrying Hancock to the tie mark. The bases were filled when the play was made. All held while Thompson chased in behind third for a fly ball. He just reached it with his glove and the ball rolled a few feet by him. All the forced runners made a frantic effort to advance. Thompson recovered the ball and drove home to Burgess who quickly relayed to Lemieux at third, retiring the contenders.

The score by innings:

Hancock	0 0 0 0 1 0—1

Congratulations are being deservedly showered upon those who participated in the Flower Festival given by the Dorcas society of the Swedish Lutheran church. A large number enjoyed a program of unusual merit.

After the opening by Mrs. Hokenson who had worked hard for the success of the affair, the chorus rendered "Over the Fields of Clover," and the welcome was given by Miss Esther Viden.. Miss Esther Hermanson delighted with a piano selection, followed by a duet, "Thoughts," by Misses Anna Viden and Anna Carlson. This was greatly enjoyed. Miss Lily Carlson gave an entertaining reading entitled "Den hvita liljan"

MONDAY'S SESSION OF COUNCIL LASTS UNTIL AFTER MIDNIGHT

Street and Gasoline Permits Hearings Delay Consideration of Regular Business

It lacked by a few minutes of one o'clock this morning when the last members of the City Council had left for home in special electric cars and in one of the big automobiles of the Electric Light Co. which Supt. Austin had kindly furnished to take some of the members home. It was the latest session the City Council of 1915 has held and probably beats the record for late sessions of the Council. When the hands of the clock back of President Whiton's desk had passed the hour of midnight, about all the spectators had departed and several of the councilmen had lighted their cigars, prepared to remain all night if necessary to complete business. It was exactly 12.18 when the gavel went down and the meeting adjourned Then there was a short meeting of a special committee and it was not far from 1 o'clock before all had gone

There were several things which served to prolong the meeting but the chief reason was public hearings on the acceptance of a large number of streets and for gasoline permits, and it was 10.30 before the last hearing was finished and the council got down to the regular business.

TO INVESTIGATE FIRE DEPT.

The order for a special commitee, to include the persident of the council and committee on fire department matters, to investigate the fire department came up under unfinished business, and after being amended so that the committee should report at the next meeting the order was adopted. Later the council adopted an order authorizing the expenditure of $150 for the expenses of the committee.

Councilman McGrath offered an order for a special committee with powers to canvas the finding of the commission which settled he grade crossing problem, and with power to examine all books. In support of his order the councilman said he was surprised at the very meagre report of this important matter contained in the annual report of the City Solicitor. He had also been informed that the plan contemplated raising the bridge on Adams street which would make it a source of danger He did not know what should be done but in an important matter such as this the council should be well informed. The order was adopted and Councilmen McGrath, Prescott and Thompson appointed as the committee.

The city treasurer sent a communication asking for authority to borrow $100,000 in anticipation of taxes in addition to the $500,000 already authorized and later Councilman Richards offered the necessary order which was referred to the finance committee.

UPHOLD MINORITY REPORT.

Another matter that created some debate was the report of the finance committee recommending that the orders for street rebuilding, involving an expenditure of $33,700 be recommitted to the street committee with insructions to cut the amount to $25,000.

Councilman Smith offered a minority report that the orders ought to pass. In support of his report he said that the members of the street committee had gone carefully into the matter and their word should be taken.

Councilman McGrath spoke at length in favor of the majority committee report. He believed that it was time that the Council got down to some definite plan. He also believed that all street matters should be sent to the Finance-committee before being acted upon. Some of these streets are urgent, he argued, but there are others that could just as well wait over until another year. He did not think the council was going on the right lines.

Councilman Griffin also favored the majority committee report believing that many of this kind of orders should go into the budget.

Chairman Richards of the Finance Committee said the committee locked at the matter from a purely business standpoint. Councilman Thompson also favored the majority report.

Chairman O'Dowd, Councilman Craig, McDonald, Slade and Beeman favored the minority report. Councilman O'Dowd in defending the street committee said that it was good business to pass these orders as they called for the permanent building of the streets which would last from five to ten years. This was a borrowing proposition and not one for the budget.

Councilman Craig asked the Mayor if he wanted the matter put into the budget. Mayor Campbell replied that he did not desire to take any part in the discussion but if the matters came to him he would consider them.

The minority report was then accepted on a rising vote of 13 yes and 8 no. The orders were then given their second reading and placed in the calendar. Later in the evening, Councilman Smith offered a loan order for $33,700 to cover the cost of the streets named. Referred to Finance committee.

SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET.

Fire Department Equipment	$11,000
Street Oiling	5,000
Street Lighting	800
Machine Gun Co.	1,500
Playground, Ward Six	600
Tuberculosis Dispensary,	1,000
	$19,800

Later Councilman Richards offered an order for the supplementary budget which was referred to the Finance Committee.

The public hearings on the acceptance of streets began at 8 o'clock and before they were over it was 10. 30. Most of the proposed new streets went through with no opposition although there was some opposition on a few streets. After the hearing they were recommitted.

On the hearing on permits for garages and to keep gasoline there was no opposition to any with the exception of the A. B. C. Oil Co. which desired to maintain a 20,000 gallon tank at Wollaston. There was considerable opposition to the granting of this permit.

After hearing this petition went back to the committee and the others were granted.

The city solicitor, dock commissioner and committee on legislative matters were instructed to attend the hearing today before the Directors of th Port of Boston and oppose the granting of a license to Sarah F. Castor to enclose the flats of Town river.

The Mayor forwarded a letter from C. F. Danforth of the Fire Hazard Commision praising Chief Billings of the fire department which was referred to the special investigating committee.

TO CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

Preliminary steps will be taken at the regular convocation of St. Stephen's Royal Arch chapter, Wednesday evening, looking toward the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the chapter which occurs next year. St Stephen's Royal Arch chapter is one of the oldest Capitular Masonic bodies in the state, having been constituted March 13, 1866. Its first high priest was James H. Upham and since its constitution it has been presided over by 30 different high priests, of whom all but six or seven are now living. Just what form the celebration will take has not as yet been determined but it will probably be held as near the anniversary of constitution as possible.

A KING FOR A WEEK.

Although the war today is a thing largely of mathematics, big guns and trenches, there are plenty of human interest stories coming from the front which will be the basis of many novels of the future. The Great War is a mine of plots for novelists.

One of the best stories which has recently gotten into print is the story of the British private who made himself king of Ypres last November. When the town was bombarded the British troops withdrew leaving the civil population and also, involuntarily, a private soldier who was asleep in a cellar. He awoke the following morning to find Ypres without any authority and not liking that state of affairs he proceeded to govern it himself. He was called the king of Ypres and his rule was a despotic one.

Looters were shot on sight and drunkenness was curbed with a strong hand, although the soldier was himself inclined to the bottle. At the end of a week he was arrested by a British officer and court-martialed. The court however, in view of his services in preserving law and order forgave his other offences.

What a tale Dumas would have evolved about that plot. Porthos, King of Ypres, would indeed be a sparkling chapter. Or Mr. Kipling in his better days; how he would revel in the Man Who Was King For a Week. Were O. Henry alive he might touch the story but he would surely change the ending: the soldier would be ordered shot by the courtmartial. It's a good plot and there are many more sent out every day as press dispatches.

HELPING MR. BRYAN.

Two Arizona boys were kidnapped a few days ago by the Mexican detachment guarding the garrison at Santa Cruz, Sonora. There were 150 soldiers under the command of a colonel. While the more peacefully disposed citizens were thinking about drafting a protest to Secretary Bryan a posse of ten cowboys and miners of Nogales, Arizona, mounted their horses and rode, fully armed, across the border. They arrived at the garrison and, pointing their guns at the colonel, demanded the boys or his life. They got the boys without resistance, the 150 soldiers curiously viewing the scene. Think of the nervous worry thus saved the honorable secretary of state who would have been obliged to write countless diplomatic notes which would probably have had no result.

A COUNTRY GENTLEMAN.

Ex-President Huerta of Mexico mowing the lawn of his new country estate on Long Island must be an inspiring spectacle. It shows to the passers-by the power of an ultimatum of a President of the United States, which can drive a man from a dictatorship to the whirring lawn mower.

By the way, did one ever see an example of such Christian forgiveness than that shown by the aforesaid Huerta, who proceeds to settle down in the country which dethroned him. Of course, it won't be long before Mr. H. sticks his finger in the Mexican pie again, that is, if there is any pie left. As he observes the little wheels revolving on that lawn mower of his we surmise there are some political wheels revolving in that still crafty old head. Perhaps he is getting some valuable tips from nearby Tammany.

ONLY ONE REGRET.

Two American citizens living at Dresden have made themselves particularly obnoxious to the American government by adverse criticism of Washington in the present crisis, declaring in a newspaper article that they were ashamed of their citizenship. Their names were Leon Raines and Karl Recknagel, good old Puritan names, forsooth. The American embassy at Berlin, acting under instructions from the state department, revoked their passports. This was well done. It is to be regretted that they cannot be compelled to serve in the German army, where they belong.

Were you one of the forehanded ones who contributed fifty cents that you might be granted your gasoline permit at the public hearing of the City Council? You figured the chances were good that those who delayed would be raised a dollar or so by the Impossible O'Keefe. But, as usual, he fooled you all and made the securing of the permits free for a time, except to those who had already applied.

The Adams family has not yet stopped having its representative in public life. This has been a notable family and it is to be hoped its members will continue to serve the republic for many years.

Those Quincy physicians and nurses who are going to join the Harvard unit for a few weeks' service in a British hospital will have an experience which should repay them for their self-secrifice in going

VERY GOOD ANSWER.

When Kaiser Wilhelm wrote an autograph letter to the Queen Dowager of Italy, asking her to intervene with her son to keep Italy neutral in the great war and avert a conflict with Austria she replied: "In the house of Savoy we reign one at a time." It was impertinence on the part of the Emperior of Germany, and the Queen Dowager made answer in a manner that would make a man less obstinate ashamed of himself. The queen has not forgotten the menace of Germany when last August Italy declined to join Germany and Austria in a war against Serbia. The Kaiser has a sister who, as Queen of the Hellenes may be able to keep Greece from helping Serbia, but the daughter of Prince Ferdinand of Savoy, and widow of King Humbert, is not to be influenced by his blandishments. The Grand Duches of Luxenburg is an other woman who has good reason for despising the Kaiser, and she declined to se him when not long since he desired an interview. She cannot forget how he invaded her little country at the beginning of the war in spite of her protests and in defiance of the treaty of 1867, which declared Luxemburg neutral territory. After the fighting is over Germany wil not have easy terms in the settlement of the many questions she has opened.—Lynn Item.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Editor of the Ledger:

With the Council Chamber filled to its utmost capacity by taxpayers representing every walk in life, summoned to appear for or against improvements needed and otherwise in their immediate neighborhood, there was presented to the fair minded citizens the most flagrant examples of domineering tactics ever exhibited in Quincy.

Hoy long will respectable residents of Quincy stand for such treatment as was given Mr. Stevens by Mr. Ross while entering his protest against what he had a perfect right to assume individually was objectionable?

Any citizen has a perfect right to state his views on these occasions if within the rules laid down by the presiding officer.

That citizens should be sarcastically grilled repeatedly by several councilmen, playing manifestly to the "grand stand" when all their statements were given courteously and in good faith, gave the hearers but one impression, and that was either too much interest was being taken by those councilmen to carry their decision as they wished, or on the other hand the time has arrived for a different stamp of representatives.

The reference to Mr. Stevens is simply for illustration as the writer has no interest whatever in the subject referred to, and the instance was many time repeated during the evening, the speakers being treated more like culprits than a highstanding, reputable body of Citizens.

It is a well known fact that the certainty of being subjected to this autocratic sarcasm employed by the councilmen, has kept in the past, many of our most influential citizens from entering the Council Chamber to speak for or against any proposed improvement.

The Taxpayers of Quincy demand courtesy from their representatives.

CELEBRATES HIS 80th BIRTHDAY

G. A. R. Veterans Honor Their Comrade

James W. Pierce one of the well known veterans of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R. celebrated his eightieth birthday Monday by entertaining a number of the veterans of the post. Some of the veterans who were unable to be present in the evening came in the afternoon and extended their congratulations. It was not until evening however that a dozen of the veterans of Paul Revere Post gathered at Mr. Pierce's home to do honor to the occasion.

All of these served their country faithfully during the trying days of the early sixties and Monday evening they fought over again many of the famous battles in which they took active part.

Those present were: Commander Mark E. Hanson, Past Commanders George L. Phillips and Francis P. Loud, William M. Bird, Luther Parott, John D. Williams, Henry Studley, John Farrell, Vice Commander Thomas Ring, James E. Maxim and Quinn Baxter of East Milton, who was Mr. Pierce's tent mate during the Civil war.

All of these veterans are now well along in years their average age being 75 years and 5 months.

Comrade Pierce, the host of the evening was assisted in entertaining the veterans by Mrs. Pierce and his daughter Miss Harriet B. Pierce, who served refreshments.

Mr. Pierce has made his home in Quincy practically all of his life and for many years was actively engaged in business. When the call came for defenders of the country he with thousands of other patriotic sons responded to the call and served during the war in the 11th Mass. Battery. Returning from war he again entered business which he followed for a number of years, before retiring from active business pursuits.

Although eighty years of age, Mr. Pierce enjoys remarkably good health and is one of the smart young men of Paul Revere Post. He always takes an active interest in any events of interest to the Post and for many years has been one of the color squad, in which position he marched with the post on the recent Memorial Day.

IDA TARBELL AT THE FORD

Miss Ida M. Tarbell, unquestionably the world's foremost woman-journalist, has just completed an investigation of the Ford Motor Company, the Ford Profit-Sharing Plan and the Ford Sociological Work. The Ford investigation, which required almost a week's visit in Detroit, is intended to supply Miss Tarbell with material for a series of articles—"The Golden Rule in Business"—which she is writing. To facilitate Miss Tarbell's investigation the Ford Motor Company and its officers and executive heads gave her access to all records, reports and factory departments. A tour of the mammoth plant alone required two days.

She accompanied Ford Sociological investigators in their visits to the homes of Ford employees. She witnessed tragedies and comedies. She saw the homes of American citizens in the making. She saw how the Ford Motor Company meets cases of destitution, desolation and dissipation. Miss Tarbell saw the inner workings of the Ford Profit-Sharing Plan and its influence upon the lives and morals and well-being of some 18,000 employees with dependents to the aggregate of 70,000 persons.

In addition to this intimate and exhaustive inspection of actual conditions, Miss Tarbell had long interviews with Messrs. Henry Ford, James Couzens, secretary and treasurer of the Ford Motor Company; Norval A. Hawkins, sales director; John R. Lee, chief of the Sociological Department and Charles A. Brownwell, advertising manager.

"It is all so stupendous" said Miss Tarbell, "that not only am I yet unable to comment intelligently upon it but I can't quite grasp it. I can at least say this, though: I have never anywhere on earth in the same length of time seen so much to make me to laugh, weep, wonder and rejoice as I have seen in the Ford factory. It is an overwhelming thing to contemplate—what this vast Ford Idea means to the awakening conscience of American industry."

PROCLAMATION OF FLAG DAY

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

By His Excellency David I. Walsh, Governor.

A PROCLAMATION.

The Legislature of Massachusetts has most wisely and patriotically ordained that the Governor shall annually designate, and that the people of the Commonwealth shall each year in a special manner commemorate, the anniversary of the adoption of our national flag by the Continental Congress, one hundred and thirty-eight years ago

I, therefore, David I. Walsh, Governor, do hereby designate and set apart Monday, the fourteenth day of June, as Flag Day, a day on which I call upon all good citizens to remind one another, and to teach our children and the stranger within our gates, to reverence the righteous and lofty principles of which the flag of our nation is an emblem.

Our flag stands today, as it has ever stood for individual liberty and equality before the law, for interstate and international righteousness, for civilization and for peace.

It represents a union of sovereign and independent states that substitute in their relations with one another, law for war the Golden Rule for the greed of aggression, the reign of reason for the reign of force.

Wherever our flag has gone it has been the herald of a better day. Preeminent for significance and beauty, men everywhere see in its emblazonry the symbols of hope and of light. By millions, seeking its shelter, men and women have left home, country and the flag of their nativity, knowing that our flag, and the free institutions for which it stands, would do more for their happiness, advancement and well-being than could be hoped for in the home of their ancestors or under the flag of any other government.

On this Anniversary Day, therefore let the Stars and Stripes be lovingly and thankfully displayed on every public place, work-shop and private dwelling, and let it be saluted with a pledge of fidelity by every citizen, young and old.

I recommend also that special exercises be held in churches and schools in its honor, with a prayer to Almighty God to bless and defend this our flag of freedom and of peace, to keep us faithful to the teachings of its origin and history, and to make it throughout coming generations still a refuge from oppression and an unsullied emblem of justice and good will among men.

Given at the Executive Chamber, in Boston, this fourth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth.

DAVID I. WALSH
By His Excellency the Governor.
Albert P. Langtry,
Secretary of the Commonwealth
God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

GRANITE BUSINESS GOOD

So Declares Jonathan S. Swingle in Letter.

Jonathan S. Swingle, writing to the American Stone Trade relative to the granite business in Quincy says:

"In Quincy, there has been the usual volume of spring business and indications are that summer and fall demands will be normal. In order to take care of increasing demands I am now in the process of making extensive improvements and additions to my quarries. I am adding to my equipment another large derrick of the latest type and have also contracted for a new steel bridge which will carry my dump track across the Quarry Railroad to land which I own adjoining, which will give me unlimited space for this purpose.

"My faith in Quincy granite is unshaken and I believe that the time will never be when her preeminent place at the front of the procession shall be usurped by others. With all these improvements under way I shall be busily engaged for the next few weeks getting all these matters in shape and in taking care of the usual demands for my Extra Dark and other grades of Quincy granite, there will be no idle time on my lands. My Quarries are yielding abundant quantities of the genuine Extra Dark stock, as well as the other grades, and dealers throughout the country may be assured of prompt attention and the usual service that they have come to know and expect in the past."

AT THE THEATRE

The feature picture at the Kincaide theatre Monday was "The Diamond from the Sky," which is growing more interesting every time it appears. The diamond changes hands again and Stanley learns who he really is in this episode. A one reel picture, "The Electric Alarm," introduces some real fire apparatus, which puts out a fire and thereby saves a train from destruction. The hero of the picture uses himself for a wire, to make up for the piece that is missing. "The House that Jack Moved" is a one reel comedy of a candidate for Mayor who foils the opposition by moving his house which the opposition claims is not in the city limits.

The stars of the vaudeville are Belmot & Fulton. This couple are well known to many through the Victrolas etc. the gentleman of the duo being the one who does the whistling for the records Accompanied by his partner and half a dozen canary birds, he gives perfect imitations of different birds. A violinist who can make the violin talk is a rare thing but Kubanoff does, he also plays the violin with gloves on. George Lavender has an interesting act. HALL PLACE M. E.

Rev. W. H. Germany preached from the thought of being alone with God taking as his text Matthew 6:6 "But thou when thy prayest, enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut thy door pray to thy father in secret and thy father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

The master in these instructions does not deal in generalities. He makes it a very personal matter. Prayer is, vast benefit to us, but the prayer which is of most value to the individual is that which is spent in communion when we are alone as individuals with Christ. When we have gone into the secret place and have closed the door, closed out the world and closed in ourselves with Christ is the time when prayer brings us the blessing.

When we are alone with Christ, here are certain benefits which come to us. Being alone with Christ gives opportunity for our hearts to be searched. In the spiritual life we need to place ourselves in the hands of the great physician. We do not know what in the mad rush of the world of his life some disease will eat and finally bring death to our spiritual life. We need to undergo the inspection at the hands of the great physician. We hear a great deal these days about searching vessels to see if they carry away any contraband We need this just as necessarily in the spiritual life, to be sure that when these immortal souls of ours have crossed the sea of life we have not been carrying anything of benefit to the enemy's camp."

The feature of the game was the twirling of "Scrappy" DeCoste, the Common's new boxman, who canned twelve of the opposing batters. In a vain effort to win the Blue Hills used three twirlers. The winning battery were DeCoste and Gosselin and for the losers, Bennett, Thomas, Patriarch and McDonald.

WORK ON NEW CHURCH GROUNDS

Nearly fifty of the fathers and sons of the families who will attend the new St. Joseph's Catholic church at Quincy Point organized a grading company Monday evening and worked several hours on the church grounds.

The company was organized almost in an instant's notice and all who participated in the overturning of the sods and levelling of the grounds appeared with their own picks and shovels. They worked until darkness made it impossible for them to see. Activities will be renewed this evening.

The families are keenly anticipating the celebrating of the first mass in the edifice on June 20. Fr M. J. Whist parties have been held the past few months in aid of the building fund and several clubs have been organized to work for that purpose.

Great Zeppelin Is Destroyed by Canadian Aviator

CREW OF TWENTY-EIGHT KILLED

Victor Hangs Head Down and Loses Control of Monoplane For a Moment After Dropping Deadly Bombs on German Air Raider—Minor Naval Activity Under Way In the Baltic—Teutonic Allies Will Soon Have Lemberg, According to Vienna—Reinforcements Aiding Germans In West—Important Battle Between Italians and Austrians Is Developing—French and British Claims of Victory Disputed by Turks

London, June 8.—For the first time on record, a Zeppelin in the air has been destroyed by an aviator in an aeroplane. Reginald A. J. Warneford, a young Canadian sub-lieutenant in the royal navy, performed the feat and is somewhere within the British lines, while the Zeppelin lies in ruins sprawled on the roof and ground of an orphanage near Ghent.

Falling there a blazing mass, after being struck by the aviator's bombs, its crew of twenty-eight men were killed as were also several occupants of the orphanage buildings.

The theory is advanced that this Zeppelin was the craft which raided the east coast of England, for the fact that it was in the air over Belgium, between Ghent and Brussels, at 3 o'clock in the morning, leads to the belief that it was returning from an expedition, not starting on one.

Dawn breaks early these days and the huge Zeppelin could be sighted far off and it is presumed that the craft was headed for a home hangar when Warneford came winging swiftly under the gray skies.

Thrilling Pursuit High In Air

The Zeppelin, which was flying comparatively low, began to mount at once, but the British wasp was speedier and climbed into the air in long spirals, reaching a position at length over the German's vast bulk. From this point of vantage Warneford pierced the Zeppelin's shell repeatedly with his incendiary bombs.

Without parallel is the story which Warneford will have to relate, for details of the fight have not yet been told. First came the long pursuit, for, according to the admiralty report, the aeroplane was 6000 feet up. To reach this altitude would require nearly twenty minutes, and the Zeppelin meantime could drive forward approximately fifteen miles.

Then followed the maneuvering for position and finally the dropping of the bombs, from which the dirigible tried vainly to escape. Minor explosions occurred, and at last one of terrific force, and the Zeppelin burst into flames.

At that moment Warneford must have been at close range over the dirigible, for almost simultaneously with the outburst his machine turned completely over, and for a moment he hung head down, with his monoplane, all control of which had been lost, pitching and tossing in the swift currents of air which rushed in to fill the vacuum created.

Victor Makes a Getaway

Then, by desperate effort, Warneford righted his machine far above the earth and planed to a landing behind the German lines. He alighted unhurt, set his propeller going again and flew off to the west.

Whether the Zeppelin's machine guns or rifles were turned on the aviator is not disclosed, but in order to attain such an advantageous position Warneford must have handled his machine skilfully, for this is an extremely difficult feat. Although the target the Zeppelin presents is extensive, it can be lifted by its own buoyancy to a great height, while the pursuing aeroplane has to rise in spirals by the power of its engine alone.

As the fight in mid-air occurred over that part of Belgium held by the Germans, hopes are raised in London that the Germans will be forced to move their Zeppelin bases eastward, thus making raids on England more hazardous.

Some of the reports say the non-combatant victims were two nuns and two orphans, and that others were injured, but a Reuter dispatch says that two nurses and two children were killed and many others injured.

All versions agree that the Zeppelin crew perished, and this seems certain, as the great craft was struck while more than a mile in the air and must have been a roaring torch before it struck the earth.

Conflict In the Baltic

Minor naval activity is under way in the Baltic sea. There was some sort of an engagement at the entrance to the Gulf of Riga. Petrograd reports the sinking of several German transports and one large unnamed vessel, while the Russians lost one auxiliary ship, the Yenesel.

The Germans say it was the Amur, but as the Amur, a mine layer of 2926 tons displacement, is a sister ship of the Yenisel, it would be easy for the names of these vessels to have been confused.

VON BETHMANN-HOLLWEG

German Chancellor, Who Is Believed to Be Author Of Germany's Latest Note.

Details of this sea encounter are meagre, but it is surmised in London that some of the German vessels concentrated at Kiel came out into the Baltic. It is quite clear, however, that no battle squadrons were engaged. It is expected in London that the Germans will renew their efforts to land troops on the Baltic coast of Russia.

The Fighting In Galicia

While the German centre in Galicia appears to be moving forward more slowly the Russians seem to be pressing both Teuton wings harder.

Petrograd announced a Russian success along the Pruth river, near Kolomea, where the Austro-Germans are said to have been forced back across the river and northeast of Przemysl. The Russians have made a considerable advance on the lower reaches of the San and have driven the Austro-Germans back to the Leng river.

Southwest of Lemberg, however, the Austro-Germans are advancing, although the Russians are contesting every inch of the roads to the Galician capital, which is the objective of the Teutonic allies. Vienna says the Austro-German forces are rapidly making the city untenable and that it will fall shortly.

London pretends to believe that the Austro-German advance, with eastern Galicia figuring prominently as the objective, is political, the idea of the Germans and Austrians being to exert an influence upon Roumania.

Petrograd suggests that the Russian lines of defense in Poland must be readjusted on account of the use of poisonous gases by the Germans. The reason for this is that these works, technically correct under the ordinary conditions of warfare, become death traps when exposed to this new engine of hostility.

Activity In the West

The Germans apparently have brought heavy reinforcements to the western line, where there are distinct signs of a resumption of the offensive on the part of the invaders. Nevertheless, the French report a slow and uninterrupted advance in the sector north of Arras and important gains north of the Aisne.

According to a French report, French troops, after a very effective bombardment at a point east of Tracy-le-Mont and north of the Aisne river, carried two successive lines of trenches on a front of one kilometre, together with several German works.

Italian Advance Begun

A general Italian advance across the Isonzo river, for a distance of forty miles north of the Gulf of Trieste, has been begun. A dispatch from Udine, Italy, says heavy fighting is in progress at Gradisca.

The Italian advance, the most formidable movement of the campaign, is meeting with the first determined resistance offered by the Austrians and an important battle apparently is developing. The first battle for possession of Tolmino is under way.

The Italian naval forces have carried out several operations against the Austrian coast points in the middle and lower Adriatic.

Turks Claim Victory

Contrary to the French and British claims of victory on the Gallipoli peninsula, the Turkish war office announces that the allies were defeated in the recent heavy fighting, sustaining large losses. A counter-attack by the Turkish right wing against positions captured by the allies is said to have been successful.

The allies claim that in their offensive on the Gallipoli peninsula they captured and held two lines of Turkish trenches along a front of nearly three miles. The allies found their general advance hindered through the inability of part of their force to penetrate the wire entanglements which the artillery fire had not destroyed.

SMART SIMPLICITY KEY NOTE

Simple Styles A Boon To Economical Dressers—Silks To The Fore—Beads And Garden Fixings.

Late May and early June show most of the fashionable functions at out-of-town places, where the lovely backgrounds of foliage and flowers lend a special charm to the daintily attired guests, while as everyone knows, nothing is so completely alluring as a country wedding whether inland or at the many delightful shore resorts.

AT BELMONT RACES.

The quiet simplicity which marks the attire of the leading fashionables is notable even at events that formerly brought out most elaborate frocks. Smart tailored suits of blue or black are mostly worn on cool days, varied by checks, and the various stripes which are already over-popular to suit fastidious wearers. With tailored getups small hats are the rule, and beside the very popular black and white types, one sees these adorned with natural flowers, leading a touch of becoming color and vivacity to an otherwise over-plain costume. Mrs. August Belmont wore the other day, a small hat adorned with pink morning glories, topping a plain simple frock of serge and Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt a hat with yellow buttercups, as the touch of color relief with her smart blue tailored suit.

VOGUE OF SILK.

On warmer days the preponderance of silk attire attracts attention. Taffeta is a long way in the lead both in suits and frocks, and nine out of every ten such dresses have cool sleeves of chiffon to match the silk either without lining or backed with white. There is an endless variety of detail in the trimming of these but the smartest and most practical adornment is self-trimming in the popular bound scallops which edge the bottom of the skirt, or its tunic, little knife pleatings similarly used, and cordings and shirrings galore at every point where they help to produce the required flare or restrain a too voluminous outline. Smocking is revived and used effectively on blouses and dresses, for hip yoke effects and for panels and odd trimming touches.

GARDENING A FAD.

All sorts of pretty and useful conceits have come in the wake of the popular fad for gardening that is coming to prevail here nearly as extensively as in England. Most of such ideas are copied after English models from the working blouse or smock of colored washable material, to the droop Maud Mellurish garden hat, and cunning little baskets fitted with garden conveniences which are attached to a spiled stick that runs into the soil and holds the tools just where they are most convenient.

Larger baskets hung on the arm, of painted splint are used for gathering the posies, and these have their own special scissors so that the work can be done in just the right way.

PERFECT GROOMING.

Daintiness is the keynote of style today. Whether one wears a fluffy, frilly gown, or the simplest sport attire, it is obligatory that one's grooming shall be perfect in every detail. A mussy, badly arranged coiffure, careless manicuring, or unsightly skin blemishes spoil the effect of any sort of get-up. A little intelligent care is all that is needed to keep a woman at her best. Cold cream and a dusting of powder, protect the skin from sunburn and other injurious effects of wind and sun, and a very few minutes devoted daily to their care will keep the hands trim and sightly, while for first aid to remove superfluous hair growths X Bazin depilatory powder, which has been in constant use by discriminating women for over sixty years, does the trick safely and successfully in a very few minutes.

BEAD EMBROIDERIES.

As the season progresses, bead embroideries are increasingly used on all sorts of hats and blouses, on sash ends and girdles on buttens and pockets, and in fact anywhere where a touch of ornament adds to the design. These are easily and quicklywrought—many of the most effective types being just outline designs of flowers, butterflies or conventional forms, where the beads are used on their strings as they come from the shops, and couched down at intervals with a thread that matches the dress material in color, and is therefore invisible.

JOHNSON MUST STAY NEUTRAL

Andrew Johnson, principal of the Gridley Bryant and Montclair schools which play the first game in the world's series for the city championship at Merrymount Park Friday afternoon, is the first principal obliged to declare his neutrality in such a series during the six years they have been held.

Mr. Johnson came to Quincy a year ago and is till a stranger, comparatively speaking, to a majority of the school children of the city. He has been quite conspicuousthe past six weeks, however, and will be more so the balance of the base ball season.

Mr. Johnson is one of those royal rooters of the city who loves the national game and because of his liking for it and his aptitude to play various positions, gained through wide experience, he proved to be a fine source of inspiration to the boys of his respective schools.

He early took up the development of the boys where it was left off by his predecessors and lost no time in getting them under way and perhaps no master of the city has enjoyed the confidence of the boys more than he.

Mr. Johnson started his base ball career at Provincetown High school, where he captained the team and pitched. He then went to Hyannis Normal school and played there as a student and also on the summer team of the town, composed of college players from New England. At Boston University he dumped into the limelight as a fast fielder on the varsity and at Columbia he played with the class teams for two years. His inside knowledge was of great assistance in straightening out the kinks in the boys.

He is modest over the showing made by both his schools, dismissing the subject this morning by simply saying "The boys were there."

The entire season as in former years has been conducted under the direction of Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director of the schools. It had been underway but a short time when the other masters were pointing out Gridley Bryant as the probable winner of the American division and Montclair as the probable winner of the National division, and more than one has joshed Coach Johnson on the stand he would have to take in the event of his teams winning and playing in the world's series.

Messrs. French and Thompson of the faculty of Quincy High School and Alex Robertson of the Y. M. C. A. will umpire the series. The second game will be played Monday afternoon. If a third is necessary it will be played Wednesday afternoon of next week.

HOW TO TAKE CARE OF LAWN

ARTICLE II.

MOWING, ROLLING, SPRINKLING.

Washington, D. C. June 8—There is no hard and fast rule to be followed in connection with mowing the lawn, but clipping twice a week is not apt to injure it, and will induce the formation of a good turf, according to the lawn specialists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Too frequent clipping, however, is a drain on the vitality of the grass, and frequently results in permanent injury.

There is some difference of opinion as to whether clippings should be removed after mowing, but in general their removal is advised, especially during wet weather, since if left to lie on the surface they are conducive to the growth of molds, which in turn produce injury to the turf. On new seedings, however, or where the grass is thin, clippings can frequently be allowed to remain with benefit.

New seedings should not be clipped closely, and during the hot weather of midsummer and early fall the mower should be set high for old and new grass alike. The roller should be used discreetly. New grass is frequently benefited by a light rolling after the first cutting. Old sod should be rolled in the spring to firm the surface that has been loosened by freezing and thawing, but during midseason it is very doubtful if the lawn should be rolled even lightly, especially where the soil is of a heavy nature.

There are probably more mistakes made in connection with the watering of the lawn than in any other phase of its management. The practice of sprinkling as it is almost universally followed is fundamentally wrong, not that the sprinkler does not furnish enough water to the grass during the season, but that it does not furnish it in properly distributed quantities, Sprinkling for a short period may appear to wet the sod thoroughly, but in reality the water does not penetrate much below the surface. This encourages the formation of surface roots and makes the grass less resistant to the severe conditions of weather and usage.

Except in rare cases, the lawn should not be watered oftener than two or three times a week, provided watering is done properly. A thorough soaking is necessary and should be given in the late afternoon or early morning. The ordinary type of revolving spray is quite satisfactory, but the amount of water applied by it is usually much less than appears. The point to be borne in mind is that the ground should be thoroughly saturated at each application to at least three inches in depth.

CO-OPERATIVE BANK.

Fore River Officials Consider Matter.

Preliminary steps to organize a co-operative bank for workmen at the Fore River shipyard have been taken by the officials of the company and circular letters have been addressed to the men asking their views on it and how many shars they would take.

If a sufficint number of responses are received and the proper amount of interest is taken application will be made for a charter. In the event of one being granted the bank will b the third of its kind in the city, the other two being the Quincy and Wollaston Co-operative banks.

GIRLS IN MINORITY.

At the box social of the Y. P. S. C. E of Memorial Congregational church Monday night there was an unusual number of young men present so that the boxes were not uactioned. as it had been suggested that some young woman ask two young men so as to have one more man than girls but so many asked two that with the few who came unaccompanied there were just twice the number of young men present as girls. The young women enjoyed the joke so well that they set the tables and all had lunch together.

Q. H. S. LOSES IN CLOSE GAME

Milton High Wins By Score of Six to Five

The base ball team of the Quincy High school lost to Milton High at Merrymount park Monday afternoon in a South Shore league game by a score of 6 to 5. The fans have questioned the decision of the umpire on base running, however, and the matter may come before the league directors, with a remote possibility that the game may be played over.

The teams, long standing rivals, have clashed three times this season so far. Rain put a stop to the first game at Merrymount and Milton won the second at Milton. A tossup will probably decide where a fourth game would be played if one is ordered.

The fans and some of the players feel Umpire Cullen made an illegal decision when Paolucci failed to touch first base in making the circuit for a home run and was allowed to go back to first base directly from the plate. They claim it violated Rule 52 which states "The base-runner must touch each base in legal order, viz: First, second, third and home bases; and when obliged to return while the ball is in play, must retouch the base or bases in reverse order. He can only acquire the right to a base by touching it before having been put out, and shall then be entitled to hold such base until he has legally touched the next base in order or has been legally forced to vacate it for a succeeding base-runner."

Paolucci's drive went into the hollow in right field. DiSenso, immediately covered first when the runner didn't touch it. The ball was fielded and thrown to home with no one there. Milton players realizing Paolucci had violated a rule sent him back to first. DiSenso ran in and recovered the ball and threw it to O'Connor. He walked to first and tagged the runner.

Umpire Cullen declared him safe and allowed a single instead of the homer. Some of the players disputed the decision but after some conversation it was dropped for the time being and renewed later.

The game was not as snappy as some in which the teams have participated this season. Four errors were chalked against Quincy and five against Milton. The weather was not of the best and a slight drizzle swept the field, dampening the ball and slowing up the men.

Most of the Milton runs were the result of hits. Quincy rallied in the seventh and eighth but was able to send but three runs across, one less than was needed to tie the score.

The best hit of the day was made by Larkin who drove the ball out to center field where it landed almost at the foot of the pine tree and where it stayed because the ground was soft. He was able to get only as far as third.

Robertson netted 12 strikeouts until relieved by Reiser in the eighth inning. He was not always on the job, his carelessness in handling a high throw from Parks resulting in one run for Quincy.

In an awkward attempt to score Hamlin, Larkin, with two out bunted on the third strike. The ball went foul and he retired his side. Percy Jenkins played third and performed unusually well for a young fellow.

The best catch of the day was by Parson, the visiting centre fielder who chased and speared a long drive made by Reardon. Bryan sent in the ninth as a pinch hitter, fanned.

Desmond broke his long record of being the only player who hasn't made a hit this season when he came across in the eighth with a single. It was his 43rd ime at bat. The summary:

CONSTANTINE VERY CLOSE TO DEATH

Greece Will Doubtless Enter War Upon Demise of King

London, June 8.—The death of the King of Greece is expected at any minute, according to advices from Athens. Constantine is alive, but there is absolutely no hope for his recovery. He may not live through today.

The populace awaits with bated breath the news of the demise of the monarch, for it is generally acknowledged that with Constantine dead the great factor for neutrality will be gone, and that the new king will not be long in aligning his country with the allies and actively entering the war.

The present queen, the kaiser's sister, will not, it is believed, be able to prevent her son from becoming an enemy of his imperial uncle.

Aged Man Burns to Death

Swanzey, N. H., June 8.—Rodney R. McKay, 86, was burned to death and his daughter, Mrs. Geore Averill, was badly burned during a fire that destroyed her home here. The fire is thought to have been incendiary. The loss is $3000.

Prison Term For Deputies

New Brunswick, N. J., June 8.—Nine deputies convicted here for manslaughter in connection with the shooting down of Roosevelt strikers, were sentenced to not more than ten and not less than two years in the penitentiary.

Votes For Danish Women

Copenhagen, June 8.—The Danish parliament unanimously passed the new constitution which confers the suffrage on women and abolishes the special electoral privileges heretofore exercised by the wealthier classes.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Rev. Dr. Jesse B. Thomas, 82, theologian and author, pastor-emeritus of the Baptist temple of Brooklyn, died at his home in that city.

Three occupants of an automobile were killed at Benwood, W. Va., when the machine was struck by a train.

Mrs. Lyman A. Nichols was killed and her daughter, Miss Ruth Nichols, was perhaps fatally injured in an automobile accident at Phoenixville, Conn.

Cardiff street railway workers passed a resolution against the employment of women conductors.

WHISKY FRAUDS ARE UNCOVERED

Search For Missing Internal Revenue Division Agent Reveals Violation of Law by Some Distillery Operators Through Alleged Conspiracy With Officials of the Government

Washington, June 8.—By admission of the treasury department that search is being made by the secret service for Knox Booth, internal revenue division agent for Tennessee and Alabama, with headquarters at Nashville, light was let into what is declared to be a $20,000,000 revenue scandal, extending through three administrations.

Booth has been missig two weeks, his disappearance being coincident, it is said, with the arrest of John L. Caspar at Fort Smith, Ark., on a charge of conspiring to defraud the government. Caspar is head of a big distillery that is said to have evaded payment of a large part of its taxes through alleged conspiracy with revenue officers.

The search for Booth and the arrest of Caspar, it is said, constitute only the beginning of a widespread investigation into this branch of the revenue service, several other southern states being involved. It will be shown, it is said, that frauds against the government averaged $2,000,000 a year for the past ten years.

The system was first brought to light in 1907, treasury department records reveal. In the fall of that year reports on conditions, particularly in Virginia and North Carolina, resulted in an investigation by Chief Inspector Gates and in the conviction of a number of gaugers and storekeepers.

The inquiry was dropped, however, until the following spring, when it was called to President Roosevelt's attention and was reported to have been the subject of a cabinet meeting. A conference, participated in by treasury officials and the district attorneys from those two states, was held at the justice department and plans were laid for a complete investigation, but the matter never came to a head.

Gates was transferred to other work and finally quit the service, accepting appointment as state tax collector in Arkansas.

The present revenue commissioner, William H. Osborne, called Gates back into the service and put him at work on the distillery cases last December. Shortly afterward he was made deputy revenue commissioner and the work of completing the case at Fort Smith was left to Division Agent Barkman, with the resulting arrest of Caspar and the disappearance of Booth, it is said.

It is said the fact that Gates has been made Commissioner Osborne's right-hand man indicates an intention to go to the bottom of the whole matter and forecasts a scandal that may stir the whole south.

Booth's district formerly embraced Arkansas, and the facts on which the prosecution is based came to light, it is said, immediately after the change in districts was made.

The treasury department alleges that for years it has been the practice of some distillery operators to make tax payments of only 30 to 40 percent of the amount due to the goverment. The principal method of evading is said to be by turning out a much larger quantity of whisky than the apparent capacity of the plant. This is possible, it is said, only by collusion with the revenue officers—the gauger and storekeepers.

While it is not hoped to recover a very large part of the taxes lost, it is said the department expects to collect some of the money. Commissioner Osborne is understood to be desirous of recovering a large portion of that lost during the time he was commissioner, whether or not he is able to get any of that lost while R. E. Cabell was commissioner under Taft and while J. G. Capers was commissioner under Roosevelt.

THAW TRIAL HELD UP

Court Awaits Result of Appeal of State Attorney General

New York, June 8.—Harry K. Thaw's trial by a jury on the question of his present mental condition, originally set for June 7 by Supreme Court Justice Hendrick, will not begin until the appeal of the attorney general of the state is decided by the court of appeals at Albany.

The appeal is from the decision of the appellate division of the supreme court upholding Hendrick's opinion that Thaw was entitled to a jury trial.

Thaw's attorneys expect the court of appeals' decision within a week or ten days. Hendrick has set June 16 as the new date for the trial.

NO WORD FROM HOWARD

Story of Warships at Turtle Bay Does Not Worry Officials

Washington, June 8.—Commenting on the Los Angeles story that seven Japanese and English warships are still at Turtle bay, Lower California, Secretary of the Navy Daniels said he had received no report from Admiral Howard, Pacific coast naval commander, since the original scare was disposed of.

Other officials said Howard was in close touch with the west coast situation and could be depended on to say so if there were any suspicious developments.

It was added that the latest accounts were to the effect that the Japanese cruiser Asama, which rendered the other vessels' presence necessary to aid and protect it against a possible German attack since accidentally going ashore at Turtle bay, was still there.

THE COHEN MURDER

Grand Jury Takes It Up and Returns Two Secret Indictments

Boston, June 8.—Two secret indictments were returned by the Suffolk county grand jury as a result of a hurried investigation by District Attorney Pelletier into the killing of Samuel Cohen, the junk dealer, whose body was found buried in ashes at 116 West Springfield street May 29.

Delevan J. Rogers, 33, was arrested at Jersey City, and it is said by the officers that he has made a detailed statement, implicating his pal, Frank Tracy.

Cohen, according to information the police have, was lured to the basement by two men. He was shot and robbed of $52. Morris Taitel, another junk dealer, who was locked in a closet because he failed to show resistance, was also robbed.

HEAD CRUSHED BY BLOWS FROM CLUB

Slain Man's Widow and Landlord Held by Bangor Police

Bangor, Me., June 8.—The discovery of the bruised body of Stephen Moran, in his bed in a lodging house, was followed by the arrest, on charges of murder, of Morgan Doyle, proprietor of the house, and Lulu Moran, the dead man's widow. Three other persons who were in the house were detained as witnesses.

One of these, Miss Nettie Gray, stated to the police that when Mrs. Moran complained to Doyle about her husband's alleged attention to another woman in the house, Doyle tried to eject Moran, but was himself knocked down.

Mrs. Moran, Miss Gray says, engaged in the fight, and a moment later her husband was felled by a bottle. He went to bed, according to the statement, and within half an hour his room had been broken into and his head crushed by three blows from a club. According to Miss Gray, she saw Doyle force his way into the room.

WARREN CASE CONTINUED

Prisoner Charged With Murder and Assault With Intent to Kill

Newton, Mass., June 8.—Charles E. Warren, who shot and killed Walter G. Green and wounded Miss Ruby H. Stewart, was arraigned before Judge Kennedy on charges of murder and assault with a dangerous weapon with intent to kill. At the request of the police a continuance was granted until June 10.

Jealousy was the cause of the shooting. Green met his death while trying to restrain Warren from pursuing the girl, who fled through a rear door of Green's lunchroom after Warren had fired three shots at her. After killing Green, Warren followed the girl and shot her. She will recover.

HELD IN $5000 BAIL

Sailor Hartshorn Charged With Killing Hub Hotel Keeper

Boston, June 8.—Merrill Hartshorn, the sailor arrested for manslaughter in connection with the death of John Evans, proprietor of the Evans House, was held until next Monday on a continuance asked for by the police. Bail was fixed at $5000.

Hartshorn applied at the Evans House for a room, according to the evidence the police have, and in an argument with the proprietor struck Evans. The latter fell and struck his head, dying in a short time.

Mackerel Plentiful at Boston

MARBLES FOR KEEPS

The resolution of the teachers of the public schools of Muncie, Indiana, which condems the practice of playing marbles "for keeps," is one that could well be put into effect in every school in the country. There is no difference between such games and playing cards for money, or any other form of gambling, and the habit of school children of playing marbles "for keeps" very easily leads up to other more serious games of chance. This is a good opportunity for teachers to do a little missionary work, that may bear good results in future years.—Old Colony Memorial.

The FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE

By HAMLIN GARLAND

CHAPTER II.

"This is our ranch."

BEFORE Berea could reply a man's voice called, "Hello, there!" and a tall fellow stepped up to her with confident mien.

Norcross awkwardly shrank away. This was her cowboy lover, of course. It was impossible that so attractive a girl should be unattached, and the knowledge produced in him a faint but very definite pang of envy and regret.

The happy girl, even in the excitement of meeting her lover, did not forget the stranger. She gave him her hand in parting, and again he thrilled to its amazing power. It was small, but it was like a steel clamp. "Stop in on your way to Meeker's," she said, as a kindly man would have done. "You pass our gate. My father is Joseph McFarlane, the forest supervisor. Good night."

"Good night," he returned with sincere liking.

The hotel was hardly larger than the log shanty of a railway grading camp, but the meat was edible, and just outside the door roared Bear creek, which came down directly from Dome mountain, and the young easterner went to sleep beneath its singing that night. He should have dreamed of the happy mountain girl, but he did not. On the contrary, he imagined himself back at college in the midst of innumerable freshmen yelling: "Bill McCoy! Bill McCoy!"

He woke a little bewildered by his strange surroundings, and when he became aware of the cheap bed, the flimsy washstand, the ugly wall paper and thought how far he was from home and friends he not only sighed, he shivered. The room was chill, the pitcher of water cold almost to the freezing point, and his joints were stiff and painful from his ride. What folly to come so far into the wilderness at this time!

As the eastern youth crawled from his bed and looked from the window he was still further disheartened. In the foreground stood a half dozen frame buildings, graceless and cheap, without tree or shrub to give shadow or charm of line—all was bare, bleak, sere. But under his window the stream was singing its glorious mountain song, and away to the west rose the aspiring peaks from which it came. Romance brooded in that shadow, and on the lower foothills the frost touched foliage glowed like a mosaic of jewels.

Dressing hurriedly he went down to the small barroom, whose litter of duffle bags, guns, saddles and camp utensils gave evidence of the presence of many hunters and fishermen. The slovenly landlord was poring over a newspaper, while a discouraged half grown youth was sludging the floor with a mop. But a cheerful clamor from an open door at the back of the hall told that breakfast was on.

Venturing over the threshold, Norcross found himself seated at table with some five or six men in corduroy jackets and laced boots, who were, in fact, merchants and professional men from Denver and Pueblo out for fish and such game as the law allowed, and all in holiday mood. They joked the waiter girls and joshed one another in noisy good fellowship, ignoring the slim youth in English riding suit, who came in with an air of mingled melancholy and timidity and took a seat at the lower corner of the long table.

As he looked about the room the tourist's eye was attracted by four young fellows seated at a small table to his right. They wore rough shirts of an olive-green shade and their faces were wind scorched, but their voices held a pleasant tone, and something in the manner of the landlady toward them made them noticeable. Norcross later asked her who they were.

"They're forestry boys."

"Forestry boys?"

This information added to Norcross' interest and cheered him a little. He knew something of the United States forest service and had been told that many of the rangers were college men. He resolved to make their acquaintance. "If I'm to stay here they will help me endure the exile," he said.

After breakfast he went forth to find the postoffice, expecting a letter of instructions from Meeker. He found nothing of the sort, and this quite disconcerted him.

"The stage is gone," the postmistress told him, "and you can't get up till day after tomorrow. You might reach Meeker by using the government phone, however."

"Where will I find the government phone?"

"Down in the supervisor's office. They're very accommodating. They'll let you use it if you tell them who you want to reach."

It was impossible to miss the forestry building for the reason that a handsome flag fluttered above it. The door being open, Norcross perceived from the threshold a young clerk at work on a typewriter, while in a corner close by the window another and older man was working intently on a map.

"Is this the office of the forest supervisor?" asked the youth.

The man at the machine looked up and pleasantly answered: "It is, but the supervisor is not in yet. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"It may be you can. I am on my way to Meeker's mill for a little outing. Perhaps you could tell me where Meeker's mill is and how I can best get there."

The man at the map meditated. "It's not far, some eighteen or twenty miles but it's over a pretty rough trail."

"What kind of a place is it?"

"Very charming. You'll like it. Real mountain country."

This officer was a plain featured man of about thirty-five, with keen and clear eyes. His voice, though strongly nasal, possessed a note of manly sincerity. As he studied his visitor he smiled.

"You look brand new. Haven't had time to season check, have you?"

"No. I'm a stranger in a strange land."

"Out for your health?"

"Yes. My name is Norcross. I'm just getting over a severe illness, and I'm up here to lay around and fish and recuperate—if I can."

"You can—you will. You can't help it," the other assured him. "Join one of our surveying crews for a week and I'll mellow that suit of yours and make a real mountaineer of you. I see you wear a Sigma Chi pin. What was your school?"

The other man displayed his fob. "I'm ten classes ahead of you. My name is Nash. I'm what they call an 'expert.' I'm up here doing some estimating and surveying for a big ditch they're putting in. I was rather in hopes you had come to join our ranks. We sons of Eli are holding the conservation fort these days, and we need help."

"My knowledge of your work is rather vague," admitted Norcross. "My father is in the lumber business, but his point of view isn't exactly yours."

"He slays 'em, does he?"

"He did. He helped devastate Michigan."

"After me the deluge! I know the kind. Why not make yourself a sort of vicarious atonement?"

Norcross smiled. "I had not thought of that. It would help some, wouldn't it?"

"It certainly would. There's no great money in the work, but it's about the most enlightened of all the governmental bureaus."

Norcross was strongly drawn to this forester, whose tone was that of a highly trained specialist. "I rode up on the stage yesterday with Miss Berrie McFarlane."

"The supervisor's daughter?"

"She seemed a fine western type."

"She's not a type; she's an individual. She hasn't her like anywhere I've gone. She cuts a wide swath up here. Being an only child, she's both son and daughter to McFarlane. She knows more about forestry than her father. In fact, half the time he depends on her judgment."

Norcross was interested, but did not want to take up valuable time. He said, "Will you let me use your telephone to Meeker's?"

"Very sorry, but our line is out of order. You'll have to wait a day or so, or use the mails. You're too late for today's stage, but it's only a short ride across."

As they were talking a girl came galloping up to the hitching post and slid from her horse. It was Berea McFarlane. "Good morning, Emery," she called to the surveyor. "Good morning," she nodded at Norcross. "How do you find yourself this morning?"

"Homesick," he replied smilingly.

"Why so?"

"I'm disappointed in the town."

Berrie looked round at the forlorn shops, the irregular sidewalks, the grassless yards. "It isn't very pretty, that's a fact, but you can always forget it by just looking up at the high country. When you going up to the mill?"

"I don't know. I haven't had any word from Meeker, and I can't reach him by telephone."

"I know. The line is short circuited somewhere. But they've sent a man out. He may close it any minute."

"Where's the supervisor?" asked Nash.

"He's gone over to Moore's cutting. How are you getting on with those plats?"

"Very well. I'll have 'em all in shape by Saturday."

"Come in and make yourself at home," said the girl to Norcross. "You'll find the papers two or three days old," she smiled. "We never know about anything here till other people have forgotten it."

Norcross followed her into the office, curious to know more about her. She was so changed from his previous conception of her that he was puzzled. She had the directness and the brevity of phrase of a business man as she opened letters and discussed their contents with the men.

"Truly she is different," thought Norcross, and yet she lost something by reason of the display of her proficiency as a clerk. "I wish she would leave business to some one else," he inwardly grumbled as he rose to go.

She looked up from her desk. "Come in again later. We may be able to reach the mill."

He thanked her and went back to his hotel, where he overhauled his outfit and wrote some letters. His disgust of the town was lessened by the presence of that handsome girl, and the hope that he might see her at luncheon made him impatient of the clock.

She did not appear in the dining room, and when Norcross inquired of Nash whether she took her meals at the hotel or not the expert replied: "No; she goes home. The ranch is only a few miles down the valley. Occasionally we invite her, but she don't think much of the cooking."

One of the young surveyors put in a word: "I shouldn't think she would. I'd ride ten miles any time to eat one of Mrs. McFarlane's dinners."

"Yes," agreed Nash, with a reflective look in his eyes. "She's a mighty fine girl, and I join the boys in wishing her better luck than marrying Cliff Belden."

QUINCY "KIDS" TO HAVE OUTING

Will Join 1600 Others On Mayor's Outing

Johnny Jones, six years of age, is going to have his first automobile ride tomorrow. He is going down to Nantasket beach and stuff himself with candy, pop corn, peanuts, a fish dinner, with pie, ice cream, cake and innumerable other things that he has dreamed of but never tasted. He is going to ride on the roller coasters, merry go-rounds and, if he desires, he can take off his shoes and stockings and wade into the ocean.

This is some dissipation for a youth of six years who has spent five of them behind the walls of a charitable institution and it doesn't take much imagination to picture the joy that will come to Johnny. For a year and two months Johnny Jones has dreamed of this trip and it wouldn't be a bad 100 to one shot that long before it is time for the sun to peep over the horrizen tomorrow Johnny will climb out of bed to see whether or not he is to be robbed of his day's fun. One year ago Johnny had the same dreams but the night before the annual outing arranged by Mayor Chester I. Campbell, Johnny was taken down with whooping cought and was promptly isolated. Hence the double joy that will come to him tomorrow.

It will be a big day for Johnny but not a whit greater will his joy be than will come to the 1800 unfortunates that Mayor Campbell will entertain. It will likewise be a big day for His Honor. No official act of his will bring him greater joy. He too looks forward to tomorrow with the same anticipation as the little fellow who lost out last year because of the whooping cough.

Johnny Jones has planned in his little mind the things he will do. So it is with the 1799 other unfortunates, the most of whom have lived within the walls of a charitable institution. While Johnny was tossing on his pillow and in his dreams acting the day over and over Mayor Campbell was racking his brain to find cars and cash enough to entertain Johnny and his unfortunate pals.

So tomorrow with fine weather it will be the brightest day of the year for the "kiddies." Promptly at nine o'clock the great fleet of 500 automobiles will start towards Nantasket with its precious fleet. Each kid with have an "Old Glory" to wave. In his other hand will be a noise making apparatus of some kind and then he will have his lung power to add to the noise of the occasion.

From Quincy there will be about 200 youngsters attend the outing. They will assemble in Quincy Square just before nine o'clock. This division will probably reach Nantasket first. All of the other 15 divisions will pass through the square between nine and ten o'clock and if you wish to get a real picture of the joy there is in living just station yourself at the square and get some of this elixir of life that will be reflected from the hundreds of motor cars that will whirl by.

This annual outing means a lot of work for Mayor Campbell but he is amply rewarded as he gazes at the happy faces of the youngsters. It means the gathering together of a fleet of 500 automobiles with competent, safe drivers. With it is a mass of detail that keeps Mayor Campbell's Boston force busy for a month.

In all there will be some 2500 persons to transport as an attendant accompanies every car. All of these persons as well as the "kiddies" have to be fed so it would appear that there is quite an expenditure of cash for Mayor Campbell plays no favorites as all are given a fish dinner at the Nantasket hotel.

In addition to this tons of popcorn, peanuts and candy are given to the children. The flying horses and roller coasters and other attractions are bought up for the little ones.

Just before five o'clock all of the children are bundled into the cars and returned "home." In the eight years that Mayor Campbell has conducted this outing there hasn't been an accident and he doesn't retire on the night of an outing until he has a report from every division commander showing that "all is well."

For the owners and drivers of cars that transport the children Mayor Campbell provides a set of athletic games. Valuable prizes are offered in every event, these being donated by generous Boston merchants. Arthur Duffy of the Boston Post and James T. Sullivan of the Boston Globe, annually have this in charge and it would take some fight to remove them from the job.

The Quincy division will be in charge of Miss Purchase of the Associated Charities, Charles E. Decker and Gordon E. Jameson.

MOTORCYCLE AND AUTO COLLIDE

It was simply by good luck that the accident in City square this noon, when an automobile ran down a motor cycle and threw the rider into the street did not result seriously.

It was just about one o'clock when Lawrence Barry of West Quincy came along Hancock street, going toward Boston, on his motor cycle. He was on the right side of the street and just as he had passed the fountain a touring car, registered in the name of Frank W. Huckins, 20 Elm Hill Park, Roxbury, approached from the direction of Boston. As the automobile reached the corner of Saville street the driver turned sharp to the left and the next instant he struck the motor cycle broadside. Barry was thrown into the street but fortunately escaped without injury although the top of his cycle was somewhat damaged.

The front wheels of the automobile were bent out of shape and the two headlights smashed. In the automobile at the time with Mr. Huckins were two women and a young man.

Huckins states that he turned sharp to the left to avoid striking the motor cycle which he thought intended to cross in front of him and turn into Saville street.

QUARTERS FOR BOY SCOUTS

Notes of the Y. M. C. A.

Monday evening at the Y. M. C. A. an enjoyable time was had by about twenty-five Boy Scouts under the Leadership of Scout Master D. J. MacKellar, of South Quincy.

Only a short session of the troop was held, it being more in the nature of a get acquainted meeting.

C. H. Humphrey, Boys Work secretary of the association, welcomed the boys in a few words and said that he hoped to be able to make the boys feel at home.

If it can be arranged Friday evening of each week the Boys Rooms will be turned over to the Scouts of the city for their use and it is hoped that the different troops in the city may avail themselves of this opportunity of a good meeting place, centrally located.

Three members of the troop were selected to report for duty tomorrow morning at eight thirty to assist in the caring for the cripple children who will go on the outing to Nantasket Beach through the kindness of Mayor Campbell.

A delegation of the troop will attend the scout gathering at Cambridge next Saturday afternoon when it is expected some two thousand boys will get together for a good time.

The Newsboys club which was recently organized in the city through the efforts of Carl Leander and David Polosky, will hold its regular bimonthly meeting at the Association this evening.

This club is doing lots toward making the newsboys of the city better acquainted with each other and many enjoyable times are being had by the boys at their meetings.

The Saturday Evening Post team which is composed of members of the club is rapidly winning a name for itself as a team which is hard to beat.

Games are played every Saturday evening..

The members of the Boys Division who were looking forward to the starting of a bicycle club by the Boys Work Secretary are doomed to disappointment once again as Mr. Humphrey's bicycle has been stolen. It was hoped that many pleasant trips might be had this summer but unless the efforts of Inspector Goodhue, to whom the theft was reported, prove successful in the recovery of the bicycle this club will under the circumstances have to be postponed..

Saturday morning at Merrymount park the Y. M. C. A. Junior Base-ball teams will probably cross bats again with the team from the Wollaston Methodist Sunday School.

Last week the Wollaston boys were defeated but with a good umpire this week they hope to be able to turn the tables on the Junior. The game will be called at 10 o'clock sharp.

WILLETT TO SPEAK.

To Address Board of Trade Meeting Thursday.

A meeting of unusual interest will be held by the Quincy Board of Trade at the rooms of the Granite Manufacturers' association Thursday evening, when George F. Willett, president of the Terminal Zone association, will address an open public meeting on the subject of "Better Transportation Facilities, both Freight and Passenger within a Terminal Zone of Twenty Miles Around Boston."

Every citizen of Quincy is vitally interested in this subject to a greater or less degree. The producers and manufacturers depend absolutely upon the transportation facilities in Quincy and between Quincy and points in and around Boston for the rapid and economical shipment of their products, and a large portion of the citizens of Quincy are intimately affected in their capacity as wage earners by the most efficient and economical moving of these products and the ready market which such products can procure. Every citizen, whether producer or wage earner, is vitally interested in the other aspect of the problem, cheap and rapid passenger transportation to and from points in and around Boston. The speaker is, therefore, bound to find a most interested and appreciative audience in Quincy.

It will well repay the citizenship interested in this question, whether from the view point of freight or of passenger service, to hear Mr. Willett on this subject. Mr. Willett has distinguished himself for his disinterested, public spirited services to the town of Norwood, in which, working in conjunction with others, he has succeeded in making wonderful improvements, and in which he has been largely instrumental in establishing a form of town-manager government, which is daily proving more and more beneficial, economical and progressive

He has taken up the question of more liquid transportation within a radius of twenty miles of Boston with the same zeal and devotion to public interest that has distinguished his services in the town of Norwood, and is today recognized throughout the State as an authority on the question.

When one considers that the population in this zone is 1,816,295 and the valuation $2,896,082,410, and the number of passengers carried daily estimated at 1,463,570 it can be readily seen how important a factor in the development of our community and the development of the Port of Boston the question of railroad transportation becomes. It is the duty of every public spirited citizen to inform himself on the needs of his community in this regard and he can do so in no better way than by hearing President Willett of the Terminal Zone association and the general discussion on Thursday evening next at the meeting of the Quincy Board of Trade, to which everyone is cordially invited.

BRYAN DISAPPROVED OF AMERICAN REPLY

President Refused to Accept Secretary's Suggestions

JOHN EDWIN NEVINS.
(United Press Correspondent)

Washington, June 9—"Keep America out of war by removing the causes of international irritation." That was the suggestion made by Sec. Bryan to Pres. Wilson immediately following the drowning of Leon Tresher, the American who lost his life when the British steamer "Salabra" was torpedoed and sunk. The methods Sec. Bryan proposed did not meet with the approval of the President at that time and the disagreement was started which culminated in Bryan's sensational retirement from the cabinet late yesterday.

The United Press is able this afternoon to state the suggestions made by Bryan which were rejected by the president.

They were:—

Suggest to Germany that inasmuch as she had accepted in part the suggestion of arbitration of questions in dispute that might result in war. She agree to name a commission, such as was created by the peace treaty, to determine the responsibility and adjust the questions at issue.

That all Americans be warned in view of the announcement of Germany to respect war zones in which submarines were operating not to take passage on merchant vessels carrying munitions of war;

That the United States prohibit the carrying of munitions of war on vessels carrying passengers.

Bryan argued Germany was entitled to the protection of arbitration if she so desired. He called attention to the fact that relations between the two nations were of the most extreme friendliness and that a vast number of American people were of German birth or heritage. He told the President it would not be in a may improper for the United States to warn American citizens not to travel on vessels liable to attack by hostile submarines.

As proof of this he called the attention of the President to the action of Taft in warning Americans to get out of Mexico and he also handed him a copy of the state department's warning sent at the suggestion of President Wilson in which Americans were also called to leave Mexico.

So far as the keeping of passengers off vessels carrying arms and munitions of war were concerned Bryan took the position that the navigation rules of the country lent themselves splendidly to such a position and he called his attention to the fact that when a riot takes place the mayor of a city usually calls on law abiding citizens to keep off the streets until order is restored. The case was similar he told the President, inasmuch as no American had the right to jeopardize peace by taking passage on vessels carrying munitions and as such liable to attack on entering the war zone subject to German operations.

Bryan did his best to have his point of view accepted. He argued that no rights under international law were lost if precautions such as he advocated were taken. The President did not agree with him, but insisted that all the belligerents should recognize American citizens' right to go where they pleased without danger. From time to time the President and Bryan met and discussed the problem. Finally Bryan told the President he would have to resign if the administration insisted on the note that is to be forwarded this afternoon.

Bryan said when he signed the first two notes he did so feeling he would be able later to impress his views on the cabinet. Convinced at last that he could not do so he was "reluctantly compelled to quit."

The President agreed finally that this was so and Bryan left the service of the government today.

MACHINE GUN CO. OFFICERS

Appointments Made at Tuesday Meeting

Lt. Col. John S. Barrows of the inspector general's department made the so called surprise inspection of the Machine Gun Co. at the Alpha building armory Tuesday evening. Practically every enlisted man was present and at least eight applicants for the few remaining vacancies were among the many spectators who attended, probably due to the fact that the company made such a good showing on Memorial Day in its first public appearance. Among the applicants were three men who have had good records in other companies of the state militia.

Lt. Col. Barrows made a complete inspection and found the outfit in good condition, considering the brief time spent in organizing it. The inspection was witnessed by Col. Warren E. Sweetser, 6th Regt. M. V. M., to which the company is attached and Lieut. George M. Downes, commanding officer.

Arrangements are being made to have a bivouac camp on the 17th of June. The company will go out the night before, pitching camp of shelter tents and the complete equipment as an infantry company.

Sergt. E. J. Hoover, 30th U. S. Infantry, Plattsburg, N. Y., reported to Lieut. Downes and lectured on the machine gun. He has been detailed by the war department as an expert on machine guns. During his tour of duty he will instruct the men of the company on the gun. After the inspection he gave his first lecture, dissembling and assembling.

AGREES TO PAY $7 WEEKLY

Counsel having agreed that Louis Gunner Gunderson, formerly of Quincy, but now of Silver Granite, Quebec, Canada, shall pay $7 a week from a legacy left to him by Andrew Wilson, late of Quincy, for the support of his wife Gina Gunderson of Quincy, the hearing which was to have been held in the matter before Judge Flint in the probate court this morning was not held. The proceedings in the case were brought by the poor department of the city. For some time the city has been contributing toward the support of Mrs. Gunderson, and the proceedings were brought to force the husband to contribute toward her support.

The husband and wife are not now living together and in the petition it is claimed that he has not contributed toward her support. It appears that by the will of Andrew Wilson, late of Quincy, the sum of $2,000 was left to be divided between the two nephews of the testator. Louis Gunner Gunderson, is one of these two heirs and the proceedings were that a part of this legacy might be obtained for the support of his wife. Not being in this country he could not be arrested for non support and the proceedings against the legacy was the only method by which money for the support of the wife could be obtained. City Solicitor Pinkham represented Mrs. Gunderson in the proceedings and John D. MacKay, Louis Gunner Gunderson.

In probate court this morning counsel informed the court that they had agreed that the executor should pay $7 per week from Gunderson's share of the legacy for the support of his wife, and with this understanding the court ruled that no hearing was necessary at this time.

City teams started in bright and early Monday making some much needed repairs on Granite street, between Hancock street and the railroad bridge. This part of the street is being rebuilt with tar macadam and will be a much-needed improvement

Washington, June 9—Sec. Bryan paid his formal farewell visit to the White House at 12.30 today He said he saw no reason, however, why he might not make later calls in a personal capacity. The secretary walked from the state department and found President Wilson and Private Secretary Tumulty awaiting him. From the White House he went to a photographer's to have his picture taken and then left for home. It was understood he would make no return officially to the state department.

TO HOLD FIRST SESSION FRIDAY

Ready to Investigate Fire Department

The special committee appointed to investigate the fire department will hold its first session Friday evening at the Central Fire station. The sessions will be executive sessions and what witnesses are requested to appear will be examined separately and their testimony taken by a stenographer. Under the act by which the committee is appointed it is empowered to summon witnesses in case they refuse to appear on request.

Just what it is hoped to bring out no one exactly knows. What probably started the order for an investigation were two unfortunate circumstances that came close together. One of these was the accident to Auto Combination No. 1, which knocked down a telephone pole on Quincy avenue and went over the embankment smashing the machine, and the second was the fire at West Quincy, where considerable criticism was raised by the bystanders because the tractor steamer was not used to put out a fire on top of the derrick.

There have been several investigations of the fire department none of which have amounted to anything other than to furnish material for the sidewalk committees or some one who would like to see some other gentleman riding in that red car as chief. The present committee however promise to make a thorough investigation and will probably make some recommendations to the council at the next meeting when it must report under the terms of the order.

PLANNING BOARD HOLDS MEETING

A meeting of the City Planning Board was held at City Hall Tuesday evening. Although the Board took under advisement and considered a number of important matters, it is not ready as yet to make them public. The members of the Board will attend the meeting of the street committee this evening and express their views on the matter of establishing building lines on some of the main thoroughfares of the city two of which they recommended to the city council Monday evening in a communication.

Although the Board has held a number of meetings and many matters looking to the improvement of conditions has been discussed none of these matters have as yet reached a head. Chairman Bailey, states:

"The Board is not a dead one as has been intimated. There are many important matters that are under consideration, which are not ready as yet to make public, but several of these matters will be called to the attention of the City Council at an early date. With the many matters, such as new streets and street repair work which has been occupying the attention of the Council up to the persent time, it has not been deemed wishe to make any recommendations until such time as the council has disposed of pressing matters. When these matters are disposed of the council will have time to consider some of the propositions the Planning Board will recommend.

Several of the clerks at City Hall went to Nantasket this noon to see the thousands of happy children who are enjoying the outing of the Automobile Dealers association.

SOCIETY CIRCUS TRULY STUPENDOUS PRODUCTION

Large Audience Delight in Various Antics on Program

The "Society Circus," presented Tuesday evening by Troop Three of the Wollaston Boy Scouts attracted a large audience to the Wollaston school hall. Many friends assisted the scouts in the production and the result was a stupendous circus performance.

Everything was done to preserve the circus effect. Pop corn, peanuts, and pink lemonade were on sale by the group of Camp Fire Girls who acted as ushers.

The show was kept swiftly in motion by Ringmaster Charles E. Decker, with his ever present whip and three clowns, W. H. Stewart, Ernest Pletsch and Danforth Bruce, whose eccentric antics were in evidence from the opening. overture until the final curtain.

The various acts were introduced by the ringmaster who was assisted by Randolph Fowler in the uniform of a page. The stage represented the interior of the "main tent" and the effect produced was realistic.

The action opened with a flowery introduction by Ringmaster Decker and was followed by a small sized riot of the performers. The first act was introduced as Babo, the trained bear, in the person of T. W. Lindsey. Dancing was this animal's peculiar forte.

Next came a troupe of monkeys who were confined in a large cage in the centre of the tent, they were: Chester Mellish, Victor Brown, Harry Waldron, Edward Lindsey and Charles Borden.

Next three trained monkeys, playing on the violin, cornet and drum, were exhibited. One cute feature was little Ruth Broadbent as the baby monkey.

A roar from the approaching lion, Alan Painten caused the monkeys to vanish from the cage. The man eater was accompanied by his lady trainer in gay circus costume. A purse of thirty dollars was offered anyone who would enter the lion's den One darky, Harold Merrill, made the attempt but beat a hasty retreat.

The closing act was a Dutch dancer C. L. Cleaves, who executed a clog and other fancy steps to the thunderous appreciation of the small boys, Cornelius Manchester, as the snake lady, also appeared.

At the close of Act one a large red faced individual in sombrero and circus togs stood on a box at the side of the hall and announced in the approved style the merits of the side show now going on.

On the inside were Dr. Pill, Alva Reynolds; the bearded lady, Mrs. F. S. Pollock; Mr. and Mrs. Tom Thumb, Billy Decker and Margaret Tanner; and the fat lady, Mrs. T. W. Lindsey.

During intermission and through the show music was furnish by the circus band consisting of Mrs. F. A. Arenberg, Roger Bates and Everett Emerson. The ever present policeman was Roland Newcomb.

Act two opened with a trick hobby horse, managed by Nestor Arenberg. One of the hits of the show was little

WHAT WILL BE TAX RATE?

One of the good old gospel hymns which was much sung during the Moody and Sankey days was "What Shall The Harvest Be?" The tune which most Quincy people are singing today however is "What Will The Tax Rate Be?" The assessors are still hard at work in the field and it will be some weeks yet before they will have finished their field work. Then they will return to City Hall and with pencil and paper try and figure out just what the rate will be. It will probably be late in August however before the anxiously waiting public will know.

Two years ago the slogan at the municipal election was "Give us a lower tax rate" and when last August the assessors gave out their figures the people had what they wanted, a lower tax rate. Oh, but what a difference in the morning. People who had retired to their beds the night before woke up to find that through the kindness of the assessors they had become rich during the night.

That many of the values fixed on property that year by the assessors were just everybody admits There were some places raised that doubtless should have been, but by far the greater majority were increased out of all proportion. Then there was a howl. One assessor laid it on to the other and so on. No one of the three desired, or probably dared for that matter, to admit that he was the one who favored jacking up the valuations

Of course there were appeals to the Board to have the valuations reduced but few were highly successful in their efforts. The only thing was to pay up which they did, hoping that this year the new board would do better by them.

One thing should be borne in mind, however, and that is that anybody who for a minute thinks the tax rate this year will be lower than it was last year is simply fooling himself. None of the wise ones at City Hall look for a reduction in the tax rate this year, but what the general public do look for is that the assessors who are now in the field will place a valuation on their property that is somewhere near what it should be.

NOT WISE.

The use by the Boy Scouts of the Boys' Rooms at the Y. M. C. A. on their meeting night each week is desirable in many respects. It gives the advantage of a place centrally located for this excellent organization. It will bring the movement more emphatically to the attention of the Y. M. C. A. boys, many of whom may thus be led to become scouts. It is a movement which is working much good among the boys and which should be accorded every possible encouragement.

But when all this has been said, with much more that might be said the question arises: Is it fair to deprive the boys of the Y. M. C. A., whose memberships help to support the institution, of the use of their room for boys many of whom may be non-members? It is opening a door which in our opinion should not be opened. On this particular occasion the cause is a very worthy one; on some other occasion it may not be and the difficulty of refusing may be great. The Y. M. C. A. should be reserved for the use of members.

MATTER FOR CONSIDERATION.

Clerks in local stores, not including grocery stores, are signing a petition requesting a half holiday each Wednesday. There appears to be no reason why it should not be granted.

In the past most stores which could do so without serious injury to their business have given their clerks Wednesday afternoons during July and August. The clerks desire the weekly half holiday in June, too, and, it is understood, hope utimately to receive it each week in the year.

Why is it not fair that these men be given what they ask? It seems as if the concession could be made without injury to the business concerned or to their customers. In past years there have generally been some merchants who fail to coincide in the otherwise general agreement.

The Board of Trade, or the proper sub-division of the Board, is the proper body to consider the matter. There is a meeting of the Board Thursday evening. Why not act at that time, merchants rather than delay, and why not act in harmony.

Most persecuted of all professions by wits and would be wits, is the law. And yet list to this! Atty. Burton Smith, brother of U. S. Senator Hoke Smith was representing a client who was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 or serve 24 hours in jail for contempt of court. The attorney pleaded with the judge that he might be permitted to serve half the jail sentence for his client, but the stern magistrate ruled that he had committed no offence and refused to impose the sentence.

A new use for the aeroplane: for physicians called on emergency cases. Dr. P. E. Somers of Grinnell, Iowa, was summoned to the home of a patient who had received a dangerous wound. He climbed into an aeroplane and made the trip at the rate of 110 miles an hour. Why would it not be a good idea to purchase an aeroplane for the police department to aid in the apprehension of criminals and the saving of life?

Presndent Wilson's letter regretfully accepting Secretary Bryan's resignation sounded like an obituary notice of that distinguished statesman. Perhaps it is one—politically.

A shoe manufacturer declares that sensible shoes for women will soon be on the market, but some people surmise that they will also stay in the store.

Are we not all glad that the day is so pleasant for the sake of the Mayor's 1800 youthful friends?

INGROWING DEMOCRACY.

President Wilson declines an invitation to make an address in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, the Fourth of July, because "this is perhaps the very time when he would not care to arouse the sentiment of patriotism." It has never been placed on record before that the head of the American republic should hesitate to arouse a spirit of patriotism on Independence Day. Europitis has struck Washington too hard. Ring the bells and make a noise loud enough to wake the President up. His democracy is ingrowing and dangerous. That kind of stuff means war quicker than the bulldog snarl. It means the other nations will strike the feebleminded.—Worcester Telegram.

COURTROOM LOAFERS.

That was a bright idea of the Chicago judge who ordered a raid on the habitual hangers-on on the Morals Court and arraigned them as vagrants. HOW TO TAKE CARE OF LAWN

ARTICLE III.

REMOVING WEEDS.

Washington, D. C., June 9—White weed enemies of the lawn are troublesome throughout the growing season, they are most particularly so from the latter part of June until frost. During this period crab-grass is by far the worst weed present, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture's lawn specialists. There is no really satisfactory method of checking its growth, and the only treatment to be recommended is to cut or pull the plants before they have formed large mats. This is a very tedious and expensive practice, but where a good lawn is involved the results justify the expense. Rational fertilizing and careful watering during the summer help to overcome the effect of weeds. Chemical sprays or treatments have proven to be of very little assistance. Much difficulty is experienced in cutting crab-grass with the ordinary mower on account of its semiprostrate character. This difficulty can be overcome to a certain extent if a rake is used in conjunction with the mower. By means of the rake the branches of the grass may be lifted so that they can be clipped reasonably close. It is almost impossible, however, to cut crab grass sufficiently close to prevent the formation of seed.

There are many other weeds that are troublesome in the lawn not only in the spring but also in the summer and autumn. Among the most important ones are dandelion, plantain, chickweed, oxeye daisy, and yarrow. While chemical sprays are more effective in the eradication of these weeds than in the case of crab-grass, the best method of preventing their development is to remove them with a spud or similar implement.

TOP DRESSING.

The weed problem can perhaps best be solved by making the conditions as favorable as possible for the lawn grasses and to maintain a strict watch at all times to check the growth of the troublesome weeds at the beginning. At the end of the growing season before the severe weather of winter arrives the lawn should be given a good top-dressing of well-rotted barnyard manure. If the manure is not well rotted, it is likely to introduce an abundance of weed seeds, which will ultimately cause considerable trouble. Top-dressing not only adds fertility to the soil, but gives the grass protection during the severe weather of winter and the freezing and thawing of early spring.

DISPUTE LEADS TO COURT CASE

Olin A. Holbrook of Wollaston in court this morning alleged that Oscar Wickstein of Boston threatened him bodily harm. Wickstein pleaded not guilty and his case was continued to Sept. 30.

Holbrook is the owner of a gravel pit in Wollaston. The threat is alleged to have been made during a discussion between the men on the rights of a person to trespass. It is understood that Wickstein was near the property and Holbrook approached him and warned him he could not pass. The argument which ensued is said to have waxed warm and Holbrook shortly after made his complaint.

The Ladies' Aid of the Wollaston Methodist church held the final meeting of the season in the church parlor on Monday afternoon.

"SEND OFF" FOR MEMBER.

Party For Frank Dunham of Wollaston.

The people of the Wollaston Methodist church gave a "Send Off" party to Frank Dunham on Monday evening. The affair was quite informal. The Norwoll club of which Mr. Dunham is a member were the guests of the church. The Norwoll quartette consisting of Allan Painten, Frank Dunham, Arteums Dingwell and William Bullock sang, after which Rev. George M. Bailey spoke in behalf of the church.

Mr. Bailey told of his own enterance into the ministry twenty-five years ago and of experiences which he had had as a Circuit rider. Raymond Cassidy president of the Epworth League spoke for the Epworth League. Mr. Cassidy paid a tribute to Mr. Dunham for his faithfulness and dependableness in every thing pertaining to the activities of the young people. Mr. Allan Painten, president of the Norwoll club, spoke for that organization. He expressed the regret which the club felt at losing Mr. Dunham, but of the pride which they had in the work he was taking up.

The quartette sang a second time and Mr. Artemus Dingwell sang "A Perfect Day." The church presented Mr. Dunham with a Bible and a leather toilet case with ebony fittings. Mr. Dunham responded in a most fitting manner. Refreshments, consisting of lemonade and cake, were served by Miss Genie Keith, Miss Hilda Bailey, Miss Lena Thompson and Miss Elvira Lightbody. Mr. Dunham will begin his duties as pastor of the Methodist churches of the Dixford Circuit Maine, on next Sunday.

The committee of arrangements was Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook, Miss Hilda Bailey and Mrs. Arthur R. Poquett.

THINK ZENI IS RESPONSIBLE ONE

Frank Zeni, an Austrian, recently arrested for the alleged sending of "Black Hand" letters to John Carello, of Filbert street, West Quincy, his Italian father-in-law, is thought to be responsible for many similar letters mailed Boston business men demanding money.

The letters were shown Inspector Goodhue at Boston police headquarters Tuesday. He claims that Zeni is the author and that the missives even carried the poorly drawn skull and cross bones which closed the Quincy ones.

Zeni was ordered to recognize sureties to keep the peace for a month by Judge Avery, and he appealed. He is now in Dedham jail, pending a Superior Court hearing.

COMMENDS SCOUTS.

Rev. Rufus B. Tobey has received the following letter in commendation of the service of the Boy Scouts on Memorial day.

Rev. Rufus B. Tobey,
Boston, Mass.
Dear Sir:—

We wish to thank the Boy Scouts of Quincy for the assistance they rendered us on Memorial day, and for participating in the parade.

I can assure you their assistance was appreciated, and they certainly made a fine appearance in the line.

Yours very truly,
Wm. J. Talbot,
Secretary.
William R. French,
Commander.

The Scout troops of Quincy at the same time wish to express their gratitude to the Camp for the invitation to march as the guests of the Sons of Veterans in the Memorial day parade.

WORK PROGRESSES.

Work rebuilding Hancock street, between Granite and School streets, is progressing slowly but surely. It is one of those jobs that can not be hurried too much and while the work may seem to be going slowly, good progress is being made. The westerly side of Hancock street between Granite street and Tirrell's block has received its base of concrete and the paving blocks are being laid. After the blocks are laid they are given a skim coat of cement, making the street hard and level.

While the paving blocks are being laid on the northerly end of the west side men are at work excavating on the remainder of the west side getting ready for the concrete base. The latter part of the month should see the west side completed and work started on the east side.

HEAR PETITION OF MRS. CASTOR

City Solicitor Pinkham, Dock Commissioner Frank F. Crane, Charles C. Foster, representing the Town River Yacht club, and a delegation from the colony residing near the water front which Mrs. Sarah F. Castor desires to enclose for the cultivation of shell fish appeared in opposition at the hearing Tuesday before the Directors of the Port of Boston.

Mrs. Castor was represented by counsel who said that Mrs. Castor desired to inclose the flats to cultivate clams. It was also testified that it cost $400 an acre to do this in addition to about $1,200 to enclose the flats. Two experts on clam raising also testified for her. John W. Nash, who had taken account of boats going up the river Sunday previous to Memorial day, told the result of his count.

Strong pleas in opposition were made by City Solicitor Pinkham and Dock Commissioner Crane who testified to the increase in value of water front in Quincy from 1 1-2 cents to 15 and 18 cents a foot.

The Directors took the matter under advisement.

AUTO SLIPS OFF TRACK.

Car service on Hancock street was delayed a few minutes Monday evening when one of the wheels of the heavy Bert Miller express truck slipped off the rail near the Kincaide store and landed on the cement bottom laid for paving, about eight inches below. The operator of the machine was following the outbound rail and got too near the edge. The car was pulled back by the service car.

WILL IT BE MAYOR'S HAVEN?

President Whiton of the city council motored to the Cape this morning. "Joe" is not one of those tax dodgers who skips to the Cape in April and becomes a legal resident of Orleans or some other small town in order to escape a heavy personal tax. His trip is with the view of becoming owner of a summer residence so that next summer when he becomes tired of the many official duties of the Mayors office, provided he runs and is elected, he may find relaxation.

Whether "Joe" will run for Mayor this fall or not depends much on what Mayor Campbell decides to do. His honor says that he is no politician but he has the happy faculty of making friends and is, therefore, very popular. Just what Mr. Campbell will do next fall no one knows. He is a very busy man and has many private interests that demand his attention, yet he is giving much of the time he could well use in his private business affairs to the city.

Will You Read This Twice?

A very important question to-day which every housekeeper must decide for herself is whether she prefers pure, cream of tartar baking powder like Royal or whether she is willing to use baking powder made of inferior substitutes which do not add healthful qualities to the food.

One kind is easily distinguished from the other, since the laws of various States require the ingredients to be printed upon the label. If anyone is in doubt which kind is most healthful, it is worth while to ask the family doctor. Then decide.

And when once a decision is reached let no advertisement or dealer's argument or canvasser's solicitation change the decision. It is not a question of a few cents or of pleasing a salesman. It is a question of health.

If this appeals to you as reasonable and sensible advice, it is worth reading twice. And it is worth remembering.

CHILDREN ENJOY OUTING AT NANTASKET BEACH

Large Number From Quincy Join Mayor's Big Yearly Party

With every indication that the weather would be as pleasant as the program over 200 children of Quincy left City Square in nearly 60 automobiles at 9.15 today for Nantasket beach where they will enjoy themselves under the auspices of the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association. Shortly before noon they were joined by fully 1600 more "kids" from Boston and vicinity.

The annual outing was arranged under the direction of Mayor Chester I. Campbell of this city and for months his Boston office force has been busily engaged in preparing an entertainment for the children which will include not only athletic events but a dinner at one of the large hotels and a general distribution of tons of pop corn peanuts, free tickets to roller coasters and other attractions.

The outing when launched several years ago seemed to be almost a hopeless undertaking. Mayor Campbell secured a small offering of cars and the outing met with such success that it has grown to proportions which have exceeded the expectations of the most optimistic.

More local interest has been stimulated this year because the Chief Executive of the city directed the outing and there was no delay in the general offering of autos by Quincy people and residents of surrounding towns. The machines were all in line at 8.45. The children had arrived, many of them at eight o'clock. All knew to whom to report and their chaperones had an easy time accounting for those they were to care for.

Flags were given out and tied to the front and rear of the machines and red and white horns, the kind that sound loud and clear when properly tooted, were given old and young alike. Some of the "kiddies" who had never been on such an outing toted along a luncheon but the majority simply appeared ready to partake of everything coming their way.

It was only a few minutes after nine when Mayor Campbell was informed that the procession had been formed. At that time the autos, comfortably filled, completely encircled the grounds of the First Parish church.

He then stood on the step of a slowly moving auto and made a personal inspection of each machine. Hello Mayor," and "Hello, Mr. Campbell" were the greetings he received from the children. He then headed the line and signalled the cars to start. The long procession of decorated machines rounded the church, passed around the fountain and started down Washington street, less than 15 minutes behind the scheduled time. Those in the first few cars remained quiet but as the 15th machine passed the children were beginning to get into action and soon the air was filled with cheers, laughter and tooting of horns.

Riding directly behind Mayor Campbell's machine was the autos carrying Miss Purchase of the Associated charities who had personal charge of the Quincy end of the outing, while Charles E. Decker and Gordon E. Jameson who assisted, swung aboard one of the rear machines after inspecting those which passed.

Assisting as chaperones for the day were Miss Mary Carey, Miss Margaret Harding, Miss Prout, Miss Jennie Doble, Mrs. Bennie, Miss Mary Holden, Mrs. Geo. G. Saville, Mrs. Hall, Miss Helen Crane, Mrs. Thomas Lacey and the Misses Lacey, Mrs. Wilson Marsh, Miss Helen Hamilton Gavin of the office of the overseer of the poor, Miss Lillian Abele, Miss Mildred Huston, overseer of the poor; Miss Marion Jackson, school nurse Mrs. J. Gilbert Miller, Mrs. C. W. Guy, Mrs. E. V. Fitts, Mrs. E. L. Crane, Miss Ella May Freeman, Miss Eliza Sheahan, and Miss Alice Faircloth.

In the official car was Mrs. Campbell, wife of Mayor Campbell, Mrs. Charles Campbell, Mrs. Edward Hathaway. The boy scouts who helped in carrying out the program rode with the children.

Because of the short time it took to mobilize the machines it was almost imposible to get the names of all offered for the day. The names of the following owners were secured J. Turner of Milton, G. A. Dodge, Cohasset, Thomas W. Daley, Atlantic; C. H. Brooks, E. S. Tenney, W. E. Frost, Dr. E. R. Johneson, Jonathan S. Swingle, Charles P. PRESIDENT IS HOST OF BOARD

Y. M. C. A. Directors Hold Meeting

One of the most interesting and profitable meetings ever held by the Board of Directors of the Quincy Y. M. C. A. occurred Tuesday evening at the home of President Frank Burgess, Wollaston. An unusual large number were present, including the active and honorary directors. At this meeting the Board elected Richard Bishop a director to fill the vacancy. Alfred Booth of the State Y. M. C. A. committee, was present and delivered a most inspiring address which was warmly received by those present. General Secretary Gaskell also mad remarks. It was the pleasure of the president to present at this meeting engrossed resolutions to George H. Brown and Amos D. Albee At the conclusion of the meeting refreshments were served by the host and hostess and it was voted by all present that the association was most grateful to Mr. Burgess for opening his house.

The resolutions were as follows:

Whereas Mr George H Brown who was the prime mover in the organization of the Quincy Young Men's Christian Association in 1892 and who has continuously since that time been a member of the Board of Directors, serving twenty-three years, is now, owing to removal from the city, obliged to tender his resignation as an active member of the Board; therefore be it

Resolved: that, in the termination of his active directorship, this Association loses one of its most faithful and valued members; who as its first President, and later in other offices, served it with loving and sacrificing labor And be it further

Resolved: that his example has in the past and will be in the future an inspiration to those who remain to do faithful service in behalf of our local Association. And be it further

Resolved: that the Board of Directors of the Quincy Young Men's Christian Association do hereby, with great regret accept the resignation of George H. Brown as one of the active members and tender him heartfelt thanks for his long and faithful service; and that he be elected our first Honorary Life Director. And be it further

Resolved: that a copy of these resolutions be suitably engrossed and presented to him and that they be spread on the records of the Association and be given the Quincy Press.

Signed

Whereas Mr. Amos D. Albee, who was one of the earliest and generous supporters of the Quincy Young Men's Christian, and as President successfully led its affairs for three years and through the twenty-three years of his directorship always stood ready to advance the best interests of the Association even at the cost of sacrifice; has now tendered his resignation as a director: be it

Resolved that in regretfully accepting Mr Albee's resignation from the active directorate of the Association, we recognize the fact that the loss of his presence and mature judgment in our meetings will be most distinct; and that we shall keenly miss his regular counsel and enthusiastic vision of things needful and possible. And be it further

Resolved: that this board hereby elect Amos D. Albee an Honorary Life Director of the Quincy Young Men's Christian Association. And be it further

Resolved: that a copy of these resolutions be suitably engrossed and presented to him and that they be spread on the records of the Association and be given the Quincy Press.

Rev. William H. Germany of the Hall Place M. E. church officiated at the services held at the funeral of Charles Carr, one of the oldest residents of West Quincy, which took place at the home of his daughter, Mrs. David Thomas, 41 Bunker Hill street. Burial was in the Hall cemetery.

ADD TO ROOM'S APPEARANCE

Mirrors Properly Should Be Given High Place in Scheme of House Decoration.

In many houses mirrors serve a strictly utilitarian purpose, being confined to the bureau and dressing table in the bedroom, bathroom and dressing room. Yet there are few things more decorative in a home than good mirrors. The darkest, ugliest room can be greatly lightened by their judicious use, and the smallest room can be given the suggestion of space.

The French have long been sensible of the effectiveness of mirrors in household decoration. From the big chateau to the tiny tea room they are regarded as an integral part of the decorations, not merely a convenience for hat adjustment or skirt inspection.

The best way to get good, yet inexpensive mirrors for your house is to make them yourself, and this is not difficult.

If you have a room in which you can use the panel mirrors you can achieve charming effects. Select the space where you plan to place your mirrors, measure it, and have the mirror cut at a glass cutter's. He will sell you the mirror at so much per square foot, and it will be far cheaper than anything you could purchase already framed. Buy a simple molding, set the glass against the wall, fasten the molding firmly around it, and you will have a panel mirror at half the price a decorator would have charged you.

EASY TO CLEAN BASKET WORK

White or Colored Variety May Be Freshened and Made Like New, With Soap and Water.

If it is white basket work, mix some whiting in a pailful of warm water to which some soap powder has been added. Brush the basket work with the above with a fairly stiff brush, taking care to go in the crevices. Then throw clean cold water over it until the whiting is all off. If it is brown cane, add ammonia instead of whiting.

A good plan to clean white or light-colored basket work is to put two or three handfuls of salt to half a pailful of cold or hot water, then scrub well all over the basket work, sprinkling a little fine salt on the brush to clean the very dirty parts. After thoroughly cleaning, rinse well with clean cold water, when it will be found to look almost equal to new. Do this on a good drying day and not too much in the sun

An easy way of cleaning basket work is to get some soft soap and place it in a saucer. Have ready a bowl of water (not too hot). Then take a nail brush, dip the brush into the water and then into the soap, and apply to basket work. When clean, rinse well and polish off with a dry rubber.—Ann Marie Lloyd.

HOLDER FOR THE HAIRPINS

A hairpin holder for hanging by the side of the looking-glass, of quite a new shape and design, is the subject of the accompanying sketch.

size of the hairpins. This card is smoothly covered with pale pink silk, and a pocket made of the same material and lined with thin white silk is sewn on across the lower half.

On the front of the pocket is embroidered a pretty little floral design consisting of three white blossoms and six leaves worked in various shades of green. The whole thing is edged with a fine gold silk cord carried into three little loops at each of the lower corners.

For suspending the holder, a long loop of ribbon with a smart rosette bow at the top is attached to the upper edge, and the ends of the ribbon are arranged in loops that hang downwards on either side. A little cotton wool should be placed in the bottom of the pocket to receive the points of the hairpins.

Mending Pelts.

Many expensive skins used in fur coats are tender and tear easily, but are hard to mend because they will not hold the stitches. Open the lining, draw the edges of the rent evenly together with a few stitches, then apply surgeon's adhesive plaster across the back and in other places where the strain comes.

COMMONS TAKE FOUR AT ONCE

Never since the opening game of the West Quincy Twilight league has there been so much enthusiasm shown as in Tuesday evenings game between the Commons and the Hinkies. The winning of the game meant four wins for the lucky team as rain had already prevented three meetings between them.

The Commons came to life in Monday's game and by winning that game got their courage back again. Up to the first of the fourth inning the Hinkies were five runs ahead of them but in the final two innings the Commons netted nine runs. Ned Bennett as umpire, gave several close decisions which were questionable. Quinn the centerfielder of the Commons was the star performer at the bat getting three hits one a two bagger. The winning battery was DeCoste and Dunn and for the losers McDonald and Gardiano.

WARD TWO TO CELEBRATE

The only celebration of July Fourth this year will be held in Ward Two. Atlantic, which for several years has held a celebration, will take a rest this year as will the central association probably, now that the Council has turned down the appropriation of $600 for children's entertainment. This means that Ward Two will have the only celebration and for that reason the ward should receive an awakening such as it has not had for years.

The Town River yacht club which is back of the celebration is fully alive to the situation and energetic committees are hard at work perfecting arrangements. Meetings of the general committee are held every Wednesday evening and collections are being solicited for the celebration. If any have not been called upon who desire to contribute they may send their contrubition to George H. Jaques, treasurer, 82 Edison park.

As now planned the program will start at midnight the night before with a hugh bonfire on Pincushion Island, foot of River street. This is the only bonfire for which a permit has been given.

The clubhouse will be open for 24 hours, and all subscribers will be welcome. Women and children will be especially cared for during the day and evening.

In the morning of the Fourth there will be base ball games on the playground, also games for the children at the clubhouse in the afternoon.

At 4 o'clock there will be speed, motor and sail boat races, and a series of water sports to suit all ages. In the evening there will be a grand display of fireworks at 8 o'clock. Added to the other attractions of the day there will be band concerts.

There will be an open-air Suffrage meeting at the Wollaston post-office at 8 P. M. Thursday. Mrs. Olive Halladay Hasbrouck, the well known organizer and speaker, will deliver the address.

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"A Daughter of the People" is the name of the big feature photo-play which heads the bill at the Auditorium theatre today and Thursday. The plot is a good one, the parts well taken, and the drama replete with strong situations

Arthur Stillman, cotton goods manufacturer, closes his mills and much suffering results in the town of Rockton. Dell Hamilton, daughter of an old mill dyer, is in love with Sam Lloyd the young engineer of the mill and both their families are victims of Stillmann's action.

Sam learns of Stillman's double dealing and the men set fire to the cotton warehouse. Stillman who is in love with Dell, tells her that he will reopen the mill if she will marry him. Urged on by Sam, who is ignorant of Stillman's conditions, she tries to influence Stillman.

Stillman illegally marries Dell and when she learns the truth she leaves him. She returns to the mill and is repulsed by her family and friends. Her lover, Sam, also disowns her.

But Stillman is a changed man. He is genuinely in love with Dell. He reopens the mill, improves the conditions of his working people and legally marries Dell who has grown to love him.

"The Water Cure" is the name of another one reel feature, a side-splitter it is, too.

FINDS TEAM IT CAN BEAT

Q. H. S. Defeats Rockland High By 8 to 2

Quincy High won from Rockland High school at Merrymount park Tuesday afternoon by an 8 to 2 score. It was the second time Rockland has been defeated by the local boys

The game was sewed up in the eighth inning by Hoffses who drove out a double with the bases full, scoring two runs. Quincy displayed a little more "pep" than has characterized many games this season.

Ford, the regular Rockland catcher and a member of the fast South Shore All-Star team last summer, had to play right field because of injuries to his hand

Quincy's hitting was in the pinches while Rockland's was scattered. Desmond, who on Monday made his first hit in 43 times at bat, contributed two more. Percy Jenkins, until Monday, a regular on the second team played the hot corner and got three putouts and four assists His error was made on a throw which if backed up by Hoffses wouldn't have allowed a runner to score.

Di Senso came to the rescue of Quincy twice by putting two out at home. His first was particularly good for it required handling a high throw by Dorley Hamlin made the second possible by an accurate throw from left.

Quincy was unable to get more than four runs until the eighth Dorley opened with a hit and O'Donnell reached on an error. Larkin hit, filling the bases. DiSenso flied out at first and Reardon fanned. Desmond waited out the pitcher, drew a pass and forced a run. Hoffses then drove the ball by second and sent two over.

What Woolner Considers Proper Solution of Liquor Question

Cincinnati, June 9.—"The solution of what is commonly called the liquor question depends on what we consider the problem to be," said President Woolner of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' association, at the opening session of that organization.

After reading the annual report of United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue Osborn, in which illicit distilling during the past fiscal year was said to have increased slightly over the preceding year, Woolner said:

"It can readily be seen from the commissioner's report that prohibition neither prohibits nor lessens the demand, merely changing from the legitimate manufacturing and distribution to illegitimate.

"Let us have local self-government, so that every individual shall be left free to eat or drink what he chooses until he has proven himself incompetent to exercise this freedom without jeopardizing the life, property and liberty of his fellow-men."

CRAIGHEAD IS OUSTED

Helena, Mont., June 9.—The state board of education refused to renew the contract of E. B. Craighead as president of Montana State University.

This action was taken after Craighead had been called before the board to answer charges that he had threatened members of the faculty with dismissal unless they wrote letters to the board indorsing his work. His connection with the university will end next September.

June 14 Is Flag Day

Boston, June 9.—Governor Walsh issued a proclamation designating June 14 as Flag day, and calling upon all good citizens to remind one another, and to teach the children and the stranger within these gates to reverence the righteous and lofty principles of which the flag of this nation is an emblem.

Litchfield, Conn., June 9.—Isaac N. Williams, who is on trial here with Harry E. Roe for the murder of Hubert B. Case at Barkhamsted, made an unsuccessful attempt at suicide in his cell at the county jail by cutting both wrists with a piece of glass.

Charged With Moran Murder

Bangor, Me., June 9.—Morgan D. Doyle and Lulu Moran, arraigned in the municipal court charged with having murdered Stephen Moran, pleaded not guilty, but they were ordered held for the supreme court without bail.

Girl Kills Self With Pistol

SPORTING COMMENT

Some question has arisen as to where the General Electric—Fore River game in the Manufacturers league will be played next Saturday. It is scheduled for Lynn but it is said the regular field is not available and that the teams are seeking new grounds, outside the city. There is a slight chance that the Lynn contingent may come to Quincy.

The track team of Quincy High school may participate in two mere meets before school closes. Melrose and Newton are said to be under consideration.

Several of the football games of Quincy High school will be played Saturday afternoons this fall, a change being made.

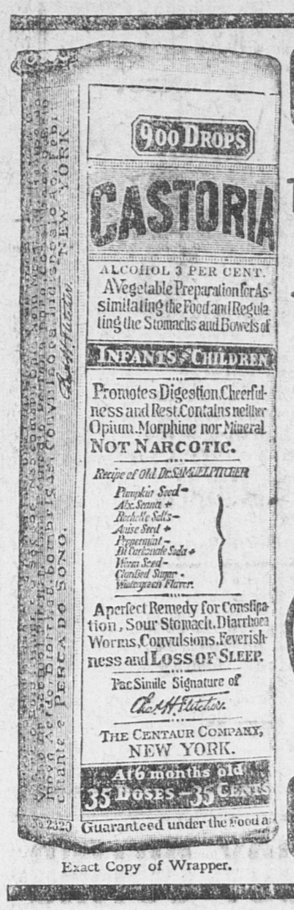

Bowling has jumped back in the limelight after a brief absence.

With the return of Walter Troupe to the game, as catcher of the Makarias, the fans greet a familiar face. Troupe has been out of the game for several seasons. His work in the Makaria—Redmen game on Memorial day was commendable.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER

The FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

"Is it settled that way?" asked Norcross.

"Yes. The supervisor warned us all, but even he never has any good words for Belden. He's a surly cuss and violently opposed to the service. His brother is one of the proprietors of the Meeker mill, and they have all tried to bulldoze Landon, our ranger over there. By the way, you'll like Landon. He's a Harvard man and a good ranger. His shack is only a half mile from Meeker's house. It's a pretty well known fact that Alec Belden is part proprietor of a saloon over there that worries the supervisor worse than anything. Cliff swears he's not connected with it, but he's more or less sympathetic with the crowd."

Norcross, already deeply interested in the present and future of a girl whom he had met for the first time only the day before, was quite ready to give up his trip to Meeker.

Early on the second morning he went to the postoffice—which was also the telephone station—to get a letter or message from Meeker. He found neither. But as he was standing in the door undecided about taking the stage Berea came into town riding a fine bay pony and leading a blaze faced buckskin behind her.

Her face shone cordially as she called out, "Well, how do you stack up this morning?"

"Tiptop," he answered, in an attempt to match her cheery greeting.

"Do you like our town better?"

"Not a bit! But the hills are magnificent."

"Anybody turned up from the mill?"

"No, I haven't heard a word from there. The telephone is still out of commission."

"They can't locate the break. Uncle Joe sent word by the stage driver asking us to keep an eye out for you and send you over. I've come to take you over myself."

"That's mighty good of you, but it's a good deal to ask."

"I want to see Uncle Joe on business, anyhow, and you'll like the ride better than the journey by stage."

Leaving the horses standing with their bridle reins hanging on the ground, she led the way to the office.

"When father comes in tell him where I've gone and send Mr. Norcross' packs by the first wagon."

"You'd better take my bay," said Berea. "Old Paintface there is little notional."

Norcross approached his mount with a caution which indicated that he had at least been instructed in range horse psychology, and as he gathered his reins together to mount, Berrie remarked:

"I hope you're saddle wise."

"I had a few lessons in a riding school," he replied modestly.

Young Downing approached the girl with a low voiced protest. "You oughtn't to ride old Paint. He nearly pitched the supervisor the other day."

"I'm not worried," she said and swung to her saddle.

The ugly beast made off in a tearing sidewise rush, but she smilingly called back, "All set." And Norcross followed her in high admiration.

Eventually she brought her broncho to subjection, and they trotted off together along the wagon road quite comfortably. By this time the youth had forgotten his depression, his homesickness of the morning. The valley was again enchanted ground.

After shacking along between some rather sorry fields of grain for a mile or two Berea swung into a side trail. "I want you to meet my mother," she said.

The grassy road led to a long, one story, half log, half slab house which stood on the bank of a small, swift, willow bordered stream.

The young easterner looked about in astonishment. Not a tree bigger than his thumb gave shade. The gate of the cattle corral stood but a few feet from the kitchen door, and rusty beef bones, bleaching skulls and scraps of sun dried hides littered the ground or hung upon the fence. Exteriorly the low cabin made a drab, depressing picture, but as he alighted, upon Berea's invitation, and entered the house he was met by a sweet faced, brown haired little woman, in a neat gown, whose bearing was not in the least awkward or embarrassed.

Mrs. McFarlane extended her small hand with friendly impulse. "I'm very glad to meet you, sir. Are you going to spend some time at the mill?"

"I don't know. I have a letter to Mr. Meeker from a friend of mine who hunted with him last year—a Mr. Sutler."

"Mr. Sutler! Oh, we know him very well. Won't you sit down?"

The interior of the house was not only well kept, but presented many evidences of refinement. A mechanical piano stood against the log wall, and books and magazines, dog eared with use, littered the table, and Norcross, feeling the force of Nash's half expressed criticism of his "superior," listened intently to Mrs. McFarlane's apologies for the condition of the farmyard.

"Well," said Berea sharply, "if we're to reach Uncle Joe's for dinner we'd better be scratching the hills." And to her mother she added, "I'll pull in about dark."

The mother offered no objection to her daughter's plan, and the young people rode off together directly toward the high peaks to the east.

CHAPTER III.

A Forester's Secret.

THE trail, hardly more than a wood road, grew wilder and loncher as they climbed. Cattle fed on the hillsides in scattered bands like elk. Here and there a small cabin stood on the bank of a stream, but for the most part the trail mounted the high slopes in perfect solitude.

The girl talked easily and leisurely, reading the brands of the ranchers, revealing the number of cattle they owned, quite as a young farmer would have done. She seemed not to be embarrassed in the slightest degree by the fact that she was guiding a strange man over a lonely road and gave no outward sign of special interest in him till she suddenly turned to ask, "What kind of a slicker—I mean a raincoat—did you bring?"

He looked blank. "I don't believe I brought any. I've a leather shooting jacket, however."

She shrugged her shoulders and looked up at the sky. "We're in for a storm. You'd ought 'o have a slicker, no fancy raincoat,' but a real old fashioned cow puncher's oilskin. They make a business of shedding rain."

She rode on for a few minutes in silence, as if disgusted with his folly, but she was really worrying about him. "Poor chap!" she said to herself. "He can't stand a chill. I ought to have thought of his slicker myself. He's helpless as a baby."

They were climbing fast now, winding upward along the bank of a stream, and the sky had grown suddenly gray, and the woodland path was dark and chill. The mountains were not less beautiful, but they were decidedly less amiable, and the youth shivered, casting an apprehensive eye at the thickening clouds.

Berea perceived something of his dismay and, drawing rein, dismounted. Behind her saddle was a tightly rolled bundle which, being untied and shaken out, proved to be a horseman's rainproof oilskin coat. "Put this on!" she commanded.

"Yes you can! You must! Don't you worry about me. I'm used to weather. Put this on over your jacket and all. You'll need it. Rain won't hurt me, but it will just about finish you."

The worst of this lay in its truth, and Norcross lost all his pride of sex for the moment. A wetting would not dim this girl's splendid color nor reduce her vitality one degree, while to him it might be a death warrant. "You could throw me over my own horse," he admitted in a kind of bitter admiration and slipped the coat on, shivering with cold as he did so.

"You think me a poor excuse for a trailer, don't you?" he said ruefully as the thunder began to roll.

"You've got to be all made over new," she replied tolerantly. "Stay here a year and you'll be able to stand anything."

Remounting, she again led the way with cheery cry. The rain came dashing down in fitful, misty streams, but she merely pulled the rim of her sombrero closer over her eyes and rode steadily on, while he followed, plunged in gloom as cold and gray as the storm.

"These mountain showers don't last long," the girl called back, her face shining like a rose. "We'll get the sun in a few minutes."

And so it turned out. In less than an hour they rode into the warm light again, and in spite of himself Norcross returned her smile, though he said: "I feel like a selfish fool. You are soaked."

"I never take cold," she returned. "I'm used to all kinds of weather. Don't you bother about me."

Topping a low divide, the youth caught a glimpse of the range to the southeast, which took his breath. "Isn't that superb?" he exclaimed. "It's like the shining roof of the world!"

"Yes, that's the Continental divide," she confirmed casually, but the lyrical note which he struck again reached her heart. The men she knew had so few words for the beautiful in life. She wondered whether this man's illness had given him this refinement or whether it was native to his kind. "I'm glad he took my coat," was her thought.

She pushed on down the slope, riding hard, but it was nearly 2 o'clock when they drew up at Meeker's house, which was a long, low, stone structure built along the north side of the road. The place was distinguished not merely by its masonry, but also by its picket fence, which had once been whitewashed. Farm wagons of various degrees of decay stood by the gate, and in the barnyard plows and harrows—deeply buried by the weeds—were rusting forlornly away. A little farther up the stream the tall pipe of a sawmill rose above the firs.

A pack of dogs of all sizes and signs came clamoring to the fence, followed by a big, slovenly dressed, red bearded man of sixty or thereabouts.

"Hello, Uncle Joe!" called the girl in offhand boyish fashion. "How are you today?"

"Howdy, girl," answered Meeker gravely. "What brings you up here this time?"

Meeker's face lightened. "I reckon you're Mr. Norcross? I'm glad to see ye. Light off and make yourself to home. Turn your horses into the corral. The boys will feed 'em."

Without ceremony Meeker led his guests directly into the dining room, a long and rather narrow room, wherein a woman and six or seven roughly dressed young men were sitting at a rudely appointed table.

"Earth and seas!" exclaimed Mrs. Meeker. "Here's Berrie, and I'll bet that's Sutler's friend, our boarder."

"Hist along there, boys, and give the company a chance," she commanded sharply. "Our dinner's turrible late today."

NOMINATION PAPERS.

Secretary of State Prepares 33,000 Sheets.

State House, Boston, June 8—Thirty-three thousand nomination papers to be used by the candidates at the coming fall election are being printed and will be distributed to the various city and town clerks by Secretary of State, Albert P. Langtry, next week. The nomination papers this year will be single sheets with room enough for the signatures of only fifty voters and the endorsement of the registrars of voters in the community in which the signors live.

This year a voter does not have to designate whether he is a Republican, Democrat or member of any other political party when affixing his signature to a nomination paper. A voter may sign the nomination paper of any candidate, a member of his own party or any other, but he is privileged to sign only one paper excepting in double representative districts where he may sign two papers.

According to the law, nomination papers to be valid must contain the necessary number of registered voters' signatures and be returned to the registrars of voters in the particular city or town in which they are circulated on dates to be announced by the various registrars when the papers are issued.

The law also provides that special meetings of the registrars must be held this year on July 24, July 31, August 7 and August 14. The date of the last meeting is the last day for filing primary nomination papers for certification with the local officials and on August 17 at 5 P. M. the time limit expires for filing the papers with the Secretary of State after they have been properly certified by the local registrars. This law was passed in order that the candidate's name may appear on the official ballot at the State primaries to be held on September 21.

TO FINISH SEASON.

The Saturday Auction Bridge club finishes its season this month with two gentlemen's nights. Next Friday night Miss Eleanor Whittemore, Miss Stella Barker and Miss Catherine Saville are to be the hostesses and the meeting will be held at the Quincy Yacht club. A week from Friday night Miss Ethel Roache, Miss Beatrice Morrison and Mrs. Gerna Saville Walker are to be the hostesses at the Miller Stile Inn.

It is claimed that country boys make the best ball players, but anyway city boys can talk faster from the coacher's position.

Ruth Broadbent as the baby bumble bee, who sang in a very cunning manner the song of that name. She was appropriately costumed and was loudly encored.

The crowning event of the evening was the pageant of the Queen of Sheba. A group of attendants in oriental costume, bearing palm leaves, headed the procession and were followed by two dancing girls. Next came the car of the queen, borne by four stalwart guards and brought up in the rear by more palm bearers.

An oriental evolution by the two dancing girls was followed by a well executed dance by the Queen of Sheba. This brought loud applause. The line of march was again formed and the majestic procession withdrew.

Mrs. H. S. Kaulbeck was the Queen of Sheba and the dancing girls were Reta Brown and Celia Arenberg. The carriers were: Herbert Barkley, Fred Brown, Paul Ross and Roland Ruggles.

A giant elephant, with Cornelius Manchester and Michael Arenberg as the component parts, next performed. The antics of a trick horse closed the performance. One of the clowns, in attempting to ride it, dislocated something and the animal came in two. The two parts were: Ernest and William Pletsch. Just preceding the final curtain Mr. and Mrs. Tom Thumb made their appearance and were received with thunderous rounds of applause.

The proceeds of the show will be devoted to a clubhouse which the Wollaston Boy Scouts, of which George Brown is scoutmaster, intend to build on the near future.

Responsible for the fine entertainment was a committee consisting of Mrs. Catherine L. Fowler, Mrs. F. A. Arenberg, Mrs. T. W. Lindsey, F. S. Pollock and George Brown. A number of Scouts from the Atlantic troop assisted

FRIENDS GIVE LINEN SHOWER

Miss Marguerite Kennedy to Wed June 23

Miss Marguerite Kennedy, one of the most popular telephone operators at the Quincy telephone exchange and a well known Quincy Point young woman whose marriage to John Joseph Lane of Rockland is to take place on June 23, was tendered a linen shower at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Kennedy of Beacon street Tuesday evening

The shower was given by the Sanctuary Girls club of the new St. Joseph's church of which the prospective bride is a member A quantity of linen was showered on Miss Kennedy on the arrival of the girls.

The wedding will bring to a close a pretty romance which had its inception at a "prom" at Bridgewater Normal school more than a year ago. Miss Kennedy attended as the guest of her sister, a student Mr. Lane, a member of the graduating class, and herself were introduced The friendship grew and several months ago, thir engagement was announced. Only the immediate friends of the young woman were aware of it but when the marriage was announced for this month they immediately arranged for the shower.

JITNEY BUS LINE IN SQUANTUM IS PLANNED

Residents Dissatisfied With Street Car Service

That the Bay State Street Railway is too poor this year to undertake the placing of a curve at Hancock street, Atlantic, so that Squantum cars can make the trip without the passengers riding half a mile backwards, was the report made to the Squantum Improvement association at its meeting in Richards Memorial hall, Tuesday night.

President John R. Nelson reported that a meeting had been held in the Boston office of the company and the proposition put before General Manager Goff who stated that officials of the road were unanimous that this improvement should be made but that the road had had a poor year financially and could not afford to do it this year. They were agreed the cost of the curve should go into next year's budget. In 1916 Squantum and Atlantic residents may ride in Bay State cars facing the same way the car is going. It is reported that promoters of a jitney bus line have signified their intentions of starting a line to Squantum within a few weeks.

In consequence of a discussion of the same matter at the meeting of the Atlantic improvement association last week the committee appointed are getting down to work. They are all hustlers and results may be expected to come from their labors. The committee, which will be known as the executive committee, consisting of seven members will be appointed subject to the approval of the Board of Directors, and will have absolute control of all matters pertaining to improvements which are presented to the Board. The committee will also be empowered to appoint such subcommittees as they deem advisable.

The committee appointed to interview the street railway officials relative to the curved track on Hancock street where the Squantum line leaves the main line reports that at the present time the cars have to cross over to the Squantum line. that the association desires is that there should be a curved track built connecting the two lines which would save time and bother of changing seats about. The street railway officials informed the committee however that it was unable to do anything at the present time owing to financial conditions.

The association is circulating petitions to have a fire alarm box located at the corner of Hollis avenue and Faxon road, also for a later postal collection than 7 o'clock in the evening.

Chairman W. N. Kenyon of the nominating committee made the following report of selection for officers for the coming year to be voted on at the next meeting of the association: For president, James H. Foster and James H. Sumner; vice president, Roger Mason; secretary, William Whitley; treasurer, Charles Bostwick; executive committee, John R. Nelson, Herbert A. Smith and William C. Spargo.

After some discussion as to the nature of the celebration it was voted that the association celebrate the Fourth of July with exercises specially adapted for the children and the following committee was appointed; W. N. Kenyon, James H. Hagan, James H. Sumner, Charles Bostwick, James P. Loghan, Jr., William Ross, James H. Foster, Edward Carlson, C. S. Singleton, Chauncey Paul, William Whitley and Mr. Ross.

It was reported that the City of Quincy had used three barrels of oil in spraying the marshes about Squantum for the extermination of mosquitoes and that this work would be carried on by the association in cooperation with the city officials this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Rrel Jefferson of Elm avenue are receiving congratulations upon the birth of a son.

Both of the men were thrown off but fortunately they were not injured and but little damage was done to either the automobile or motorcycle. Miss Sears however was made somewhat nervous by the accident but soon recovered and was able to proceed on her way up the hill. The men also mounted their machine and rode away.

MISS EDNA SMITH WEDS GEO. W. GAY

Pretty Ceremony Is Performed In First Parish Church

TO LIVE IN NORWOOD

One of the prettiest of the early June weddings was that of Miss Edna Lewis Smith of Quincy and George Willard Gay of Norwood who were married on Wednesday evening at the First Parish church. At eight o'clock when the first strains of the wedding march played by William Ellis Weston were heard, the doors into the chapel were thrown open and the six bridesmaids, three on a side and led by a little flower girl, proceeded down the side aisles.

At the rear of the church, they met the rest of the bridal procession and moved down the broad aisle to the altar. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson of the First church, the double ring service being used. The bride looked charming in an effective gown of white Duchess satin, combined with lace and chiffon. The long train was of the white satin and the veil was of tulle, confined with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley and maiden-hair fern.

The bridesmaids' gowns were a dainty combination of pink and lavender suggesting the coloring of sweet peas. They were made of pink taffeta and pink chiffon, the chiffon flounce on the skirt being caught up by little bunches of lavender sweet peas. They all wore Dutch caps of pink chiffon and carried large bouquets of pink and lavender sweet peas. The same color scheme was carried out in the costume of the maid of honor, Miss Carlina Walker of Quincy, whose gown was of lavender taffeta, made in the same way as those of the bridesmaids. Her cap was of lavender chiffon and she carried a bouquet of sweet peas. The flower girls, Misses Elizabeth and Harriet Gay of Norwood, nieces of the groom, were in white, with pink sashes and carried baskets of pink sweet peas.

The bridesmaids were: Miss Violet M. Atherton, Honolulu, Hawaii, Miss Marie C. Bass, Quincy, Miss Carolyn Davey, E. Orange, N. J., Miss Louise B. Hoyle, New York, Miss Elizabeth Kneeland, Braintree, Miss Maude W. Macfarlane, Quincy.

The best man was Allan A. Jefferson of New York. The ushers were: Henry R. Baston of Providence, Francis G. Boggs, of Hingham, Joseph B. Dunn of Dorchester, Charles H. Hardwick of Quincy, Alexander Hoyle of Boston, Charles E. Stewart of New York.

After the ceremony there was a reception in the chapel, which like the church was decorated very simply with laurel and palms and ferns. Mr. and Mrs. Gay were assisted in receiving by the members of the bridal party. After the bride's cake had been cut and the pieces distributed, Mr. and Mrs. Gay went away in a shower of confetti and good wishes.

There were many guests present from out-of-town, as well as from Quincy where the bride has hosts of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Gay will live in Norwood, where they will be at home to their friends after September 1, at 71 Winter street.

GERMANY APPROVES BRYAN'S RESIGNATION

Berlin Papers Optimistic Regarding American Reply

(By United Press)

Berlin, via the Hague, June 10—Germany doesn't believe that the American rejoinder in the "Lusitania" murder reported to be due here today, will result in the breaking off of diplomatic relations between the two countries. High political circles distrust the English reports that the last note amounts to an ultimatum. They express the conviction that Germany and the United States will continue on friendly terms.

The newspapers continue to devote more space to Sec. Bryan's resignation than to the probable contents of the note. The majority of the Berlin papers believe better relations will exist between the two countries with Bryan out of the cabinet. Since the beginning of the war the Berlin press has announced that Bryan is strongly pro-English because his daughter married an English army officer.

EFFICIENCY AND DEMOCRACY.

It has been said more than once that the best government on earth is that of a benevolent and able despot. If by "best" is meant efficent this is very likely true. Democracy and efficiency do not go hand in hand. But the best government on earth, the Utopia of the idealists, would be an efficient democracy. At the present stage of civilization an efficient democracy would seem to be a contradiction in terms. We are drawing nearer to it every day but the goal is still very far off.

Efficiency in conducting the public business can come only to a few and then only after long experience. But long experience for public officials is not desired by the American people, among whom democracy surely has reached its highest point of development to date. Long terms of office for public officials are frowned upon by the voters, either because they think that fairness demands "rotation in office," so that all who desire may "have a crack at it," or because they do not feel sure enough of the stability of democracy to be free from a fear of dictatorship.

There are three conspicuous places in this country where the custom of "rotation in office" has acquired the strength of law. The first is the Presidency of the United States. Two terms is the limit for which any man may hope as Theodore Roosevelt learned in November of 1912. Three terms for the governor of a state is pretty generally about all the people will stand even in the case of a popular and able man. The same length of time constitutes the limit of the mayoralty of the average American city, and two terms is the extent to which most municipal executives may aspire. Of course there have been exceptions to this custom, such as Mr. Ashley's career in New Bedford, which is by no means at an end although he was defeated at the last city election.

The citizens of Quincy, for example, will elect a man to office. If he proves a fairly able executive and is a good vote-getter he usually gets a second term. If he is unusually popular and an unusual vote-getter three terms may come his way. But that is the limit. No matter how able and honest a mayor of Quincy has been there will be a large number of voters who will think him grasping if he dares to covet the office for a fourth time. It must not be, say the people let someone else have a chance

In such a case it would probably never strike the people that they are not so much depriving a man of a coveted prize as they are depriving themselves and their city of an efficient government. Apparently this attitude on the part of the voters does not extend to unpaid boards, probably because there is enough work heavily to overbalance the compensation. Councilmen in cities, library trustees, park commissioners, selectmen in towns sometimes serve for a considerable period. Minor paid officials in cities are often retained by successive administrations because there it is glaringly apparent that there must be experience and ability if the office is to be conducted in any sort of shape and the deficiencies of the higher officials covered up.

There is something to be said on both sides of this question, for the arguments are not all on the side of long continuance in office. But on that point we do not purpose to write at this time. We merely wish to point out that at the present time the highest efficiency of government is not possible in a democracy.

Several persons have complained because a part of Hancock street between Granite and School streets has been torn up for several weeks. These people should be listened to. What does the street department mean, anyway, by making a street impassable in any part? Better let the street alone than to block up a part of it for a few weeks. Of course there will be a howl from those who drive over the street but never mind that: the city officials are paid to listen to howls. Let us have no more street repairing because it is not worth while to impede traffic for a few weeks in order to facilitate it for many years. Incidentally, they are doing a good job on Hancock street, but of course that has nothing to do with the question.

Although many have believed that Secretary Bryan was not destined long to remain as such the news of his resignation nevertheless came as a great surprise. In this city, for example, when a Ledger bulletin at six o'clock Tuesday evening stated that the Secretary of State had severed his connection with the national administration the announcement was greeted with general disbelief not to say derision. The Ledger is proud of the fact that it was the first, by reason of its United Press service, to announce the news to Quincy.

The name "Lansing" after the American note sent Wednesday will have more meaning than the name "Bryan" after the previous note, for Acting Secretary of State Lansing as counsellor to the state department had a great deal more to do with drafting the note of May 13 than did the late lamented Secretary of State, and his share in the drafting of the latest communication has been large.

A number of citizens availed themselves of Lieut. Downes' invitation to view the drill of the Machine Gun Co. Tuesday night. They must have been impressed by the soldierly appearance of the troop, which although in existence but a short time has already made excellent progress.

A. F. Schenkelberger, who raised the American flag Wednesday in honor of Secretary Bryan's resignation, must have regretted it was not five days later, Flag Day, for then he would have had many others to accompany him in the tribute.

Troop Three, Boy Scouts of Wollaston, proved their ability as entertainers Tuesday night when they presented the society circus.

Among the most welcome news items of the day is that Dr. Dernburg will sail from New York on Saturday.

KENTUCKYS TREE JRODIGY.

There is said to be in Kentucky a tree bearing each year a crop of walnuts and a crop of mullberries; and the curious phenomenon is accounted for by the supposition that a mulberry seed fell where a walnut lay in the ground and that young shoots came up side by side and united their forces into one solid trunk. This supposition seems feasible from the fact that the back of the tree is on one side that of walnut and on the other that of the mulberry.—Indianapolis News.

PROHIBITION IN WHITE HOUSE.

Ours is he first royal court to dispense with alcoholic beverage says The Pall Mall Gazette, but the White House has been run on total abstinence prniciples since the election of President Wilson, and not for the first time. Lincoln, McKenley and other Presidents have been total abstainers, and yet allowed wine upon the table at White House; but under President Hayes all intoxicants were rigidly banned.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CALLS ON BRYAN JUST IN TIME

Editor Ledger:

A greeting is hereby sent from Washington, D. C., to my friends and people at Quincy. The city is one of the most beautiful cities I ever saw. The capital building is magnificent and an American citizen may well be proud of the same. I went through it from the Rotunda to the top of the Dome; from the President's room at the North to the Golden room at the south. I saw the Senate chamber and the Hall of Representatives. I sat in the Supreme Court room, and stood in statuary hall on the spot where John Quincy Adams fell from his seat in the morning of Feb. 21st., 1848. (He died two days later.) A statue is found of him and also of Samuel Adams, but of John Adams there are only painting and portraits. Many other buildings were visited, and among these that of the State Department, where I called at the office of Secretary W. J. Bryan and was very cordially received.

When you read this, I am on my way to the West and North West.

Yours,
L. Hokenson.

The class prophecy which promises great things for everyone was by Miss Marion Simpson and Earle Simmons. Messrs. Collins, Mansur and Barbour were speakers. The toastmaster called on Paul Larkin, football and baseball captain and picked last fall as the All-interscholastic football end; Wesley Brown, a most aggressive athlete, Robert Foy, one of the "smallest" boys of the class and Willard Crocker, president of the class, and captain of the basket ball and tennis teams.

BOYS STEAL AUTOMOBILE

Police Officer Finds It In Boston

An automobile of Clarence Needham said to belong in Quincy was stolen about 9 o'clock Wednesday night from the junction of Columbia road and Dorchester avenue where it had been left for a few minutes. Mr. Needham reported to police of Station 11 that two boys had jumped into the car and driven it off in the direction of Massachusetts avenue. An hour later the automobile was found by a policeman on Parker street. The boys evidently suspected they had been discovered for they jumped from the car and made their escape.

Letters and cards received from Mrs. E. W. Campbell state that all is well with her and that she is having a fine time.

THREE FISHERMEN ARE STILL MISSING

Others of the Crew of the Washakie Have Been Rescued

Boston, June 10.—Nine members of the crew of the fishing schooner Washakie, who were lost in a fog off Nantucket Sunday, have been saved, which leaves three still missing.

Two were landed in Boston by the tug Confidence, which picked them up from their dory near Pollock Rip. Two others of the crew reached safety on Great Round Shoal lightship in Nantucket sound and five more landed at Monomoy Point, Cape Cod.

The six dories in which the crew were seated when overtaken by the fog remained together until separated by a heavy gale. The Washakie came into Boston manned by two of the crew who had been left aboard. They searched for their comrades for thirty-six hours.

SHIPBUILDING RECORD BROKEN

Construct 10 Submarines For England

All world's records in shipbuilding have been broken at a shipyard outside Montreal, Canada where since Jan. 1, ten submarines have been constructed for the British government. Six of them are now undergoing their trials and the instaliation of the machinery in the other four is progressing rapidly and may be completed next week.

A great part of the work was done by residents of the United States who signed contracts with representatives of the Canadian shipyard shortly after the contract was secured. Some of these men were employed at the time at the Fore River shipyard.

Special inducements were held out for experienced shipbuilders and when the frames were set several thousand from American shipyards were actively employed. The work was completed under the direction of experts of the British government and with companies of mounted infantry men patrolling the yard outside and inside.

The submarines are said to be of the Holland diving type, similar to the L boats constructed for the United States navy, and are said to have a cruising radius of about 1500 miles. Each cost, it is estimated, about $500,000.

Many of the workmen who went to Canada were of English and Scottish birth who were employed in shipyards across the sea before coming to the United States. A few who have drifted back to Quincy say records which have stood for years and were considered the best which would ever be made have been shattered in the completion of the contract.

LEAGUE HOLDS JUNE MEETING

The June meeting of the Pilgrim Union of Epworth leagues was held in the Atlantic Methodist church on Tuesday evening. Supper was served by the entertaining league at quarter to seven. Rev Shirley D. Coffin of Mattapan was the principle speaker of the evening and he took as his subject, "The Challenge of the Dark Continent." The speaker said the evening held a double significance for him because fifteen years ago he had preached his maiden sermon in Atlantic Methodist church and that it was exactly ten years to the day since he had landed in Africa. Africa offers a challenge because of:

1. Its bigness. In Africa there is room for the United States, the British Isles, China, Europe and the Philippines. There are nearly four millions of square miles in Africa but its most valuable asset is its two millions of people.

2. The abuses and neglect which Africa has suffered offers a challenge. Africa has suffered from slavery and she has been exploited by traders The Arabs and the Portuguese nor is England's skirts entirely clear. Africa has even been abused by the church by its careless administration.

3. The poverty and need of the people is a challenge. The African's possession usually consists of a hut about nine or ten feet in diameter, a few rude cooking utensils and a weapon or two.

4. The poverty of the African intellect offers the fourth challenge. They have no books and no literature, and their minds are those of undeveloped children. A European trader gave a number of Africans some nails in payment for something and it was found that the Africans had planted the nails believing that they could grow a crop of nails. In the African language there are no words expressing love, purity or trust.

5. The very darkness of the Dark Continent itself is a challenge. The African is not only dark in color but in morals, for in this respect he is as low as he can be. Some men have as many as three or four hundred wives and these wives are simply chattels. The current price of a woman a few years ago was the equivalent of about two dollars and a half. The thing that makes this challenge worth considering is the deep soul hunger of the African, the reaching out after better things.

Mr. Coffin showed an African piano, some hats, a full dress suit, which was nothing more than a mere handful of beads, and he also showed the witch doctor's charms and how they are used.

Rev. C. E. Spaulding spoke briefly of the N. E. Epworth league institute which is to be held from June 28 to July 4 at Laseli seminary, Auburndale. He said that the same terms would be extended to non-leaguers as to leaguers

Rev. James M. Allen, superintendent of the City Missionary society, spoke of the needs among the Italians of the North End of Boston Within the distance that a boy might throw a stone taking his stand at the settlement house there are twenty thousand. "It is in the North End and not on the Back Bay that the hope of America is" says Mr. Allen.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

A few weeks ago "Woman Suffrage, History, Arguments, and Results," Frances M. Bjorkman, and Annie G. Porritt, editors, was discussed in these Notes. This was pro-suffrage and summarized most of the material which might be used by the suffragist speaker. Another book on the subject—"Shall Women Vote?", by Conway Whittle Sams, has been added. This has for a subtitle "A Book for Men," and its object is the discussion of the problem from the point of view of the anti-suffragist.

There are also several other books which women will enjoy. These may be found on the new display case at the right of the delivery desk, a portion of the top shelf being reserved especially for books interesting to women.

Among these is a book on entertaining, one on physical exercise, one on etiquette, the latest edition of Mrs. Lincoln's cook-book, and there are also two books of descriptive travel

The titles of the above are:—"Novel Ways of Entertaining," by Florence Hall Winterburn; "Exercises for Women," by Florence Bolton, "Good Form for All Occasions," by Florence Howe Hall; "The Boston Cook Book," by Mary J. Lincoln; "My Lady of the Chinese Courtyard," by Elizabeth Cooper; and "The American Woman Abroad," by Blanche McManus.

The title of the first four are descriptive of the contents, but the last two require a few words of explanation. "My Lady of the Chinese Courtyard" gives considerable information on the little known life of the Chinese women, and is written in the form of interesting letters "from Kweili, the wife of a very high Chinese official, to her husband when he accompanied his master Prince Chung, on his trip around the world." (Preface)

"The American Woman Abroad" is a book of discursive comment on the observations of the author, "who has tried to study the values in the foreign pictures, with an open mind." She has discussed for the American woman such phases as the cost of living abroad, marketing, tips, clothes, winter sports in Switzerland, French laws for foreigners, and many like subjects of interest to the traveller, "whether the casual summer bird of passage across the Atlantic, or planning a house hunting tour in Europe, or only wishing to read about it comfortably at home."

An analysis of the entering class for next September at the High School shows a very decided preference among the pupils for manual arts and household arts courses and a marked decrease in the commercial course. A small number of boys electing the normal preparatory course is also a very encouraging sign.

OFFERS PRIZES.

The extension service of the Massachusetts Agricultural college has recently issued for free distribution to any who care to apply for it, but more especially to schools, a Primer of Instruction on "Canning and Marketing" of fruits and vegetables. In connection with this the State organizes Canning and Marketing clubs, similar to the other State Boys and Girls clubs and offers substantial prizes in competition. The first prize is a trip to Washington, the second prize is a trip to some point of interest in New England and several third prizes are offered, to consist of a week spent at the college at Amherst.

Any one interested in this work should send to the college for circular No. 35.

DR. HAMILTON, SPEAKER.

Dr. Murlin of Boston University has found it necessary to break his engagement to give the graduation address at the Woodward Institute graduation and in his place has been secured Dr. Franklin Hamilton, chancellor of the American university at Washington.

SCHOOL MASTERS' CLUB.

The annual meeting of the School Masters' club will be held Saturday at Squantum. A large number have signified their intentions of being present among whom are several former teachers now engaged in other cities.

DEBATE AT HIGH SCHOOL.

Next Wednesday night at the High school hall, the Debating society will hold its final meeting which will be open to the public. The meeting will be devoted to a debating contest to determine the champion debaters of the year.

FUEL SUPPLY.

The City Fuel Co. of Boston began on Monday. The work of filling the school house coal bins with the winter supply of fuel and it is expected that the deliveries will all be completed within two weeks. The chemical tests as usual will be made by Arthur D. Little Inc. of Boston.

SEEKS POSITIONS.

The Industrial school is endeavoring to assist the full time pupils to secure positions for the summer months. Several letters have been sent to carpenters and builders, and various manufacturing plants. The school would be pleased to be informed of positions of any kind where good faithful boys may secure employment for the months of July and August.

HOW TO CURE DREAD TETANUS

The American people have reason to congratulate themselves over at least one achievement, and that is the rapid disappearance of Fourth of July tetanus. While the total casualties of the glorious day are less than a quarter what they were five years ago the deaths from tetanus have shown a much greater reduction. In 1903 there were 417 Fourth of July victims of that dread malady, in 1909 the number had been reduced to 130, while from last season's celebration there were but 3. This is life conservation in the true sense of the term. "Why not entirely eliminate the disease this year?" asks the United States Public Health Service.

The blank cartridge wound is the great cause of Fourth of July tetanus. When driven into the tissues the wadding carries with it innumerable bacilli, and the absorption of the poisonous products given off during the growth of these organisms produces the disease. The bacilli thrive only in the absence of oxygen. It is for this reason that the physician enlarges the wound of inlet and after removing all foreign material, dresses the injury in such a manner that development of the organisms is inhibited. In order to accomplish this it is usually necessary to administer a general anaesthetic. Anti-tetanic serum is of great value as a prophylactic measure, but it should be given soon after the receipt of the injury.

Parents should realize that Fourth of July tetanus is easy to prevent but extremely difficult to cure. No blank cartridge wound is too trivial to receive careful medical attention. However slight the injury may appear, summon a physician and at once adopt energetic measures. Reliance upon home treatment may prove disastrous and result in the sacrifice of life. In 1903, before the widespread recognition of the possibilities of preventative treatment, one case of tetanus developed to every 4 blank cartridge wounds reported; in 1914 there was but 1 case to every 40 such injuries. This is the measure of the success of preventive treatment.

ANNUAL OUTING HUGE SUCCESS

1735 Children Cheer Mayor Campbell

The annual outing Wednesday of the poor children of Greater Boston, which was held under the auspices of the Automobile Dealers' association under the personal direction of Mayor Chester I. Campbell, was one of the most successful as well as the largest attended outing that has yet been held. Wednesday's party was made up into sixteen divisions and the number of children provided with an outing totalled 1735. In addition to these there were 515 operators of cars and attendants. In this number was included 250 children from Quincy. One division was made up entirely of colored children of which there were over 200.

Mayor Campbell says that it had taken the entire time of two of the clerks in his Boston office for a month to make the arrangements. In addition to all of this work there is considerable expense attached to the outing. This is borne by the Automobile Dealers Association and by popular subscription. In this connection it might be added that the expense of Wednesday's outing amounted to about $1,500.

There was no parade through Boston or any of the places where the divisions were formed. The first division reached the beach at 10 o'clock and all had arrived by 11 o'clock. Each child wore a ribbon tag of different colors upon which was the number of the division to which he or she belonged. This came in handy in case any of the children became lost, as several did during the day, for those in charge by looking at the number of the division could readily place the lost child.

At noon they were served a nice fish dinner in the Hotel Nantasket. This was all over before 1 and then there were three hours more for play. The breeze from the water was comfortably cool. At 4 o'clock the autos were filled again for the return home.

The ride down and back through the parkway and skirting the Blue Hills was a treat to the children, many of whom had never been in an automobile and had never been at Nantasket. The owners themselves drove many of the cars lent. Many cars were lent by members of the Boston Automobile Dealers' association. Everything went admirably per schedule and at the dinner to the attendants Mayor Campbell was given three hearty cheers.

Children were taken from the following places: Sunnyside Day Nursery, Ruggles Street Baptist church, Morgan Memorial Home, N. E. Peabody Home for Crippled Children, Cambridge Neighborhood House, Margaret Fuller Home, St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, South End Day Nursery, Salvation Army Palace, St. Mark's church, East End Christian Union, Bowdoin Square Mission, Martin Luther Orphan Home and the Jewish Girls' Club.

In the morning sports for the drivers of the cars took place on the beach three prizes being given in each event. The winner of a first prize being handicapped in future events a number of drivers had chances for prizes. The summary:

50-Yard Dash—Won by McKenzie; Cobb, second; Davis, third.

100-Yard Dash—Won by Cobb; McKenzie, second; Downs, third.

Running Broad Jump—Won by Murray; Lewis, second, Kauffman, third.

440-Yard Run—Won by Downs; McGowan, second; Aronson, third.

Hop, Step and Jump—Won by Cobb; Carlson, second; McKenzie, third.

880-Yard Run—Won by Lewy; Renerl, second; Downs, third.

Standing Jump—Won by Lewy; Young, second; Duff, third.

BRIEFS

There will be a whist party this evening at the Quincy Yacht club house.

The Park and Downs church Sunday school will hold a picnic Saturday at Highland park.

Miss Margaret Goodspeed of 114 Grand View avenue will return this week from Wellesley College for the summer.

Friends of Dr. Harold Thomas gathered Sunday to bid him farewell, as he leaves for Labrador. He will probably return sometime in November.

An elaborate concert in honor of Children's Day will be given at the Wollaston Baptist church next Sunday morning. In the evening, there will be a large number of baptisms.

Among the graduates of the Northfield seminary this week was Miss Alta Grant of Brook street. Miss Grant will spend the next few weeks at a house party with friends.

The Wollaston Baptist church will hold its annual picnic at Glen Echo park, Stoughton, June 17th. As this is a holiday for the majority, an unusually large crowd is expected.

N. Phillips Hardy, son of Rev. and Mrs. Edwin Noah Hardy, formerly of Quincy, graduated this week from Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois.

Miss Elizabeth H. Camp, formerly desk attendant at the Thomas Crane Public Library was visiting friends in Quincy, Wednesday. Miss Camp is now librarian of the Wellesley Public library.

What is known as the standard Boston paving block is the kind which is being used on the Hancock street job. It is a block oblong in shape, that is from 7 to 9 inches long and from 3 1-2 to 4 1-2 inches square.

A "Bellemy" social will be held by the young people of the Wollaston Baptist C. E. society Friday evening at 7.45. As this is the last social of the season, an especially fine time is expected.

The address of George F. Willett on the transportation problem of Greater Boston should result in a large attendance at the meeting of the Board of Trade this evening. In addition to the address the Board will make plans for its annual outing.

Among the graduates from Boston University last week, Wollaston is very proud of its share. Miss Edith Armstrong and Mr. Aurin Pyson were among the highest in the class, while Mr. Mervyn Bailey and Miss Helen Farwell were of Phi Beta Kappa.

Mayor Campbell has charge of the annual outing of the Textile Machinery Manufacturers association, of which Frederick H. Bishop, of Wollaston is president, which will be held next Monday. The outing will take the form of a trip down the harbor in a steamer after which the party will make a landing for dinner.

At the regular convocation of St. Stephen's Royal Arch Chapter Wednesday evening the subject of celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the constitution of the chapter next March was brought up and after some discussion the high priest was authorized to appoint a committee to take the matter under consideration, the committee to report at a later convocation.

A wedding of great interest among the younger set of Wollaston will be that of William E. Bullock and Miss Eleanor E. Dunn, which will take place Saturday evening, June twenty-sixth. Mr. Bullock has become well known among the younger musical set, while Miss Dunn is equally popular. Both ceremony and reception will be held at the home of the bride, 253 Newport avenue.

Lawrence Barry who was thrown from his motor cycle in City square Tuesday noon when he was run down by an automobile was more seriously injured than at first supposed. After being thrown from his motor cycle he thought that he had escaped injury and returned to work. Later however he was obliged to give up work and has been confined to his home since that time. No bones were broken but he was severely bruised and shaken up.

The first meeting of the G. S. Society was held at the home of Miss Lillian Hodge, 18 Ellerton road Tuesday evening and the following officers elected: President—Lillian Hodge; secretary—Agnes Greenhalge; treasurer—Nellie Ridge. There was a large attendance and it is hoped to continue the meetings. Piano solos were rendered by members of the club and refreshments were served. At adjournment all pronounced it a very enjoyable evening.

TO SUIT THE FIGURE

LINES OF COSTUME MUST BE CAREFULLY FASHIONED.

Combinations and Blending of Colors and Materials Also Require the Most Careful Manipulation—Dainty Design Shown.

It is one of the important features of the fashions that, with all the tendency to frills and furbelows, there is usually a symmetrical arrangement of trimming. This prevents the general ensemble from assuming the mixed-up appearance that might result if this rule were not observed. There are, in the achievement of such "balance," innumerable subtle details that, though they tax the ingenuity of the designer, perhaps, to the uttermost, pass unnoticed or at least unappreciated by the casual observer.

Combinations and blending of colors and materials require careful manipulation if they are to be successful, and incidental trimming should be of such a nature as to preserve the intended character of the lines of a costume. Above all, the lines should be so constructed that they will conform in length and breadth to suit the figure they are to adorn.

The dainty design illustrated, for instance, would suit none other than a slender, rather tall young figure. It is essentially a youthful frock and designed for dancing and evening wear with numerous dainty details that make of it a veritable confection.

It is carried out in white chiffon with a quaint little bolero of turquoise faille. Note how prettily the overlapping end is caught through eyelets in the other side. There is a short-sleeved underblouse of white chiffon with saw-tooth edges bound flatly in white taffeta. The full skirt is garnished with two rows of double heading in the blue faille, while the tunic, short in front and long in back, shows the saw-tooth edges again bound in white taffeta.

Pink roses weight the ends of short ribbon streamers all around the waist and add the final irresistible touch.

HATS OF THE SUIT MATERIAL

Parisian Milliner Has Evolved Idea That American Women Will Be Sure to Take Up.

The well-dressed Parisienne is wearing now a small, smart hat made of straw and cloth in combination; the cloth being a bit of the same fabric used for stunning tailored suit. One of these hats, just brought over from Madeline—the originator of the idea—is of bronze milan straw with a crown in blocked effect made of tan covert cloth. The underbrim is of the straw and bands of straw are stitched over the cloth to form the upper side of the brim. Around the high crown are three bands of grosgrain ribbon, one cream white, the next tan color, the next brown. The ribbons pass through a pearl buckle at the front of the hat and are tied in a flat, smart bow at the back. These little tailored hats—elongated in shape and with very narrow brims that drop over the hair or turn up in turban style—are an important style note of the spring and are the rage in Paris just now.

For some time women have been ordering button boots with tops made of material to match the tailored suit; but hats of the same material are rather a new note. In Paris the little tailored suit hat is called Le Chapeau-Tailleur and one sees it made of covert, of broadcloth, of taffeta, of mohair and wool mixtures, of gabardine and of serge, with always the underbrim of straw and the simple band and buckle trimming originated by Madeline. With these small trig hats are worn veils of octagon or filadera mesh drawn neatly under a veil pin at the back and not floating free, as veils are worn with sailor shapes that have sufficient width of brim to support the veil in canopy effect.

Distinguished Architect Dies In Milton

Prof. William Robert Ware, for many years a teacher of architecture at M. I. T. and Columbia University and a graduate of the class of '52 Harvard, died at Milton Wednesday in his 83rd year. He lived at 209 Adams street, with his sister, Miss Harriet Ware, who survives him.

He was born in Cambridge in 1832. He studied at Hopkins Classical school, Milton Academy, Phillips Exeter and Harvard. He tutored in New York and the Lawrence Scientific school. In 1860 he opened an architect's office in Boston and during his 20 years of business planned well known buildings. In 1865 he was professor of architecture at Tech and in 1881 was made professor of architecture at Columbia University, N. York. He was on the Pan-American Exposition Architectural Commission and assisted in designing plans of the capital at Harrisburg, Pa. He was author of the work, "Modern Perspective," and contributed frequently to periodicals. Harvard conferred the degree of doctor of laws upon him.

Among the buildings which he planned are the First Baptist church of Boston, The Union passenger station at Worcester, Theological school buildings at Cambridge, Weld and Memorial halls and the Harvard Medical school.

He charged them with mutual assault.

FALSE ALARM AT MIDNIGHT

The alarm from Box 515 at 12.15 Wednesday night was a false alarm. This is the second false alarm that has come from this same district during the past few days and an effort should be made to apprehend the parties. The alarm called out the auto chemical and steamer from the central station, the hose wagon and ladder truck from Wollaston and the auto chemical from Atlantic in addition to the chief's car.

The Central Station Auto chemical responded on a still alarm at 7.30 this morning to a chimney fire in the Bass house on Washington street, situated next to the post office. The firemen found the chimney badly filled with soot.

OLD TIMERS THERE STRONG

Q. H. S. Seconds Have No Show at All

Some of the old time ball players of the city went over to Merrymount park Wednesday afternoon to play the second team of Quincy High school and won an easy victory. The score at the finish was 14 to 5. The young fellows played a hard game but couldn't find Sid Patterson, who pitched against them.

The old timers used up four pitchers trotted out by the second team and the second one used up was H. W. French coach of the team, who issued the challenge to John Anderson of the Murphy pharmacy, a former Orient fielder.

It sounded like a good joke when the challenge was made but John took it seriously and started enlisting players. If all had appeared that promised to do so a second game could have been played between two teams of old timers on the lower field while the other disposed of High school.

Nine men were on hand when the roll was called and the following order was assigned: pitcher, Sid Patterson; catcher, Dr. T. Veale; first, "Bode" Bradley; second, "Stretch" Estey; short stop, Frank L. Mansur, coach of Quincy High school; Bobbie Mitchell, third base; Manager Anderson, left field; Willie Curtin, centre; Ben Tinney, right field.

High school opened with Isaacson in the box. The older fellows got a few runs off him and then French went in for two innings and four more were added. Johnson, a south paw, was trotted out and a few more were made and Barron finished the game. Ten hits were registered by the older boys.

Conversation before the game was to the effect that High school would play the "oncers" off their feet, and it kind of looked that way for Patterson hasn't pitched for three years and was thought to be in no kind of form. He allowed only four hits. Eleven men faced him and fanned and in the eighth inning all three batsmen were retired in order. Young Mullen made the best hit of the day. Two high school runs were the result of errors.

A unique play came up in the seventh inning when a hard hit ball went by Patterson and over second base. Curtin came in to get it but made an error. Mansur had anticipated just such a happening and started outfield. He passed Curtin when the ball did and recovered it almost out to the fence. He relayed and held the man at second. Jerome Reinhalter made the feature catch of the game.

Patterson was given fine support, but the fielders kicked because they got so little action. Mullen's hit and a fly popped out to Ben Tinney were the only drives which went outfield in clean style and Tinney copped his. Patterson let Bradley pitch the last inning.

Bradley got three hits and two runs, Mansur two hits and two runs, Tinney two hits and one run, Mitchell two runs, Anderson a triple and three runs, Curtin a hit and two runs. "Pat" and Estey a run. Infield hits were no good the old boys being too fast, all getting three assists.

The second team boys to hit were Mecagni, Reinhalter twice, and Mullen a triple. The battery of the old timers worked the hardest during the day and Dr. Veale was pretty well tired out when the game was over. Anderson would like to have some other team send over a challenge. The score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
O. T.	3	0	0	1	2	0	3	2	3	14	10	3
H. S. 2d	0	0	1	1	0	1	0	0	2	5	4	5

Batteries, Patterson and Bradley Veale; Isaacson, French, Johnson and Barron, Mullen and Reinhalter. Umpire "Bull Moose" Brown.

VOTE TO HOLD NO CELEBRATION

Disappointment at Failure of Council to Appropriate

The executive committee of the July Fourth Celebration association met in the rooms of the Board of Trade Wednesday evening and after expressing its regrets at the action of the City Council in refusing to appropriate $600 for entertainment for the children on the National holiday the committee voted to omit any celebration this year. It was reported that the association had paid all of the bills against it and that there was a small balance in the treasury for future use.

The association desires to thank all those who have contributed to their call for funds in the past. During the informal talk the sentiment was expressed that after all it was perhaps better to omit a celebration this year that the citizens may notice and feel the loss, and thus next year be more anxious and ready to answer the call for contributions. In closing the meeting the executive committee expressed the sentiment that every one may enjoy the Fourth this year, and that it particularly regrets the disappointment that will come to the children who will miss more than the grown ups the usual celebration.

DISAGREES WITH GUSSIE GARDNER

Former Quincy Man Says U. S. Ready For War

The following article from the Boston Evening Record will be read with interest by the many Quincy friends of W. H. H. Rideout. Mr. Rideout was born in Quincy and resided at South Quincy for many years. He is a veteran of the Civil War and was one of the charter members of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R. For fifty years he has been an inspector of cigars in the U. S. Custom service at Boston.

William H. H. Rideout, 74, of Dorchester, veteran of the Civil War and for 50 years inspector of cigars in the U. S. Custom service at this port, disagrees with Congressman Gardner relative to the military preparedness of this country in event of war.

"I don't take any stock in this talk of Congressman Gardner about this country being unprepared for war," remarked the veteran. "If this country declared war against Germany or any other country there would be plenty of men to fight. I feel confident that every Civil War veteran would join the home guard," and Capt. Rideout threw back his shoulders and stood erect.

In the Appraisers Stores on State street, where Rideout has his office he is known as Captain. Everyone calls him that, but he told his interviewer that he received no commission. Although entitled to one, he said he was too busy fighting or performing other duties for the Union to look for titles.

Capt. Rideout is chock full of patriotism. He fought once in defense of his country and was badly wounded. Although he has passed three score and 14 years, he is still in good health and ready to shoulder a gun if his services are needed. He was one of first Massachusetts men to enlist at the outbreak of the Civil War, and very likely would be one of the first veterans to offer his services in time of trouble now.

Capt. Rideout is in favor of suffrage for women.

"When I think of the thousands of women who are being left widows because o fthe horrible European war," he remarked in a sympathetic tone, "it makes me feel sad. They all have my greatest sympathy. Yes, I think that the women should have something to say about things after what they have gone through during this awful war."

Returning to the preparedness of this country for war, the Captain said: "I think that in America we have the best soldiers to be found anywhere in the world. Why, 95 p. c., of the men of this country know how to handle a gun. Most of them have been able to shoot a gun from the time they were knee high. The men of this country like to shoot and hunt and that has made them good marksmen."

COL. DAVID J. PALMER

Col. David J. Palmer, now commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, who headed the first regiment to pass in parade before President Johnson in 1865 when the victorious Union troops marched up Pennsylvania avenue, is to lead another review of some of the same men next September during the national encampment of the G. A. R. in Washington.

TO BE LENIENT TO PRISONERS

British Sink German Submarine and Capture Crew

GREAT DENT IN GERMAN LINE

Continued Successes of French and British Forces In Western Area—Stanislau Once More In Hands of Teutonic Forces—Italians Defeated In Their First Serious Attack, According to Vienna Report—Stories of Decisive Defeat of Turks by Allies Not Confirmed

London, June 10.—Official announcement was made by Secretary of the Admiralty Balfour that a German submarine had been sunk and that six of her officers and twenty-one members of her crew had been captured.

Balfour announced also that German submarine prisoners hereafter shall be accorded treatment identical with all other German prisoners in England.

In announcing the revision of the policy regarding the treatment of German submarine prisoners, Balfour said:

"While this does not change British opinion as to the character of the acts in which these persons are concerned, it must be remembered that submarine attacks on defenceless vessels are not the only violation of the laws of humanity of which the Germans are guilty, and the government is, therefore, of the opinion that the submarine problem cannot now be isolated and that the general question of responsibility should be reserved until the end of the war."

Balfour added that the government's decision would be communicated to Germany through the American embassy.

Balfour's first official announcement since his recent appointment as secretary of the British admiralty is a retrenchment in the tit-for-tat policy adopted by Winston Churchill in the treatment of German prisoners.

Intense feeling was aroused in Germany over the decision of England to segregate the crews of German submarines when captured in mild retaliation for the merciless and inhuman attacks by the kaiser's submarines on British merchant ships, many of which have been sunk without warning.

No reason is given by Balfour for this sudden change in the treatment of the officers and men taken from German under-sea boats.

Germans Pushed Back

After a week's hard fighting the French have made themselves masters of Neuville St. Vaast, about five miles north of Arras, the last German being driven out of the place.

This victory accentuates the progress made by the French during the past few weeks between Arras and Bethune, which, taken in connection with the work of the British further north, around Neuve Chapelle and Ypres, has made considerable of a dent in the German line.

The German official statement admits the evacuation of Neuville, while the French war office modestly claims only the east side of the town.

Fighting has been severe here for a week, and as it has been house-to-house and hand-to-hand, the losses have been heavy on both sides.

Bloody fighting has also sent the French forward in the hotly-contested "labyrinth," near Arras, where the Germans had constructed one of the most elaborate defenses on the western front, and in the forest of Le Pretre, east of the famous St. Mihiel wedge, where more German trenches were captured along a 350-yard front.

Russians Lose Stanislau

In the Galician field the most important news is the fall of Stanislau, a few miles east of the Dniester river, and about seventy-five miles southeast of Lemberg.

Both German and Austrian reports agree that the place was taken by the advancing Teutons, although the occurrence is not mentioned in Petrograd. Berlin says that with the fall of the town 4500 Russian prisoners and thirteen machine guns were taken.

Further to the north, in the region about the great fortress of Kovno, on the Nieemn river, the Germans are making a new advance, and claim to have gained the fortified heights facing Kovno itself, after defeating the Russians in a stubborn battle. The Petrograd report admits that in this region the Germans have made "slight progress."

Vienna Reports Italian Defeat

No word has come from Rome concerning the operations around Trent and Trieste.

From Vienna, however, is received a brief official statement to the effect that the first serious Italian attack in force, at a bridge head at Garizia on the Isonzo river, was defeated by the Austrians. It is claimed that an entire division of the Italian army was routed here by the Austrian artillery fire, and in its retreat abandoned several field guns.

Vienna, in reporting the repulse, with heavy losses of isolated attacks by the Italians near Gradisca and Grado, says that the Italians are apparently preparing for a general attack along the Isonzo river.

An Austrian aeroplane attacked and destroyed an Italian dirigible airship, and another Austrian heavier-than-air machine dropped bombs on Venice, on a balloon shed at Murano, near Venice, and on an Italian torpedo boat destroyer.

The Dardanelles Campaign

There are reports that the allies have again taken the offensive on the Gallipoli peninsula and have decisively defeated the Turks, but this lacks confirmation.

The loss of another ship by the allies is announced in an official report from Constantinople. It is said a transport was struck by a shell and set on fire and that later it sank. The report does not state whether it was a British or a French transport or whether there was a loss of life.

The landing of new troops on Gallipoli peninsula by the allies is reported from Athens.

BRITISH CASUALTIES

Total 258,009 Since War Began, Exclusive of Naval Losses

Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons that the total of British casualties from the beginning of the war to May 31 was 258,009 men. The losses in the naval division are not included in this list.

Asquith's statement of losses was for the continental and Mediterranean forces of the empire. He promised to give the losses in the naval division later. Neither did the list include the forces of Great Britain engaged in the various smaller wars in Africa and the Near East.

SPANISH PRESS MUZZLED

Editors Must Not Discuss Military and Naval Measures

The Spanish government called a meeting of newspaper editors and requested them to maintain absolute silence regarding military and naval measures. Establishment of a censorship was offered as the alternative for failure to comply with this request.

An appeal had previously been made by the government to newspapers to refrain from discussion of the war, as it was feared controversies might arise which would interfere with the maintenance of neutrality.

FLEW OLD GLORY

British Steamer Captain Aroused Indignation of American Passengers

Boston, June 10.—Acting under orders from a British patrol boat, which instructed the commander to "fly a neutral flag or none at all," Captain McDonald of the Leyland liner Colonian, which arrived here last night from London, hoisted the Stars and Stripes in the submarine zone—this being the first time a foreign steamship has made use of the American flag since February, when President Wilson sent a note of protest to the British government.

When the facts became known a sensation was caused among steamship men, for it is believed this will be made the occasion for further protest on the part of the Washington authorities. McDonald, however, did not hesitate about telling ship news reporters that Old Glory had flown at the taffrail of his ship.

The Colonian had fifty American horsemen on board, who were returning practically as passengers.

The use of the Stars and Stripes nearly caused a revolt among them and several were so angry that they determined to haul the flag down at the earliest opportunity. Plans for decisive action were adopted, but finally it was decided that it would probably result in all hands being put in irons, so the matter was given up.

PREPARE FOR JULY FOURTH

Make Ready for Ward Two Celebration

Progress all along the line was reported at the meeting of general committee having in charge the July Fourth celebration in Ward Two. The committee has already collected over $200 toward the celebration and would like $200 or $300 more in order fully to carry out the program outlined. The committee feel that as this ward is the only one which will have any detailed celebration this year that people in other wards who will have an opportunity to participate in the celebration can readily contribute to the fund. The committees in charge of the several events reported progress and that every thing pointed to a most successful celebration. The committee in charge of the big bon-fire report that they are receiving large contributions of old boxes, barrels, etc. for the fire and that two large loads of boxes would be brought from Boston today.

Needful Knowledge

Quincy People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are many. Disordered kidneys often excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, ful of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The back may ache, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighted down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger. Delay often proves fatal.

Mrs. S. Nelson, 177 Washington St., Quincy, says: "One of my family had pains across the small of the back. Four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills were used and they made a great improvement. Doan's Kidney Pills deserve great credit for what they have done in that case."

The FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

The boys—they were in reality full grown cubs of eighteen or twenty—did as they were bid with much noise, chaffing Berrie with blunt humor.

Meeker read Sutler's letter, which Norcross had handed him, and, after deliberation, remarked: "All right, we'll do the best we can for you, Mr. Norcross, but we haven't any fancy accommodations."

"He don't expect any," replied Berrie. "What he needs is a little roughing it."

"There's plinty of that to be had," said one of the herders, who sat below the salt. "'Tis the soft life I'm nadin'."

One of the lads, Frank Meeker, a dark, intense youth of about twenty, was Berea's full cousin. The others were merely hired hands, but they all eyed the new comer with disfavor. The fact that Berrie had brought him and that she seemed interested in him added to the effect of the smart riding suit which he wore. "I'd like to roll him in the creek," muttered one of them to his neighbor.

This dislike Berrie perceived in some degree, and to Frank she privately said: "Now, you fellows have got to treat Mr. Norcross right. He's been very sick."

Frank maliciously grinned. "Oh, we'll treat him right. We won't do a thing to him!"

"Now, Frank," she warned, "if you try any of your tricks on him you'll hear from me."

"Why all this worry on your part?" he asked keenly. "How long since you found him?"

The girl herself did not understand the vital and almost painful interest which this young man had roused in her. He was both child and poet to her, and as she watched him trying to make friends with the men, her indignation rose against their clownish offishness.

"I don't feel right in leaving you here," she said at last, "but I must be ridin'." And while Meeker ordered her horse brought out she walked to the gate with Norcross at her side.

"I'm tremendously obliged to you," he said, and his voice was vibrant. "You have been most kind. How can I repay you?"

"Oh, that's all right," she replied, in true western fashion. "I wanted to see the folks up here, anyhow. This is no jaunt at all for me." And, looking at her powerful figure and feeling the traplike grip of her cinch hand, he knew she spoke the truth.

And so she rode away, leaving her ward to adjust himself to his new and strange surroundings as best he could, and with her going the whole valley darkened for the convalescent.

It was soon apparent to the eastern observer that the entire male population for thirty miles around not only knew McFarlane's girl, but that every unmarried man—and some who were both husbands and fathers—kept a deeply interested eye upon her daily motion, and certain shameless ones openly boasted among their fellows of their intention to win her favor, while the shy ones reveled in secret exultation over every chance meeting with her. TELLS BOARD OF TRADE WHAT QUINCY LACKS

Geo. F. Willett of Norwood Speaker at Interesting Meeting

Those who have frequently propounded the question "What is the matter with Quincy" would have received an answer had they attended the meeting of the Board of Trade Thursday evening and listened to the most interesting talk of George F. Willett of Norwood. Mr. Willett's topic was "The Transportation and Belt Line Around Boston" but previous to entering upon this subject heold his hearers what had happened in Norwood.

This was a town which boasted of having the highest tax rate of any town in the Commonwealth, a town that was practically dead. No public buildings, no parks or playgrounds, and no public spirit. What school buildings the town had were of the antiquated wooden type. Good highways such as other towns enjoyed had not been heard of. Then the people awoke and began to look into things It was found that the same system of government started years ago was still in vogue, that there was a lack of cooperation and a division of authority.

A number of citizens having the welfare of the town at heart got together and appointed a committee which had a conference with the assessors. The result was that a fair valuation was put on all property. A system of assessment of property was established that was a fair one. The result was that valuation was doubled and the tax rate fell to $8.50. This resulted from the new spirit of co-operation which has brought the citizens together.

"The town had falen into a rut," said the speaker. "Now it applies business principles to the town government and has business ability in the management of town affairs. The reason you can not apply business methods here in Quincy is because you do not go about it in the right way. Under the old way men were elected to office for the political pull they had not for ability. If any corporation like the United States Steel, for illusration, ran its business along the same lines as the town's business was run in Norwood it would soon be bankrupt.

"Now the men we elected as officers in Norwood serve without pay. This is one unit. The next unit is the administration of the affairs. Men who are qualified are hired to run the business end of the town. Unless they have ability they are not employed. Now there is in Norwood a system so that there is not a single problem of business that can not be audited. We are not doing business on any one's opinion but on facts. Business principles are applied to all town work and it has been made efficient."

The speaker then enlarged on the advantage of having different units in the government of a town or city and of having these units fit in with each other. "We have a system where the citizens come together and discuss matters of interest and for the welfare of the town. In fact, everybody has an interest in the government of the town.

"When the Norwood Board of Trade held its twentieth anniversary there was born a movement for bet-

ARRESTED AFTER AUTO ACCIDENT

Machine Plunges Over Wall Down Embankment

The large touring car owned and operated by E. W. Arnold of Braintree was in collision at the foot of Zion's hill in Hingham just before midnight with a machine operated by Lester D. Hudson of Scituate. The Hudson car was badly wrecked.

Arnold lost control of his machine and it went over a stone wall through a rail fence, down a seven foot embankment and along a field for a distance of 75 feet.

L. O. Crocker, a prominent business man of Braintree, Fred B. Lawler and another whose name could not be learned were in the machine and were thrown out. Crocker was taken to his home by Dr. Peterson of Hingham and may be internally injured. Arnold escaped injury and with Lawler was arrested by Chief of Police James. Arnold was not allowed to be bailed, being charged with operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor. Lawler was bailed.

In the Hudson car was Capt. Frederick C. Sarnzen of the U. S. Life Saving Station at North Scituate. Their car was badly wrecked but they were uninjured.

MAYOR ORDERS JOY RIDING IN CITY AUTOMOBILES TO STOP

Sunday Pleasure Trips at Expense of Municipality Must Be Discontinued

Mayor Campbell made a ten strike this morning when he deliverd a body blow to the practice in vogue in some departments of the city of using city automobiles for private use and in the taking of Sunday trips through the country, in other words the taking of joy rides. No longer will it be possible for city officials, whose departments have been furnished with automobiles to ride about the country at the expense of the city and if one does so it will be known to the world for on the side of each city car will be plainly painted, so that he who runs can read, the name of the department to which the car is attached.

Departments of the city having automobiles were made to sit up and take notice this morning when they were served with a written notice signed by the Mayor to the effect that automobiles purchased by the city were purchased to facilitate the business of city and were not to be used for private purposes nor are they to be in operation on Sundays or holidays except when the officials are called upon for work in connection with city business.

There has been more or less talk for several years about the use of city automobiles for private use by the officials but the matter has never been brought to a head before. What brought it to a head this morning may have been the report that a city automobile containing a merry party was seen in a city some miles north of Boston one recent Sunday morning in the early hours of the day, or it may have been some of the other numerous reports that have been in circulation, and which have caused considerable unfavorable comment.

Early in the year when the council took up the matter of the annual budget the finance committee called the attention of the Mayor to the very large sums which the city was paying out for up-keep of city automobiles and a little later on Councilman Craig introduced an order for the finance committee to consider the feasibility of the city establishing a municipal garage.

The letter of the mayor follows:

To the Departments Using Muncipal Automobiles:

I desire to call your attention to the fact that the automobiles purchased by the city for the use of its various departments are for the purpose of facilitating the business of that particular department. They are not to be used for private purposes nor are they to be in operation on Sundays or holidays except when officials are called upon for work in connection with city business.

A contract has been given for the painting of the name of the City of Quincy and the department to which the automobile belongs on each machine belonging to the city, and this work will be done during the next few days.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Chester I. Campbell
Mayor

Because of his physical condition sentence was suspended until June 16, 1916.

Inspector Goodhue when asked about the case said Zeni was wanted by the police of other cities in connection with other Black Hand letters. Zeni was turned over to Probation Officer Fahy.

THE JITNEY BUS

A jitney bus line is contemplated for Squantum is the report. Probably this means that a jitney bus line is threatened unless the street railway comes to terms regardless of the state of its finances.

Quincy has not the best street car service in the world nor has it the worst. On the whole, we think it averages up pretty well.

There is a tendency to take a crack at a public service corporation just because it is such. This tendency doubtless had a legitimate source: there have been times when some public service corporations have used deplorable methods and have secured extortionate profits. But fair play demands that companies which are serving the public shall not be abused merely because they are large If they were not of good size they could not serve.

Herein is expressed our attitude toward the jitney bus. If the jitney bus system is to be developed to a point where it gives better service than a street railway well and good. But if the system merely means a jitney bus here and there, competing at a few points with the street railway system and at others, where inducements do not seem great, leaving the field for the street railway to care for then we feel that the jitney bus is not serving the community.

Street car companies sometimes operate some of their lines at a small profit at no profit at all, or at a loss. They make up for the loss on other parts of the system. It it not fair, therefore, that a jitney bus shall operate in competition with a profitable line of the railway (we have reference to no particular line and particular railroad and leave its business opponents to care for those which it can not profitably serve.

Anyone, if he can get the necessary license and the automobile, can operate a jitney bus and make money. This should not be possible. The street car companies have burdens and the jitney bus companies should have burdens proportionately as heavy so that the battle can be fought out on even terms.

THE AMERICAN NOTE

The character and contents of the latest American note to Germany is all that could be desired. Although temperate in tone it covers the ground. Although not bellicose it is firm. It sets forth the position of the United States in a masterly manner, being phrased in such terms that although it leaves no doubt of our attitude at the same time it should not offend Germany.

To some undoubtedly it will seem too mild, but this is probably because the resignation of Mr. Bryan led many of us to expect a regular fire eating document, breathing defiance and hurling ultimatums. It is difficult to see how our late lamented secretary of state could affix his awe inspiring name to the notes of February 2 and May 13 and yet balk at the note of June 9, published today.

To one portion of the note, which seems to us eminently wise, we wish to call attention. On several occasions in this column we have deplored the warlike temper of some representatives of press and pulpit who saw red whenever they thought or wrote of Germany. We urged that the note should set forth again the main points of the American contention, should be firm but not rabid, and above all should give Germany a chance gracefully to withdraw from her position on the Lusitania disaster.

We pointed out that Germany might be sincere in her belief that the Lusitania was an armed vessel of war, equipped with guns, and therefore liable to destruction without warning. We pointed out that even though the United States was sure of the truth of its own conception of facts it was only fair to permit Germany to state her side of the case. We believed it was eminently wise for the United States to assume that Germany was honestly mistaken rather than that she were bluffing, because it would give the Imperial Gov. an opportunity gracefully to back down, an opportunity to say to the United States: "We have been mistaken in our conception of the facts in the Lusitania case. Your understanding of them is the correct one and we shall therefore make reparation so far as it is humanly possible."

President Wilson takes just such an attitude and affords Germany just such a loophole. The American note says: "It (the U. S. Government) is able, therefore, to assure the Imperial German Government that it has been misinformed. If the Imperial German Government should deem itself in possession of convincing evidence that the officials of the Government of the United States did not perform these duties (see that the Lusitania was not an armed vessel when it left the U. S. port) with thoroughness, the Government of the United States sincerely hopes that it will submit that evidence for consideration."

June 15 is the date of that hearing on the application for liquor licenses in Neponset, just over the Quincy line. This city will be officially represented but there is work for you, too, Mr. Citizen, if you don't want a saloon at your door. Deluge with letters the Board of Licensing Commissioners of the City of Boston vigorously expressing your opposition to the granting of the license. Attend the hearing if you can: the more the better.

Considering the new regulations about baggage it would seem desirable for the average traveller to allow more than 45 seconds for making the declaration of value, writing out the form for same, checking trunk, buying ticket, and boarding the train.

The merchants who have agreed to close their stores on Wednesday afternoons begining June 23 are to be commended. We trust that their kind regard for the happiness of their clerks will bring renewed prosperity.

A man might be able to stand those asphyxiating gases in the trenches, but can he supvive the dust he has to breathe on a popular automobile road Sunday afternoons?

It is astonishing how a circus band consisting of a cornet, a piccolo, and a snare drum can thrill the heart of the small boy, to its innermost depths

Only one grape juice advocate left. May he soon follow his leader. Not that we object to grape juice as a drink but we do object to itas a policy.

Eulalio Gutierrez reminds the world that he was once elected president of Mexico by offering to resign the job.

And now it is proposed to try to secure the parole of George W. Coleman, the wrecker of the Cambridge Bank. Let's see, the bank was wrecked to the extent of something like $125,000. Coleman was sentenced in May 1910. to a 15 years' imprisonment and nobody save possibly he himself, thought the sentence too long. Surely, those who lost their money did not think so. He has served one-third of the time. If he is paroled now his net gain is about $25,000 a year. Isn't that paying a high price for rascality? Why not let some of these first-class criminals serve out their sentences.

LAMB CHOPS ARE IN LUXURY CLASS

WEEKLY MARKET REVIEW

Lovers of fresh mackerel, and the number is legion, will be glad to learn that fresh mackerel are here in abundance, and in keeping with the supply the prices are very low. Large ones weighing from 3 1-2 to four pounds are selling for 20 cents or about five cents a pound, while the smaller and medium fish are cheaper.

Salmon is also plentiful this week, and reasonable and large receipts of halibut have brought the price of this variety down. Shad is not very plentiful as the season is about over. Bluefish is scarce and higher.

Lobsters have advanced about two cents a pound from last week. This is the direct result of the closing of the season in Nova Scotia. There was a report that the fishing season around Yarmouth, N. S., had been extended but this report is denied. The only foundation for the report is the fact that the fishermen have been given the right to ship through this month lobsters which were caught prior to June 1.

The months in which the letter R appears have long gone by and according to an old maxim oysters are not over and above good in months in which the letter R is not used. For all that the oyster continues to occupy a place in the market although the demand is very light and the wholesale price is $1.25 a gallon.

Although the demand for meats as usual has fallen off with the advent of summer weather prices continue to be high. In fact some kinds are so high that they are prohibitive unless one has a pocketbook filled with long greens. For instance the man with an appetite for veal will have to part with fifty cents in order to possess a pound while the man with the hankering for lamb chops must pay 60 cents a pound, and as it only takes about three good sized chops to a pound it can readily be seen that they are dear eating. One who insists on having lamb chops for his breakfast or dinner, if he is wise, will buy a loin of lamb and cut off a few chops. Bought in this way he can save more than fifty per cent over what he must pay if the market man cuts and trims them.

Meats being high and vegetables being low this is a very good time to join the ranks of the vegetarians. The markets abound with fresh vegetables of all kinds and they are fully as cheap as they probably will be. Many of the vegetables in the market today are native grown and the variety is so large that it will not be hard to please the man with the most exacting taste. Strawberries are very plentiful and large handsome native berries can be bought in the local markets for 15 and 16 cents a basket.

Asparagus has nearly gone by, although there is still plenty in the market but most people have had their fill this season and the demand has fallen off. Then there is lettuce, beans, peas, radishes, round and rosy for 5 cents a bunch, and in fact almost everything in the vegetable line. Most of the tomatoes in the market, however, while the vegetableis somewhat more plentiful, do not look as inviting and they lack the real tomato taste. About all of the tomatoes we now have are those that are raised in the South and packed before they are fully ripened. Peas at 60 cents and upwards a peck are not in great demand. In fact at the present time they are classed among the luxuries. June seventeenth should see many of the local amateur farmers harvesting their first crop of peas although it will be well along into July before the home gardens produce many peas.

Home gardens which have been suffering from lack of rain were very much refreshed by the showers early in the week and are now doing well. Speaking of home gardens it might be mentioned that what is bothering the little home gardens this year more than ever before is the cut worms. There is an unusual crop of these worms this year, and the only way to get rid of them is to poke about the dirt, pick them out and then let loose the machine gun.

The executive committee of the Women's Relief Corps will meet at the home of Mrs. Laura E. Holt, 32 Cottage street, Monday evening.

REJECTION OF AMERICAN VIEW

Berlin Disagrees With Washington In the Frye Case

MUST GO BEFORE PRIZE COURT

If Owners Lose There, Germany Is Prepared to Pay Damages—Claim That Prussian-American Treaty Does Not Cover Case Which Was of Extreme Military Necessity

Washington, June 11.—Germany rejects the American contentions in the case of the ship William P. Frye and insists that the matter go before a German prize court, Berlin, however, agreeing to pay damages if the court refuses to award them.

Germany says that the stopping of supplies to an enemy belligerent may be effected by the destruction of the contraband and the destruction of the ship carrying the contraband to the violation of treaty obligations. The reply contends that a prize court is necessary to fix the amount of compensation and that there is no occasion for direct diplomatic negotiations on the case unless the prize court should fail to award compensation.

The obligation of a belligerent to pay compensation remains, regardless of the action of the prize court, the German note contends, and should the prize court fail to award compensation Germany would undertake to arrange equitable indemnity. As a precaution and a preliminary procedure Germany suggests that the American claimants enter their claims on record.

Two points made by the United States are rejected by Germany. One was the statement of the American government in its note of April 28 that prize court proceedings meant unnecessary delay, all matters concerned being susceptible of prompt settlement, through diplomatic channels, and the other was that the destruction of the Frye was "unquestionably a violation of the obligations imposed upon the imperial government under existing treaty stipulations between the United States and Prussia."

Under the Prussian-American treaty of 1828, the binding force of which was admitted by Germany, in its note of April 5, the right of citizens of either country to ship arms and ammunition, as well as all other kinds of contraband, in their own vessels, was granted in time of war, but each party had the right to detain such contraband and make payment for it if confiscated.

The last note from Germany enlarges upon the treaty of 1828 by claiming that while the treaty did not specifically permit the destruction of a ship, nevertheless, if its contraband could not be stopped in any other way, it could "in the extreme case be effected by the destruction of the contraband and of the ship carrying it."

The effect of Germany's answer, if its assertions are accepted by the United States, would be to throw into the prize courts for decision all cases of whether destruction of an American vessel constituted an extreme case of military necessary.

International law, outside of treaty stipulations, has contained many a moot case on that point. While the declaration of London establishes finally that in case of military necessity a ship, whose cargo was more than half contraband, could be destroyed after passengers and crew were removed to a place of safety, the declaration was not ratified by the United States, express notice having been given again by the American government to Germany, in the note of April 28, that the declaration was not regarded as in force.

Mrs. Rowe Tells of Trip Across Continent

Mrs. William E. Rowe, of Winthrop avenue, Wollaston, who has just returned from a trip across the continent has many interesting things to relate of the Panama-Pacific Exposition and the development of Parent-Teachers organization in the west.

Especially noteworthy did she consider the Massachusetts education exhibit at the fair, in charge of Mr. Whitcomb, former principal of the Brockton High school. Quincy schools play a prominent part in this.

On the wall is a picture of the Wollaston school as one of the model school houses of the country. The vocational schools of the city also come in for a prominent place on the charts and in the talk Mr. Whitcomb delivers.

While in San Diego Mrs. Rowe had the pleasure of renewing acquaintance with Herbert J. Stewart, former organist of Trinity church, Boston, under whom Mrs. Rowe and Mrs Herbert Y. Follett, of Wollaston both sang Mr. Stewart is presiding over the large outdoor organ at San Diego.

Mrs. Rowe made one of a party of national officers who attended the national conference of the Mothers Congress and Parent-Teachers associations, held in Portland, Oregon from May 12—15.

In company with Mrs. Milton P. Higgins, Massachusetts president and Mrs Higgins' secretary, Mrs Rowe left Boston on April 28, joining the national party at Chicago

Conferences were held in all the principal cities passed through including Chicago, Ill,. St. Paul, Minn., Bismark, N. D., Butte, Montana, Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Oregon.

The states of North Dakota, Montana and Washington were organized and the party met a royal reception everywhere they went. In each state they were greeted by the governor, mayors and superintendents of schools.

At the Exposition, Mothers Congress day was observed on May 20, and a luncheon tendered them in the Californian building.

Santa Barbara, Los Angeles, San Diego, Salt Lake City, Colorado Springs, Denver, St. Louis, Chicago and Buffalo were points visited on the return trip.

Mrs. Rowe brought home a wealth of souvenirs and gifts presented to her at various points along the line.

MUST MAKE OWN DRESSES

Simplicity at Grammar School Graduation

A scheme of simplicity will be in order at the grammar school graduations this year which will meet with general approval, for the order has gone forh that the wearing of expensive graduation gowns by the girls of the graduating classes must stop and that this year for the first time the girl graduates must wear at the exercises gowns that are not only the model of simplicity but made by the girl herself.

In many places the tendency of fond parents has been trying to outdo or equal others in the elaborateness of the graduation gowns worn by their daughters. The result has been that many families, which can ill afford to do so, have stinted themselves on actual household necessities in order that their daughter may be gowned as elaborately as others in her class.

This has been possible in some cases but there have been cases where it was absolutely impossible for parents to dress their daughters as they would like to, with the result that half the charm of seeing their daughter graduate has been lost and to the child what would otherwise have been a very happy event in her life has been turned into an occasion of sorrow.

Some months ago the School Department voted that this year the girls in the graduating class of the grammar schools should make their own graduation dresses. They have three or four styles to select from which are prepared by the teacher in sewing. Although there is no hard and fast rule that the gowns of members of the graduating class in each school shall be alike this has been generally followed.

In the Willard school the girls had their graduation gowns completed some weeks ago and they were made a feature of one of the social functions held by the school.

As for the boys no definite rule has been laid down although the general plan of the boys has been to wear dark blue serge suits of an inexpensive nature and this they will do this year.

CUBS WIN 11—4.

The Cubs defeated the Commons to the tune of 11 to 4 Thursday evening in the West Quincy Twilight league. The game was very one sided and was uninteresting from start to finish. The Cubs were helped out by the poor fielding of Bertrand at third base and by Quinn in centerfield who muffed an easy fly which let in three runs. The battery for the winners were Desmond and Drohan and for the losers DeCoste, Corcoran and Dunn.

COURT IMPOSES FINE OF $25

Henry Cataldo, 28 years, pleaded not guilty to a charge of assault and battery on Edward Carnow, before Judge Cook this morning and said he threw the rock which struck the complainant on the head only in self defense.

Cataldo is a foreman for the contracting firm of W. F. Loud and Sons, builders of the foundation for the new Faxon block on Hancock street. Carnow has also been employed on the job for another contractor.

On Friday afternoon an argument is said to have developed when Cataldo took a plank from a run built for wheelbarrows against the protests of Carnow who had it in charge and brought it to a close by throwing the rock, striking Carnow on the back of the head.

Cataldo was arrested by Patrolman Riley and when arraigned before Judge Avery this morning pleaded not guilty. Acting Chief McKay objected to the parties concerned acknowledging satisfaction. A half hour's continaunce was ordered and witnesses were summoned. Judge Cook then heard the case.

In imposing a fine of $25 Judge Cook said he believed the defendant made a weak point when he said the assaulted man ran away when he saw a stone was to be thrown at him because men would generally keep their eyes open and try to avoid being hit. Cataldo appealed and $50 deposited as bail after his arrest was allowed to stand.

INVESTIGATION BEGINS TODAY

The first meeting of the committee appointed by the city council to investigate tre needs and condition of the fire department will be held tonigth. The meeting will be held at the central fire station and it is understood that several firemen have been ordered to be present and some citizens also invited to be present. Just who they are however the committee has not given out. The meeting will be held in the office of the Chief Engineer and will be private. The testimony of those called to testify will be taken by a stenographer so that the committe may have full notes from which to make report.

Under the order authorizing the investigation the committee must report at the meeting of the council June 21, although there is a provision in the order that it may be given further time if necessary.

Ifthe committee is to make a thorough investigation it is hard too see how it will be possible to accomplish much in the short time available

The general impression seems to be that something will drop before the investigation is over and that some one will receive a severe jolt.. and that one will not be a member of the fire department. However let the investigating be thorough and for last and all set the many rumors and stories at rest.

QUINCY NURSES GET PASSPORTS

Passports will today be issued to Dr Nathaniel S. Hunting and Dr. Daniel B. Reardon of this city so they can be members of the group of 30 surgeons sent to England by Harvard college for service at a base hospital. The passports will be issued at the Harvard club by a deputy clerk of the United States district court.

The nurses who will accompany the physicians received their passports Thursday and in the group were Miss Margaret Carey, Miss Christine B. Holmes and Miss Susan Marshall of Quincy.

The party sails from New York on June 22 on the steamship Noordam of the Holland-American line and will be in charge of Dr. Edward H. Nichols the noted surgeon, and will be known as the Harvard unit.

At the weekly whist Thursday afternoon of the George L. Gill Associates in I. O. O. F hall the favors, went to Mrs. Isabelle Davidson, Miss M. Lizzie Furnald and Mrs. Annie T. Morrison and the consolation to Mrs. Kate Blaisdell.

DESIGNS IN NECKWEAR

RADICAL CHANGE FROM THOSE OF LAST YEAR.

Fine, Sheer Voile Is a New Material Which May Be Made Up at Home Into the Daintiest of Dress Accessories.

Neckwear designs this season differ radically from those of last year because of the change from low to high neck. This naturally means either a considerable expenditure for new neckwear or considerable sewing in spare time at home. Homemade neckwear can be quite as dainty as that seen in the shops, and can be produced at much less cost.

Very fine, sheer voile is a new material used for neckwear. It is intended to supersede organdie, and I believe it will quickly find favor—if for no reason other than that it is very easily laundered. Since neckwear, to be attractive, must be ever fresh, anything which will tend to lessen the laundry work is sure to be appreciated.

Net is a close second to voile. This, too, is not difficult to keep clean, and it wears like iron.

Net is lightly embroidered this year. For example, a little vine in the front of the chemisette divides and runs on either side of the collar. This is worked with medium fine embroidery cotton in solid satin and outline stitch. The work is easy to do if the design be backed with tissue paper. The paper can be pulled away when the embroidery is finished.

The fluffy side frill is in vogue again. A jabot thus adorned will do much to redeem a somber-looking dress or an out-of-date waist. There should be a number of these fluffy frills lying about at home, as it was so popular a model not long ago. Those who must make them will need, for one jabot, half a yard of pretty insertion and from three-quarters to one yard of edging for the frill—according to the width of the frill.

English eyelet embroidery is favored above all else for the strip, though some frills of fine voile are edged with a narrow filet lace and attached to a strip of the lace—but wider. Some models show the frill on both sides of the strip. In this case the jabot ends just below the bust and the frill is carried all around.

Tiny pearl buttons are used for trimming neckwear, in place of the little linen buttons of last year. They have no visible means of attachment, but are known as trimming buttons. The ordinary pearl buttons with holes for sewing are not the proper thing.

These are small details, but they mark the up-to-date neckwear; and one might as well get the correct thing when purchasing.

All neckwear apparently closes in front. The net chemisettes, however, frequently close in the back, but show a decoration which disguises this fact. For example, there may be embroidery and buttons or frills of lace down the front and invisible snappers in the back.

All tight-fitting high collars are well boned and are finished at the top with a little frill.—Washington Star.

DICTATES OF FASHION

Charming poke bonnets are fashioned of crepe or chiffon.

Evening gowns generally have no sleeves, or very tiny ones.

Jackets to correspond nicely with the full skirts should be short.

Small flat bows of braid-like ribbon are seen on smart little hats.

Bell sleeves and bishop sleeves are style innovations for waist fashions as well as for gowns.

Short skirts for day dresses and trained gowns for evening wear are the last style specifications received.

Old-fashioned checked silks in snuff colored browns, greens, blues and yellows and blacks are novelties in dull toned effects.

Even though the high waist line will be fashionable, the normal line will be the controlling position for belt lines this season.

The high collared waist with a shirred yoke and collar or organdie and bodice of mull or lawn is another vogue of much interest.

A Girl's Wardrobe.

"A girl can look very well at all times if she has five well-thought-out 'changes,'" holds Elsie Ferguson, in an article on dress, in the Green Book Magazine. "She will need a street suit, two afternoon gowns and two evening gowns. In general I should recommend a dark-blue street suit, one afternoon gown of wool crepe and another gown of wool crepe and another of silk, and one black evening gown and one light-colored."

VALUE OF CHILDREN'S LIVES

New Jersey Jury Finds Boy Is Worth Twice as Much as Girl

Jersey City, June 11.—In awarding $3000 to Edward G. Benson of North Arlington, N. J., in his suit against Borden's Condensed Milk company, a jury in the Hudson county court decided that the value of a boy is just twice as great as the value of a girl.

Benson sued the milk company for $100,000 damages for the deaths of his 3 months old twins, a boy and a girl. He said there were ptomaines in milk he bought from the company.

The jury agreed the boy's life was worth $2000 and the girl's $1000. The Borden company will appeal.

SUBMARINE L-1 OF NEW DESIGN

Fore River Production Has Fine Record

When the submarine boat L-1, built at the Fore River shipyard for the United States government, is delivered at the Charlestown navy yard, within a few days she will be one of the newest type of underwater fighters in Uncle Sam's navy. The craft has what is called the ship-shaped bow and its four torpedo tubes are concealed by means of moving plates, two on each side. The changes are radical compared to others in the service.

The ship has been given every possible kind of a trial. The first was directed by the builders and several weeks later the official trial board of the navy went aboard. She was found not only to be as near perfect as good workmanship could make her but that she also justified in every sense what changes and improvements were made in her design.

The boat is one of the Holland diving type and is one of a group of four which were authorized by Congress in 1913. The government requires that these boats shall be submerged to a depth of 200 feet and that they shall be capable of saying under water at rest for 48 hours and shall make 15 nautical miles an hour on the surface and seven nautical miles when submerged.

Her deep dive was made on April 2 when she went down 200 feet, according to the instruments on board which register her distance under water. The construction of the hull was then thoroughly tested and examination did not disclose that a single drop of water had worked its way in through the plates.

Second in command of the ship will be Henry L. Abbott, grandson of the late Charles Francis Adams. Mr. Abbott has the rank of ensign. The L-1 will make the Charlestown Navy yard its home port.

SUFFS DESCEND ON WOLLASTON

In the party, among others, were Mrs. Olive Hasbrook, of Washington, D. C., one of the national speakers, Mrs. Mary Hutchinson Page, president of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage association and Mrs. Gertrude Newell, chairman of the Norfolk County division.

The group was met by a delegation from the local society, headed by Mrs. Claire H. Gurney and Miss Helen E. Comins. The open air meeting attracted an audience of 300 who applauded the sentiments expressed.

A humorous incident occurred while the automobile party was waiting for the hour to arrive. A young woman mistaking the auto for the jitney bus, stepped up and asked the driver how long, before he would leave for Quincy.

The principal speaker was Mrs. Hasbrook, who traced the growth of suffrage from early times and advanced some logical reasons why suffrage should be granted.

She was followed by Mrs. Newell, who offered to answer any questions and also started the sale of campaign buttons.

SPORTING COMMENT

The summer outing season is near at hand and one of the first of the local organizations to take up the question of such a day is Granite conclave of Heptasophs. At its meeting in Protection hall Thursday evening the preliminary steps were taken. It is probable that the South Boston archon will join in the outing. A close friendship has grown between these conclaves the result of recent bowling and card tournaments.

The only semi-pro game in the city Saturday will be played at Merrymount park between the Makarias and the South Boston A. C. Andrews and Troupe will do the battery work for Makaria. Linehan and Murphy will do the honors for the visiting team. Both teams are strong and fast and the game should be one of the best of the season.

Great things are expected of the Makaria battery. Last Saturday Andrews performed well against Roslindale, being a big factor in the victory. Troupe, after an absence of two seasons, has returned to the game and has received such a cordial reception it seems like old home week to him.

The Fore River—General Electric Manufacturers league game will not be played Saturday as scheduled. The game was to have been played in Lynn, but trouble developed over securing a field, the regular one being engaged for a special game. An attempt to switch the contest to Quincy did not materialize.

When the Harvard team plays Saturday it will be placed upon its own resources. Percy Haughton will not be on the bench to advise them in the pinches and all of the leadership will be that of Captain Hardwick. "Tack" Hardwick is near the top of the lost in batting and in the game against the Calumets Wednesday he drove out two home runs.

LARRY PLACERS WIN

The Larry Place team defeated the West streets in the Sheep Rock Twilight League in a very exciting game Thursday evening. The West streets had the lead four to nothing up to the fifth inning when the Larrys scored four runs on a long hit by Clark. In the 6th inning they scored another run on an error by Marini at third. The battery for the winning team were Clark, Koegler and Satori and for the losers Bailer and Marini.

About seventy-five Quincy members of Vasa Orden, Circle Daughters Viking attended the Vasa Day celebration held at the Crescent Gardens, Revere Beach, Thursday afternoon and evening.

TEETH AND HEALTH

One Exerts Great Influence Upon the Other.

According to the United States Public Health Service there will be a falling off in the sale of store teeth in the future, and plates and toothless gums will be seen less frequently than formerly. This is due to the epoch making discovery of the cause and method of treating what is known to the scientist as pyorrhea dentalis and alveolaris and to the laymen as Rigg's disease.

This is a suppuration around the roots of the teeth and causes an inflamation which produces loosening and loss of the teeth. At one time or another practically everybody has Rigg's disease. It is caused by a minute single celled animal called the endamoeba buccalis. This malevolent parasite does its work in combination with the pus-producing bacteria of germs. The skillful teamwork between these two destroys the delicate membrane which surrounds the roots of the teeth and causes them to fall out.

The necessity of good teeth in order to have good health has been recognized a long time, but the scientists of our country have only recently worked out the relationship between the decay of teeth and Rigg's disease on the one hand, and rheumatism, serious heart disease and high blood pressure on the other. So firmly have these facts been proven that the modern up-to-date physician begins the treatment of such diseases by inquiry into the condition of the teeth and their sockets. If these are found to be diseased, the condition is cured before the treatment goes further. The discovery of the cause of Rigg's disease is, therefore, of the very greatest importance.

Just as soon as the cause of Rigg's disease was found out, the search for a cure began in earnest It had been previously discovered that the use of ipecac would cure the diseases which are caused by infection of the intestine with endamoebae. From this it was deduced that a similar treatment would cause the destruction of the endamoebae in the mouth. This was found to be the case, and emetin, the form of the drug used, is now administered by physicians for the cure and prevention of the disease. It sometimes takes a considerable time to get rid of all of the malignant germs in this way but the results which have been obtained have been remarkably good. The treatment is both local and general.

In the matter of preventing mouth disease, it is important that the mouth be cleaned several times a day, and that a dentist be visited frequently to remove tartar and the yellowish matter which accumulates along the inner edges of the teeth and between the teeth. This is particularly important in the case of children, because it has been found that many a child is apparently dull who is in reality suffering from a chronic poisoning produced by a mouth full of decaying teeth.

The number of sufferers from Rigg's disease in the United States is very large and the United States Public Health Service is daily receiving inquiries as to the method of curing and preventing the disease.

MAKES ANNUAL VISIT.

Doe Roams About City And Escapes Capture.

People passing down Newport avenue during the past few days have seen a doe gamboling on the estate of Brooks Adams. The doe was first seen several days ago by Rupert F. Claflin, who thought that it might have escaped from the Zoo at Franklin Park. He reported to the authorities there that he had seen the doe, and received an answer that none was missing. Last night the doe was seen in the woods in the rear of the residence of Thomas Swithin.

The doe had evidently become lost and its bleating caused several to make an attempt to capture it. Thomas Ferguson and John Silver went out and attempted to work the lasso but were unable to do so and the animal made its escape. This noon Mrs. H. H. Hill of South Central avenue saw the visitor. This time it was again on the Adams estate off Newport avenue. Nearly every spring about this season a doe is seen in this vicinity and the general impression is that it comes from the Blue Hills Reservation.

TELLS BOARD OF TRADE

ter transportation facilities. By a peculiar method of the street railway company in Norwood a car left the railroad station one minute before the train arrived. The result was that people arriving by train had to wait half an hour. We found that in going from Norwood to Boston much time was consumed, that there was no reason why the street cars could not run to Dedham and then use in common the railroad tracks for Boston. Nearly an hour could be saved by this method and with the electrification of the railroad, people can travel with comfort. From all of these matters came the idea of the terminal zone which should regulate traffic in the Greater Boston district. A meeting of delegates of all the Boards of Trades in the Greater Boston district was called and the question discussed."

The speaker then went on at length to outline what the Terminal Zone association hoped to accomplish. He said that he did not care who owned the different lines of railroads or who operated them: what was wanted was a system by which quick and direct communication could be had with Boston and do away with long waits at transfer points. Now in shipping goods from the south of Boston to places north of Boston it was necessary to ship to one terminal, then transfer to another terminal and so on.

If the steam railroad lines were electrified it would be possible for the street car tracks and steam railroad racks to be used in common, he pointed out. Today if any thing is proposed in the legislature the public service corporations go there with the best talent that can be obtained and the result is things happen just about as the public service corporations want them. What we want is a terminal government which shall have charge of the operation of all the lines both steam and electric running out of Boston..

Today, according to speaker, a very large portion of the goods manufactured in New England are left in the hands of the producers so that they can be prepared to deliver goods to customers at immediate notice. If we had an adequate transportation system this would not be necessary If New England does not get this system it must give up its share of the markets of the world.

In Boston we have a hundred millions of dollars in terminals and the result is that the cost of rentals, leases, and up-keep of these terminals is so great that the railroads have to charge higher rates for freight and passengers to make up these expenses. wing to the danger of politics getting into the management the speaker said he did not believe that it should be managed by the state if we can find anyone else to do the job. The common use of docks, terminals and railroads would result in a benefit to all. What the Terminal Zone association wanted was to handle all of the transportation facilities for the benefit of the people.

At the conclusion of the speaker's talk he was given a rising vote of thanks.

George Sullivan addressed the Board briefly on the question of a track or field athletic meet. He told the Board that such a meet would cost from $75 to $80. There was no discussion on the matter and it was referred to the entertainment committee.

The railroad service committee sent a report in regard to train service. The report said that in relation to the complaint of no inward train from Quincy between 10.04 and 11.24 the railroad had promised to put on a train which would leave Quincy about 10.39. This report was accepted as progressive.

W.H. Teasdale brought up the matter of better trains service at West Quincy and the need of an outward train leaving Boston between 4.37 and 5.32. It was voted that the committee take this matter up with the railroad and if the train could not be given to carry the question to the Public Service Commission.

Mr. Wright of the telephone service committee reported in regard to the investigation of the question of unused toll calls. That if a rebate was made for these, the rates for telephone service would have to be increased. Only a small percent of toll subscribers failed to use all their calls. The committee also reported that the Public Service Commision had approved of the rates of the company now in use and recommended no further action. Voted.

On the question of charging six cents for Sunday newspapers the committee reported that it had been learned from the Boston newspapers that the railroad had raised the rates for transportation of papers and for that reason the local dealers had raised the price to 6 cents.

Some of the speakers pointed out that while this might be true it was a fact that in Brockton they could be bought for five cents and also in Providence, R. I., and there was no reason why they should not be in Quincy. The report was accepted as progressive and the committee further instructed to look into the matter of prices charged in Brockton. The secretary was also instructed to obtain from other places south of Boston the rates charged for Sunday papers.

Oscar S. Sandberg for the committee on outing, reported a plan for an outing which should include the taking of a steamer from Houghs Neck for a sail and fishing trip in the harbor, the landing at some point for supper and the return home in the evening. The cost would be about $2 each. It was then voted to hold an outing the last Wednesday in July and all arrangements were left in the hands of the entertainment committee. It was also voted that the Board hold its annual field day to visit industries later in the season.

Secretary Hall moved that the street railway be requested to make School street its main transfer point instead of City square and under the rules the question was immediately referred to the committee on street car service.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

This action of stabling the horses, a perfectly innocent and natural one for her, led one of the hands, a coarse minded sneak, to watch them from a corral. "I wonder how Cliff would like that?" he evilly remarked.

Berea was frankly pleased to see Wayland and spoke of the improvement which had taken place in him. "You're looking fine," she said as they were returning to the house. "But how do you get on with the boys?"

"Not very well," he admitted. "They seem to have it in for me. It's a constant fight."

Her face grew grave. "I reckon you got started wrong," she said at last. "They'll like you better when you get browned up and your clothes get dirty. You're a little too fancy for them just now."

"I don't believe I want any more of their company. What's the use? As you say, I've started wrong with them, and I don't see any prospect of getting right; and, besides, I like the rangers better. Landon thinks I might work into the service. I wonder if I could? It would give me something to do."

She considered a moment. "We'll think about that. Come into the kitchen. I'm cook today. Mother's gone to town."

The kitchen was clean and ample, and the delicious odor of new made bread filled it with cheer. As the girl resumed her apron Wayland settled into a chair with a sigh of content. "I like this," he said aloud. "There's nothing cowgirl about you now; you're the Anglo-Saxon housewife. You might be a Michigan or Connecticut girl at this moment."

Her cheeks were ruddy with the heat and her eyes intent on her work, but she caught enough of his meaning to be pleased with it. "Oh, I have to take a hand at the pots and pans now and then. I can't give all my time to the service, but I'd like to."

He boldly announced his errand. "I wish you'd take me to board. I'm sure your cooking would build up my shattered system a good deal quicker than your aunt's."

She laughed, but shook her head. "You ought to be on the hills riding hard every day. What you need is the high country and the air of the pines."

She had read that victims of the white plague always talk in this cheerful way about themselves, and she worked on without replying.

"If I were here—in the valley—you and I could ride together now and then, and you could show me all the trails. Why not let me come here and board? I'm going to ask your mother if I may not do so."

"Of course you can come here," she said when she saw he was in earnest. "Mother will be glad to have you, although our ranch isn't a bit pretty. Perhaps father will send you out with one of the rangers as a fireguard. I'll ask him tonight."

"I wish you would. I like these foresters—what I've seen of them. I wouldn't mind serving under a man like Landon. He's fine."

Upon this pleasant conference Cliff Belden unexpectedly burst. Pushing the door open with a slam, he confronted Berry with dark and angry face.

"Why, Cliff, where did you come from?" she asked, rising in some confusion. "I didn't hear you ride up."

"Apparently not," he sneeringly answered. "I reckon you were too much occupied."

She tried to laugh away his black mood. "That's right, I was. I'm chief cook today. Come in and sit down. Mother's gone to town, and I'm playing her part," she explained, ignoring his sullen displeasure. "Cliff, this is Mr. Norcross, who is visiting Uncle Joe. Mr. Norcross, shake hands with Mr. Belden." She made this introduction with some awkwardness, for her lover's failure to even say "Howdy" informed her that his jealous heart was aflame, and she went on quickly, "Mr. Norcross dropped in on his way to the postoffice, and I'm collecting a snack for him."

Recognizing Belden's claims upon the girl, Wayland rose. "I must be going. It's a long ride over the hill."

"Come again soon," urged Berrie. "Father wants to see you."

"Thank you. I will look in very shortly," he replied and went out with such dignity as he could command, feeling, however, very much like a dog that has been kicked over the threshold.

Closing the door behind him, Belden turned upon the girl. "What's that consumptive 'dogie' doing here? He 'peared to be very much at home with you—too dern much at home!"

She was prepared for his displeasure, but not for words like these. She answered quietly: "He just dropped in on his way to town, and he's not a dogie!" She resented his tone as well as his words.

"I've heard about you taking him over to Meeker's and lending him your only slicker," he went on, "but I didn't expect to find him sittin' here like he owned you and the place. You're taking altogether too much pains with him. Can't he put his own horse out? Do you have to go to the stable with him? You never did have any sense about your actions with men. You've all along been too free of your reputation, and now I'm going to take care of it for you. I won't have you nursin' this runt any longer!"

She perceived now the full measure of his base rage, and her face grew pale and set. "You're making a perfect fool of yourself, Cliff," she said, with portentous calmness.

"Am I?" he asked.

"You sure are, and you'll see it yourself by and by. You've no call to get wire edged about Mr. Norcross. He's not very strong. He's just getting well of a long sickness. I knew a chill would finish him, that's why I gave him my slicker. It didn't hurt me, and maybe it saved his life. I'd do it again if necessary."

"Since when did you start a hospital for eastern tenderfeet?" he sneered, then his tone changed to one of downright command. "You want to cut this all out, I tell you! I won't have any more of it! The boys up at the mill are all talkin' about your interest in this little whelp, and I'm getting the branding iron from every one I meet. Sam saw you go into the barn with that dude, and that would have been all over the country tomorrow, if I hadn't told him I'd sew his mouth up if he said a word about it. Of course I don't think you mean anything by this coddlin'."

"Oh, thank you," she interrupted, with flaming, quick, indignant fury. "That's mighty nice of you. I went to the barn to show Mr. Norcross where to stall his horse. I didn't know Sam was here."

He sneered: "No, I bet you didn't."

She fired at this. "Come now! Something nasty is in your mind. Go on! What have I done? What makes you so hot?"

He began to weaken. "I don't accuse you of anything. I—but I"—

"Yes, you do—in your heart you distrust me—you just as much as said so!"

He was losing his high air of command. "Never mind what I said, Berrie. I"—

She was blazing now. "But I do mind—I mind a whole lot—I didn't think it of you," she added as she realized his cheapness, his coarseness. "I didn't suppose you could even think such things of me. I don't like it," she repeated, and her tone hardened, "and I guess you'd better pull out of here—for good. If you've no more faith in me than that I want you to go and never come back."

"You don't mean that!"

"Yes, I do! You've shown this yellow streak before, and I'm tired of it. This is the limit. I'm done with you."

She stood between tears and benumbing anger now, and he was scared. "Don't say that, Berrie!" he pleaded, trying to put his arm about her.

"Keep away from me!" She dashed his hands aside. "I hate you. I never want to see you again!" She ran into her own room and slammed the door behind her.

Belden stood for a long time with his back against the wall, the heat of his resentment utterly gone, an empty, aching place in his heart. He called her twice, but she made no answer, and so at last he mounted his horse and rode away.

Young Norcross, much as he admired Berrie, was not seeking to exchange her favor for her lover's enmity, and he rode away with an uneasy feeling of having innocently made trouble for himself as well as for a fine, true hearted girl.

"What a good friendly talk we were having," he said regretfully. "And to think she is to marry that big, scowling brute! How could she turn Landon down for a savage like that?"

He was just leaving the outer gate when Belden came clattering up and reined his horse across the path and called out: "See here, you young skunk! You're a poor, white livered tenderfoot, and I can't bust you as I would a full grown man, but I reckon you better not ride this trail any more."

"Why not?" inquired Wayland.

Belden glared. "Because I tell you so. Your sympathy hunting game has just about run into the ground. You've worked this baby dodge about long enough. You're not so almighty sick as you put up to be, and you'd better hunt some other cure for lonesomeness or I'll just about cave your chest in."

All this was shockingly plain talk for a slender young scholar to listen to, but Norcross remained calm. "I think you're unnecessarily excited," he remarked. "I have no desire to make trouble. I'm considering Miss Berea, who is too fine to be worried by us."

His tone was conciliating, and the cowman, in spite of himself, responded to it. "That's why I advise you to go. She was all right till you came. Colorado's a big place, and there are plenty other fine ranges for men of your complaint. Why not try Routt county? This is certain, you can't stay in the same valley with my girl. I serve notice of that."

"You're making a prodigious ass of yourself," observed Wayland, with calm contempt.

AMUSEMENTS

TREMONT TEMPLE.

As long as the great war lasts there will be war pictures—but at the Tremont Temple, Boston, are now being shown the most remarkable moving pictures ever seen in Boston. They are not black and white pictures, but in beautiful Kinemacolor and show the armies and navies of the warring nations of Europe under the title of "With the Fighting Forces of Europe." These (kinemacolor pictures are made by the same men and process as were the "Coronation" and "Delhi Durbar" pictures which ran at the Tremont Temple for six months. Torpedoes and submarines as well as Zeppelins and the air craft of Germany, France, England and Japan are all shown in action and it is of the greatest interest to see the soldiers digging trenches, behind earthworks and in the forests. Lifelike and life size are seen the German Emperor on board ship with Admiral Von Tirpitz the "Father" of submarine warfare. Actual photographs are reproduced by the moving pictures of the Servian army, the Czar and his Cossacks, the Belgian Army, the Grecian army, English, French, German, Turkish, Italian armies and navies and for good measure, Switzerland, Spain and the United States armies are pictured. Two performances are given daily.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

For the fifth week of the Star Stock Season at the Majestic Theatre, beginning next Monday, June 14th, the management of th Lonergan Players has secured Miss Edith Taliaferro to appear in the delightful play, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," in which she achieved such notable success when she played the part in Boston for the first time in 1910 at the Tremont Theatre. Since then Miss Taliaferro has appeared in divers characters, but none afforded her the opportunity to display all her winsomeness, naivete and charm better than "Rebecca."

The play is a simple little pastoral arranged from Kate Douglas Wiggin's famous Rebecca stories by the auther and Charlotte Thompson, and those who learned to love Rebecca in the book will find her alive upon the stage when, in the person of Miss Taliaferro she moves through four acts of refreshing country life. The play is a reminder that however much the stage may wander from what is sweet and pure and simple and direct in its appeal, the public is ever ready to accord welcome to the truth and beauty of such plays as this whenever they reappear .Muck-raking and commercialism, passion and pain are but dimly echoed in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." It helps to relax our minds and souls and to flit back for a time into the sunshine and happiness of our childhood days.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"All the Comforts of Home," William Gillette's side-splitting farce-comedy will be the bill next week at th Castle Square Theatre. Of all the successful comedies ever produced on the American stage, this one is voted the funniest. There is a laugh in almost every line. The story concerns a young man who finds himself to be flat, stony broke and in debt up to his ears. He is in despair when the deus ex machina falls from heaven in the form of his wealthy uncle. Uncle being jealous of his sprightly wife, takes her away on a journey. This is where the nephew seizes an opportunity to enrich himself and repair his fortunes. He turns his uncle's home into a boarding house where all sorts and conditions of people come to live—paying in advance. The humorous misunderstandings that arise can easily be imagined. William P. Carleton will have the part of the impecunious nephew. Doris Olsson will play the flirting wife. Theodore Friebus, James Seeley, Betty Barnicoat and the rest of the Craig Players will be cast in appropriate parts.

PARAGON PARK.

The unparalleled success of Paragon Park is due more to its Palm Garden than to any other feature for there one may enjoy the dual entertainment, the cabaret and dansant, while dining.An innovation this season in cabaret entertainment is the Broadway Musical Revue, comprising a complete musical show presented by twenty-five stunning show girls, direct from the Great White Way under the direction of the Broadway favorite, Martin Brennan. This form of Cabaret is now in vogue in the famous New York cafes and restaurants and Manager Dodge is the first to introduce it in New England. The dansants every evening from 6.30 to 8.30 and 9 to 11.15 alternate with the cabaret and guests are afforded an opportunity to indulge in dancing between courses in a cleared space among the tables.

The attractions in the park are numerous and varied and every day in the lagoon there are free exhibitions by Alber's 8 trained polar bears who perform many marvelous stunts including shooting the chutes from a height of ninety feet. Another feature immensely popular with the children is the monkey mansion inhabited by many rare specimens from all parts of the world including the famous "Night Monkey."

THE POPS

Interest in the brief season of Pop Concerts in Symphony hall, Boston, increases continually and it will be further stimulated this coming week by the first appearances as conductor of these concerts of Mr. Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra. This is Mr. Schmidt's first season in America having been engaged as assistant conductor of the Orchestra by Dr. Muck last summer and during the Symphony season the direction of several concerts fell to him owing to the illness of Dr. Muck. His success was notable. Mr. Schmidt has had wide experience in Germany in concerts similar to the Pops and as he is a man of very attractive personality, his success as a Pop Conductor is assured.

He has made a number of very interesting programmes. In his first programme next Monday night, June 14th, he will devote the second part entirely to Wagner. Tuesday night is a general programme; Wednesday night is Soloists' Night when a number of the members of the Orchestra will appear as soloists. Thursday night is a general programme and Friday night brings the first French Night of the season. All the composers are French and this should be one of the most popular programmes of the season. Saturday night will be a typical Saturday night list of works which is always pleasing to the great crowds that come to Symphony hall on that evening.

BULLOCK HELD UNDER $5000 FOR GRAND JURY

Charged With Assault On 76 Year Old Woman

Judge Avery this morning found probable cause to hold Alexander Bullock for the Grand Jury in connection with the assault on Mrs. Margaret Whiting, a 76 year old resident of South Braintree, on the morning of May 28. He placed the bonds at $5,000, one of the largest amounts ever set by the court. Bullock pleaded not guilty to the charge of felonious assault a week ago. Mrs. Whiting was the principal witness.

The aged woman was accompanied to court by her son and daughter and while she sat near the attorney's table and told her story of her experiences on that early morning her daughter sat beside her. Two stenographers, a young woman representing John J. Casey, former assistant district attorney of Suffolk county and counsel for the defendant, and a colored stenographer from the Superior Court jotted down her story.

In the short cross examination given her the questions were written on a piece of paper by her daughter because the old lady is very deaf.

Bullock was arrested about noon on the day of the assault by Chief of Police Galvin of the town and A. F. Hollis, a reporter. They say he declared he had no clear recollection of where he had been or what he had done during the preceeding night. They further say that he was identified by Mrs. Whiting after his arrest as the man who assaulted her.

This morning the old lady said she was not sure that the man under arrest was the man who committed the assault but that she thought he was.

The witnesses in the case were Chief of Police Galvin, A. F. Hollis, Dr. F. H. Gile, the attending physician, and Samuel Hawes a neighbor who went to her assistance. Dr. Gile said that he treated her shortly after the assault and that he found 17 distinct bruises on the face and a large one on the thigh. He testified that he remained with her the entire morning.

CHILDREN GIVE DREAM PLAY

Present "Revelations" At Christ Church

The dream play, "Revelations," written by Mrs. Norman E. Chaplin of Adams shore, was presented at the Christ church parish house Thursday evening by members of the Junior auxiliary of the church. The play was the fourth one written by Mrs. Chaplin for the children but was in a more serious vein than the others which consisted mostly of singing and dancing.

The play delineated the dispositions of children and opened with two sisters discussing various occurrences in history. One of the girls believed the result of reading poor literature, that all people of the earth had been animals. Her sister, deeply religious held to the ordinary views. The former dreamed that back in 5000 B. C. she was a cat and consorted with other animals. Her sister dreamed and found she had always been a girl and in the dream proved to be the sister of Moses who was taken to the palace to reign. The dreams were made possible by the Angel of Light who stepped from a frame in the prologue and epilogue, causing the dreams and bringing them to an end by the awakening of the girls.

The prologue showed the home of the Alcotts, with Esther Gordon and Elizabeth Haslett, the Central characters. Act one was Noah's ark, act two beside the Nile, and the epilogue the home of the Alcotts after the awakening.

The purpose of Mrs. Chaplin in writing the play was to point out to the girls the need of good character and high ideals. The director and accompanist of the evening was Mrs A. W. Turtle. The words of six songs written by the author were set to music by Mrs. William Haslett. All were highly complimented.

The audience was a most appreciative one and all the developments were well received. Those who took the part of animals wore something to indicate what they represented the elephant for instance carrying a large trunk; which was set against the chin.

The little bees had wings, and the cats, long tails. Miss Jessie Turtle, because of illness was unable to appear and her part was taken by Marion Hewson, after one rehearsal.

ANTI-SUFFRAGE CONVENTION

Miss Lucy Crane of Quincy avenue, East Braintree, and Mrs. R. S. Hubbard of Braintree Highlands are attending the Anti-Suffrage Convention at Springfield as delegates from the Braintree Branch.

Wednesday afternoon there was a reception to the delegates at Hotel Kimball, with an attendance of about 300. Mrs. James M. Codman of Boston presided. Mrs. A. J. George, in a clear and convincing manner, marshalled the arguments against Woman Suffrage under the heading "Why we are Anti-Suffragists," and Dr. Ernest Bernbaum of Harvard College conducted a Question Box. In the evening there was a large and enthusiastic mass meeting in the Auditorium of Springfield's magnificent Municipal Building. Nearly 2000 people listened to speeches by Dr. Bernbaum, Miss Majorie Dorman, of the Wage-Earners League, New York City, and Hon. John A. Matthews of New Jersey.

The speakers presented conclusive evidence that Woman Suffrage has failed to produce better social conditions and purer political life in the states where it has had a long and fair trial, so there is nothing to justify the imposition of the franchise upon women, a large majority of whom, in this state, do not wish it. Woman Suffrage is an economic waste, setting two sets of people to do the work of one—who have shown that one sex, the male, can do it better and more economically.

Thursday morning was given over to a series of brief papers and informal discussion by speakers from all over the state.

MRS. E. D. WADSWORTH.

Rev. Albert D. Smith, pastor of the Milton Congregational church, where she was a member, and Rev. H. S. Hunting, pastor emeritus of the society, officiated at the funeral of Mrs. Ellen M. Wadsworth, widow of Edwin D. Wadsworth, which took place Thursday afternoon from the family home at 287 Highland street, Milton. Mrs. J. Frank Moore of Quincy sang several solos. Burial was in the Old Milton cemetery.

Maurice Smith of Quincy was arraigned in the municipal court at Dorchester this morning on the charge of manslaughter. He entered a plea of not guilty and was held in $1,000 bonds for his appearance June 22.

Smith was the driver on an automobile which ran into and almost instantly killed Annie Agnetta the 5 year old daughter of Mrs. Ralph Agnetta of 374 Geneva avenue, Dorchester, Friday night.

The little child was rushed to the office of a near by physician who pronounced her dead. Smith was immediately placed under arrest on the charge of manslaughter.

TO GET NEW TRAIN.

Mayor Campbell has received word from the New Haven railroad that the new inward train between Quincy and Boston of which mention was made at the meeting of the Board of Trade, Thursday evening, would go into effect June 21. The train is one from the South Shore which will make the Quincy stop at 10.39 A. M. It is a summer train and will only be in service until September. At that time when the new timetable is made up, arrangements will probably be made for the continuance of this or a similar train.

SHOWER FOR MISS ELCOCK

Miss Theresa B Elcock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Elcock of Copeland street, who is preparing for her coming marriage to Harry Starr of Holbrook was agreeably surprised at her home by a tin shower by a score of her friends.

Miss Elcock is a graduate of the Quincy High school and of Burdett college and is at present employed by a large Boston jewelry firm. Mr. Starr is associated with his father in business.

Miss Elcock arrived shortly after the party was seated and when she entered the parlor every possible kind of tin ware was showered upon her. The evening was very enjoyably spent in singing and agmes. Solos were rendered by Nonie Reardon and Alice Beattie. Refreshments were served at the close of the evening. The party broke up at a late hour wishing the bride-elect many years of happy married life. The wedding will be on June 23rd.

NOVELTY SHOWER FOR TEACHER

The teachers of the Willard school tendered a novelty shower to Miss Alicia B. Elcock at the home of Mrs. Lewis J. White on Copeland street. Miss Elcock is to become the bride of Joseph Fix early in September. She was agreeably surprised when she entered the house to see a large number of her fellow teachers assembled and was passing from one room to another when she was deluged with numerous bundles from a large umbrella which was suspended in the doorway.

The house was beautifully decorated with blue and yellow daisies and potted plants. The evening was enjoyed by all and a fine musical program was given by the teachers. Miss Annie Desmond of Dorchester rendered several pleasing selections. A light collation was served after which the guests parted wishing Miss Elcock the best of good luck.

GRIDLEYS CAPTURE FIRST OF SERIES

Defeat Montclair Boys In Fight For Championship of G. S. League

ANOTHER BATTLE MONDAY

The Gridley Bryants, winners in the American division of the grammar school leagues took its first step toward the championship of the city by defeating the Montclair team, winners of the National league division, in the first of the world's series games on the lower Merrymount park field Friday afternoon by a score of 7 to 1. The second game will be played Monday evening at the park and if a third is necessary Wednesday will probably be the chosen day.

Large delegations of pupils from both schools saw the contenders clash and did considerable rooting throughout the game. Both teams had their pictures taken before they went onto the field.

Andrew Johnson, principal of both schools, and the man who coached the winning combinations through a most trying schedule, anounced, when questioned, that he was present in the rcle of a spectator. He and Mrs. Johnson preserved a strict neutrality during the six innings.

One of the happiest men on the field was Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director of the schools, who has made interschool contests in base ball and soccer foot ball possible. Among those who saw the final chapter of this season in the writing was A. L. Barbour, superintendent of schools; Joseph L. Whiton, president of the Council who was accompanied by eight children; Dr. Sydney Hardwick, TimothyJ. Collins, Thomas B. Pollard, "soccer expert" and principal of the Washington school, and parents, brothers and sisters of the players. The teachers of both schools were well represented.

The results of the game rather upset the conclusions of the fans who supposed the Gridleys were not as strong with the bat as the Montclairs. Both teams played a "million dollar" infield but the Gridleys exhibited the keenest base ball knowledge.

The first inning developed nothing but the anxiety of the fans. Gridley upset calculations in the second inning by landing on Pope, pitcher of Montclair, with both feet. Six hits, as well placed and as hard hit as was possible to boys sent over five juicy runs, and sewed up the game. Two more were added in the sixth.

Callahan's base running rescued Montclair from a string of goose eggs. A pretty centre field catch stopped a second run by him in the last inning.

Mellanson succeeded Pope in the fourth inning. He was the sole star in the fifth inning, fanning three men. Crowley pitched well. He appeared to be the most collected man on the field. His perfect catch of a stiff liner in the second inning, for the third out, prevented a possible score by two men he passed. The game by innings:

First inning, Gridley—Gagaro fanned; Ferriter and Corella hit; Amet fanned; Ferriter stole third; Crowley hit inside first, Callahan handled the ball and threw to Pope who covered first. No runs.

Montclair—Miller out; McAuliffe to Amet; Burgess walked; on Thompson's grounder he was thrown out at second; Crowley to Ferriter; Thompson stole second; Callahan fanned. No runs.

Second inning, Gridley—McAuliffe hit and stole second; Haggerty hit; O'Neil hit and scored McAuliffe; Kelly hit and scored Haggerty; O'Neil thrown out at home trying to reach on Gagaro's grounder; Ferriter hit to right and scored Kelly and Gagaro; Corella flied out to Thompson; Amet hit and scored Ferriter and stole second and third; Crowley out when Burgess got a scratch in front of the plate and threw to Callahan. Five runs.

Montclair—Lemieux fanned; Pope and Mellansin walked; Pope stole second; Baker fanned; Pope stole third; Hayes hit a hard drive to Crowley who caught it, retired the side and pulled himself out of a hole.

HOLD HURDY GURDY PARTY

Affair Is Big Social And Financial Success

Two hundred couples were in attendance at the hurdy gurdy party held Friday evening by the North Willard street table in St. Mary's hall in aid of the coming St. Mary's lawn party. The party was such a grand social and financial success that the services of the hurdy gurdy has been secured for next Friday evening for another party. The special guests of the evening were the pastor, Fr. McCoy, and his assistant, Fr. Mooney. Other guests were present from Boston, Cambridge Brockton, Weymouth, Neponset, Braintree and Milton.

The party reminded one of the old time hurdy gurdy parties as most of the girls were attired in natty middy blouses and their escorts in shirt sleeves. The hall was beautifully decorated with the National colors.

The music was furnished by Marie Grosse's hurdy gurdy of Boston and dancing was enjoyed until twelve when James McDonald took a vote to see if the party would be continued until one o'clock. The vote in favor was unanimous. All of the modern dances were enjoed including the "Shingle" dance which caused considerable merriment.

The affair was in charge of Miss Helen Sheehan and she was assisted by the following committee: Mrs. M. Riley, Mrs. M. Sheehan, Mrs. B. McDonough, Mrs. B Golden, Mrs. J. Kelley, Mrs. B. O'Connell and the Misses Annie Corcoran, Julia Corcoran, Annie Kelly, Gertrude Shevlin, Dorothy Foley, Mary McDonald, Anna Farrell, Hilda Crowley, Helen Little, Margaret O'Brien, Lillian Donavon, Eileen Fay, Mary Joyce, Helen Joyce, Margaret Kelly, John Sheehan, Thomas McDonald, John O'Brien, and James McDonald.

SURPRISED BY USEFUL SHOWER

Miss Jennie Harding of Old Colony street, Atlantic, was pleasantly surprised at the home of her cousin, Miss Ada Harding Thursday evening, when friends tendered her a "Useful shower." It was a complete surprise to Miss Harding who is soon to become the bride of Herbert Barnard of Cambridge.

The evening was enjoyably spent playing games, prizes going to Miss Fannie Harding, Miss Emily Gnong, Mrs. Frank Barrett and Miss Agnes Kinniburgh. A dainty luncheon was served by the hostess, Miss Ada Harding. The table was very prettily decorated the color scheme being yellow.

At a late hour Miss Harding was requested to pick up her handkerchief from the floor and much to her surprise found under the table a pretty waste basket laden with a large number of very pretty and useful articles.

Those present were Misses Jennie Harding, Fannie Harding, Emily Gnong, Harriet Waterhouse, Ruth Buckley, Agnes Kinniburgh, Susie Moffat and Mrs. Frank Barrett, all ex-members of the hostess' Sunday school class.

BUILDING BOOM STILL ON HERE

The boom in building new dwellings which has been very quiet for the past few weeks took a new lease of life this week and an unusual number of permits were issued by Inspector Thomas.

Of the twenty-four permits issued during the past week it will be interesting to know that nineteen were for dwellings four for garages and one for a small store.

The renewed activity in the building of dwellings is not confined to any one ward for it will be seen by the following list that every ward in the city felt the boom.

There is nothing especially new in business blocks at the present time. F. H. Norris is all ready to commence work on the new block near the Wollaston depot but is being held up waiting for the action of the city council in changing the grade of Beale street at that point. It is probable that the order changing the grade will be forwarded to the council at its next meeting.

There has been more or less talk of what kind of a building was to be erected on the Fred Rice lot at the corner of Hancock street and Revere road. Mr. Rice has had several offers or rather several propositions presented to him for improving the lot, but as far as known nothing definite has as yet been settled. Mr. Rice is out of town at the present time and just what his plans are can not be learned.

Last weeks building permits were:

W. DeLory and R. R. Colby, dwelling, Middlesex street.

F. E. Brooks, dwelling, Walker street

W. R. Bateman, dwelling, Dimmock and Goffe streets.

Joseph Butcher, dwelling, Palmer street.

Philipine Echern, dwelling, Pawsey street.

Edward Chapman, garage, Kemper street.

H. B. Hoorde, dwelling, Bird street

J. McFarlane, store, Clairmont avenue.

E. L. Linquist, dwelling, Chubbuck street.

Albert M. Ballou, dwelling, Bayfield road.

D. W. McNamara, dwelling, Kilby street.

Annie A. Hicks, dwelling, Manet avenue.

L. C. Merrill, dwelling, Warren avenue.

L. C. Merrill, garage, Warren avenue.

A. Lincoln Turner, garage, Hancock street.

K. E. Carlson, dwelling, Hilda street.

Henry Sjolund, dwelling, Nelson street.

Ada J. Middleton, dwelling, Washington street.

A. G. Ahlstrom, dwelling, Huntly road.

George A. Tripp, garage, Brook street.

Crane, a former member of the School Committee, will speak. Willard Crocker, president of this year's graduating class, will speak as representative of the undergraduates. There will be dancing until 11.30 P. M.

Previous to the meeting the members will deposit their ballots for officers. The ballots will be sent them next week with the nominees of the nominating committee, of which Frederick M. Atwood is chairman. Other members of the committee are Miss Mary A. Coyle, Miss Juanita Metherall, Miss Marie Bass, Harold Hill and Walter Monahan.

FREIGHTER CONTRACT FOR FORE RIVER YARD

Will Provide Work For Many For One Year

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation was awarded a contract Friday for a large freighter by the Edward F. Luckendach Steamship Co. of the Whitehall building, New York city, and shortly after the signatures were appended workmen started the preliminary work. The boat is to take the place of one recently sunk in a collision in New York harbor and the contract calls for delivery in one year. The company officials did not announce the contract price but say it is a large one.

The ship will be 437 feet long and 57 feet beam. She will have a cargo capacity of 10,000 tons. When completed she will be the largest freighter ever built at the local yards.

The ship will have Curtis turbine marine engines, driving through reduction gears so the propellers will turn slowly. The Luckendach company operates American registered boats.

SOCIETY NEEDS CONTRIBUTIONS

The committee in charge of the Cabaret given at the Quincy Yacht clubhouse for the benefit of the Quincy Associated Charities feel grateful to all who helped make it such a success. Over $150 was added to the treasury making it possible to keep the office open another month.

There is still need of contributions or the society will face a deficit before the end of the year. The work of the Secretary is not only charitable but as a business proposition is a saving to the city in economy of effort by trained service, with corresponding efficiency resulting in better homes, better morals and better character building in the community.

Extra service has been asked of the secretary in connection with the survey in regard to tuberculosis in the city and the pleasant service of selecting the children for the outing this week at Nantasket which necessited about 500 calls by her and her assistants. In connection with the tuberculosis survey supervision of the family required additional visits in a number of cases.

Let all who have not contributed and can help in this time of need send a contribution to R. F. Claflin, treasurer of the Associated Charities.

FIREMEN BEFORE COMMITTEE

The special committee appointed to investigate the fire department held its first session Friday evening behind closed doors at the Central Fire station The committee was in session until nearly 11 o'clock. It is understood that several of the firemen at the central station were before the committee, especially those on the auto chemical at the time she struck the telephone pole on Quincy avenue.

It is also reported that Patrick H. Bradley, a former member of the police department, was also before the committee. Another session of the committee will be held Monday evening.

LAUNCHING AT FORE RIVER

The submarine H-11, built at the Fore River shipyard for a foreign government for delivery after the European war, was launched at the Fore River shipyard at 11 o'clock this morning. The hull during its construction has been designated Hull 230 and is the first of the foreign boats to be sent down the ways. No time will be lost in launching the other nine and the second probably will be given its maiden dip the latter part of next week.

The sponsor was Mrs. Joseph W. Powell, wife of the president of the company. Through the christening she became the first woman in the United States to officiate at the launching of an engine of war for foreign power.

Mrs. Powell shattered a pint bottle of Mumm's extra dry, encased in gold wire, against the bow of the craft as it started its slide to Fore River After the ceremony President Powell presented her with a handsome pendant, the gift of the builders.

There was but little ceremony attending the launching and the occasion was witnessed only by interested parties. The craft was tied up in the river after it was launched.

DO EVERYTHING BACKWARD

Young People Hold Bellamy Social.

The Young Peoples society of Christian Endeavor of the Wollaston Baptist church held a Bellamy social in the chapel of the church Friday evening which proved to be a very enjoyable affair. The particular scheme of the social was that everything was done backwards. The coats worn by the members were buttoned in the back instead of the front, the refreshments instead of being held at the close of the session were served first. Any member who appeared with their coat on correctly was subject to a fine. After a short business session games of various kinds were played and there was music. The social opened with the serving of ice cream and cake.

OPEN TO VISITORS.

Holm Lea, the Sargent estate in Brookline, is open to the public this afternoon, and all day Sunday, for the annual display of azaleas and rhododendrons. Visitors should take Cypress street cars at Brookline Village and go to the end of the line. The approach is pleasant from Jamaica Plain around the south shore of Jamaica pond. It is an enjoyable exhibit for those who love flowers and beautiful shubbery. No vehicles will be admitted to the grounds.

PARENTS OF SON.

Born on Same Day of Month As Father and Grandfather.

Mr.and Mrs. Frederick A. Holbrook of 58 Revere road are being congratulated on the birth of a son, Thursday. By a somewhat remarkable coincidence the birth of the son and heir came on the birthday of the boy's father and grandfather.

Spooner's Auto garage, Revere road announces the sale this week of a six cylinder Studebaker car to Walter P. Ela and a six cylinder, seven passenger Studebaker car to Russell Westland.

THE NEW KING.

From the holy fires of Baku to what is destined to be, perhaps, the determining factor in the relations between the nations of the world when peace shall finally come, may seem a far cry but in reality the connection is very close.

An international court with power to enforce its decisions has been proposed and doubtless some such plan, with modifications, will be adopted when the Great War has become history. But until we get more than an approach to the dream of the idealists we might as well make up our minds that the world will go on about the same as it always has, with various nations forming various alliances and agreements, to supersede the international checks and balances which the war has cast into the discard.

A basis of international relations after the war may have much to do with the holy fires of Baku.

What are the holy fires of Baku?

Baku is situated on the Caspian sea and is controlled by Russia. For centuries it has been famous for its holy fires and in ages past it was the shrine of the Fire Worshippers. The fires are nothing more than burning petroleum, Baku being rich in petroleum.

Indeed until recent years there was no evidence that the vast stores of oil could ever be exhausted and Russia gained great revenue from her oil wells in Baku. In 1900 Russia produced 3,030,000,000 gallons of petroleum and the United States 2,672,000,000 gallons. In 1910 Russia's output sank to 2,850,000,000 gallons but the United States produced the enormous total of 8,801,000,000. The wells of Baku at last were slowing up and the United States stepped into easy leadership among the petroleum producing nations of the world.

What does this mean?

No man can say just what it does mean but the possibilities are tremendous. Petroleum bids fair to be one of the chief factors, if not the chief factor, in the determining of world power for many years to come.

The invention of the steam engine revolutionized the method of propelling among other things war vessels. It made the possession of coal fields of predominating importance in world politics. Coal was necessary to battleships until very recent years. Coaling stations were necessary to world powers.

Now, coal exists throughout the world in great quantities. But petroleum, which is usurping the place of coal as fuel for battleships, is not so widely and evenly distributed. The United States in 1913, according to the United States Geological Survey, produced 222,113,218 barrels. (There are 42 gallons to a barrel). The total world production was then, according to the same authority, 381,508,916 barrels. The predominance of the United States in this new world power, petroleum, is impressive. Russia comes second with 60,935,916 barrels in 1913.

The United States, because of its control of more than half of the world's petroleum in 1913 and in 1914 of nearly two thirds, 248,446,230 barrels, will play an important part in world politics of the twentieth century.

King Coal is dethroned. King Petroleum is holding the crown pretty securely. At the Fore River shipyard the North Dakota and the Rivadavia were equipped to use a combination of coal and petroleum, but the more recent Nevada was equipped for the burning of petroleum alone.

There are many advantages in the use of petroleum by a warship. It is more efficient and it takes less space. A pound of petroleum will go much farther than a pound of coal. Fewer men are required. It is much easier to fill the tanks than the bunkers. These advantages are tremendously increased when instead of using petroleum as a fuel to get up steam it is used in an internal combustion engine.

A few years ago Dr. Rudolph Diesal invented an internal combustion engine which could use crude petroleum, just as the automobile and aeroplane engine use the lighter refined products, such as gasoline. The Diesal engine or an engine by other makers upon the same pattern is used in submarines today. Perhaps the time is not far distant when the internal combustion engine will be in general use on the battleships of the world.

Petroleum as essential to the conduct of future warfare will make the United States a greater world power than she is today. And we have here touched upon but one use of petroleum; by the battleships of the world. In the same way it will come into general commercial use and fill the coffers of the United States.

As the years roll by petroleum doubtless in turn will be supplanted by electricity, now in its infancy. Until that day the possession of the bulk of the world's petroleum seems destined to impose upon the United States the advantages and the responsibilities of being the greatest of the world powers.

A DESERVED HONOR

The City Hospital of Quincy was honored by a deserved recognition of its high standing by the invitation at one time or another extended to every member of the surgical staff to serve in European hospitals. Drs. Walter L. Sargent, F. Ramon Burke, William L. McCausland, Nathaniel S. Hunting and D. B. Reardon were invited to join the Harvard unit which sails on the 22nd, an invitation which the latter two physicians accepted. The sixth member of the surgical staff, Dr. George M. Sheahan, was among those asked to serve as a member of the first Harvard unit which left in March and which is now stationed at Neuilly, France. This is a remarkable tribute to the hospital and should serve to remind such citizens as have forgotten the fact that they have an institution which they should be proud to support.

THE MAYFLOWER.

Lovers of flowers for some years have been watching with sorrow the slow extermination of the mayflower. Careless seekers of the fragrant little blossoms have ruthlessly torn plant, roots and all, out of the ground, so that now for many miles out of our large cities none may be found. This is a shame, and there seemed no way to stop the destruction.

But lately the mayflower seed has been successfully cultivated, and it is hoped that it may now become familiar in woodland, gardens and in florists' windows. It may even be cultivated as a fruit, according to F. V. Coville in a recent article in the National Geographic. He says the fruit is edible and as juicy as the strawberry, and that the Japanese surpass us in this matter for they consider it one of their edible fruits.

WILSON BACKED BY THE NATION

Leaders of All Political Parties Indorse Note to Germany

CALLED "APPEAL TO REASON"

Ample Room For Imperial Government to Make Concessions Asked For Without Loss of Dignity—Document Viewed In Different Lights In Pro-German and Pro-Ally Circles

Washington, June 12.—The United States note to Germany, that William J. Bryan, as secretary of state, refused to sign because of his fear of war, probably will not be answered for two weeks, pending the arrival of Meyer Gerhard, the special envoy sent by Ambassador Bernstorff to the imperial government.

From all indications here the resignation of Bryan has brought about a political change which puts the nation practically solid behind President Wilson. Telegrams of praise came to the White House from all parts of the country and pledges of support were made by leaders of all political parties.

"An appeal to reason with all threats skilfully concealed." That is the interpretation placed by official Washington on President Wilson's rejoinder to Germany. It was couched in the friendliest terms. It made yielding to the cardinal principle—recognition of the rights of American citizens to be safeguarded everywhere on the high seas—very easy, if Germany desires.

The president put the basis for such action as a matter of right, founded on the "universally recognized understandings of international laws and the ancient friendship of the German people."

On that ground Germany can make concessions asked for. Officials pointed out, however, that the note must be read in the light of all messages that have preceded it. The only essential elimination is that now the United States, in condemning submarine warfare, does it on the ground that American citizens must be protected.

If Germany agrees that she will do this in the future, America's protest cannot compel her to stop her torpedoing of merchant vessels on which she has assured herself there are no Americans.

Pro-German circles are hopeful that Germany will accept the demand in that light. They argue that to do so would prevent unnecessary criticism of the home government by the German people. There is not the least doubt, it is said, that the great mass of Germans believe that Grand Admiral von Tirpitz's undersea campaign has seriously crippled Great Britain and that announcement of the abandonment would seriously impair their confidence in the government.

An announcement of modification, however, if coupled with the explanation that such action will strengthen the German cause in neutral America, would be well received, officials here think. It is this belief that is the only ray of sunshine in a very black international sky.

Should the German government take this view the critical stage has been passed and a way can be found out of a situation fraught with the gravest consequences for both nations.

Diplomats of pro-ally sympathies are not inclined to accept this view. They declare that the note, although expressed in beautiful phrases, skilfully concealed an iron hand in a velvet glove.

All who entertain the view that Germany will not fall into line and accept the note at its face value, insist that the kaiser and his advisers must measure it in the light of what has gone before. It is simply another step forward, they say.

Commencing with the note of Feb. 10, which enumerated the principle of "strict accountability," the note of May 15 called for "entire disavowal" and the present document "deems it reasonable to expect that the imperial German government will adopt the measures necessary" to meet the wishes of the United States.

The president and his advisers are convinced that the German government will accept the American position as one that it can endorse. At the very outset it was pointed out the United States dismissed the Cushing and Gulflight cases, with expressions of friendly gratitude that must prove pleasing in Berlin.

In the case of the Falaba the assumption that the German government has not prejudged its responsibility under international law is couched in language which must soften the realization that the German statements are not accepted as finally closing the case.

YE OLDEN DAYS.

The recent dedication of the monument in Weymouth, England from which Weymouth, Massachusetts derived its name and which with Quincy was a part of the Massachusetts Colony recalls an incident of its early settlement. The small English colony some time before the emigration of Winthrop and his followers at Boston in 1630 was known by the Indian name of Wessagussett.

The leader, a Mr. Weston and his companions after a little became so short of food, they were on the point of starvation. They wandered up and down the shores of the river flowing through their midst for clams and in the woods for ground nuts and game, but what little they could gather, the Indians would steal. Their blankets were snatched from them as they lay down to rest and they suffered from the cold.

These Indians finally conspired to destroy this and other white settlements and the colony invoked the aid of Plymouth Colony. A delegation gave them corn out of their scanty supply and dispatched Captain Myles Standish with seven men to stop the Indian depredations

Pecksnot the Indian leader, a very large and powerful warrior, told Standish "Though you were a great captain, yet you but a little man. (Standish was short of stature.) I am a man of great strength and courage." The temper of Standish was fiery, but he bore the insults with much patience. Some of the Indians would sharpen their knives before the captain's face and insult him in divers ways.

Wittawamunt, another Indian warrior boasted of the excellence of his knife and said "On one end of the handle there is pictured a woman's face, but" but said he, "I have another wherewith I have killed both French and English and that has a man's face on it. By and bye it should eat but not speak."

The next day Pecksnot and Wittawamut and a brother gathered in a cabin. Standish with two of his men gained entrance. Standish fastened the door behind him and signaling the others quick as a flash snatched the knife which Pecksnot wore about his neck and after a terrible struggle succeeded in dispatching him while his followers killed Wittawamut and the other Indian after a fierce struggle.

Hobbomock, a friendly Indian who was outside, said to Standish, "Yesterday Pecksnot he brag of his own strength and bigness saying to you, "though you were a great Captain, yet you were but a little man," but today me see you big enough to lay him on the ground." Weston's Weymouth colony became scattered, joining other colonies on the coast.

Notwithstanding the depredations by the Indians, the various tribes in general were hospitable, acting with a kindness and gentleness which the Colonist reciprocated. A few hostile Indians, same as a few hostile whites of today, worried their neighbors. If there had not been a great pestilence (smallpox I think) a short time before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth, which destroyed about two-thirds of the Indians it is doubtful if the Colonists would have survived the onslaughts of Indians, for knowing their superior numbers and strength would have been likely to have exercised it and exterminated the colonies and gained control.

Our forefathers did not rob the poor Indians of their lands, as currently reported from time immemorial, but paid, not large amounts to be sure, but satisfactory prices to the Indians nevertheless, in corn, blankets and trinkets. Deeds are recorded on the Old Colony records of such conveyance. Owing to the greatly reduced Indian population by the scourge, much of the land was vacated when the colonists landed. The Indians owned their lands separately and individually same as the whites. I have found in the old Plymouth Colony records between two or three dozen conveyances of lands which the Indians owned in their own right which were recorded in the Plymouth Colony records in colonial times conveying from father to son or from father to daughter, or to some other Indian, without any consideration or price, so that the lands they owned could be passed from one Indian to another and held sacred by the colony as lands belonging to these Indians in severalty.

I will give a copy of one, given by that renowned Indian Chief King Phillip: "This may informe the honored court that I Phillip ame willing to sell land within this drangat, but the Indians that are upon it may live upon it still, but the land, that is (waste) may be sold and Wattachpoo is of the same mind; I have set down all the principall names of the land wee are not willing should be sold: from Pacanankett, the 24th of the 12th month 1668. "Phillip :P: his mark." I trust your readers will pardon my digression, in writing these early historical incidents, but as historian of Marshfield and president of Marshfield Historical society as well as president of the Society of Old Plymouth Colony Descendants my thoughts are pretty well steeped with early historic traditions of the long, long ago. I will however endeavor to resume in my next the line of thought in my previous letters on remembrances of Quincy 70 years ago, when I was but 10 years of age and later when the population of Quincy was about 5,000 instead of 35,000 as at present.

USEFUL LITTLE BLOTTING PAD

Will Repay Time Spent on Its Construction, Say on a Rainy Afternoon in Summer.

Our sketch shows a blotting pad of a very useful type that is quite easy to make. The size in which it is carried out is a matter of choice. For the foundation of the pad itself, a piece of very stiff cardboard should be used. The board is bound at the edges with narrow strips of dark brown silk fastened on with a strong adhesive. The pockets on either side are made of some of the same silk and bound at the edges with narrow ribbon.

The material is turned over the edges and fastened on at the back of the board with glue, and diagram A, which shows the underside of the board, illustrates how this should be done. D and D indicate the strips of silk binding the edge of the board, B the silk forming the pocket, and C is the board itself. Sheets of blotting paper must be cut to fit and slipped into the pockets on either side, and letters and papers can also be tucked in at the sides in the manner shown.

The cover is made of some of the same brown silk and bound at the edges with narrow ribbon to match, and lined with soft silk. Ribbon strings are provided to secure the case when covered with the flap, as shown by the small sketch. Initials of the owner can be worked in silk where indicated.

HOUSE DRESS OF NAVY SERGE

Clever Needlewoman May Fashion Garment From Costume Which Did Duty Last Year.

Here is a quiet little house dress of very fine navy serge, trimmed with graduated bands, and having sleeves and waistband of black taffetas. The simple guimpe filling up the square hiatus and the high collar are of organdie gauze, the finest of fine lingerie material procurable, that has yet a certain stability of its own. There is, moreover, a renovating suggestion in this scheme. An existing possession in the guise of a black satin or taffeta dress, that is essentially of last year's modeling, could have the skirt cut up to fashion the bands, while the black sleeves would save at least three-quarters of a yard of new material, and possibly more, as the serge bodice is such a very slight affair.

How to Clean Suede.

If you are wearing a pair of fashionable shoes, it goes without saying that they have some suede somewhere in their makeup. They have suede tops or they have suede trimmings or some place there is some suede. Also, as a matter of fact, the suede becomes soiled rather easily. Now, there are several sorts of cleaner sold for suede and all of them are fairly good. But a woman who has had much experience with cleaning suede says that the best way to clean it is to rub it with a fine emery cloth. This literally rubs off the dirt and leaves the suede smooth and clean.

For the Children

Willie Chiels, Holder of an Enviable Position.

When can you find a boy who does not envy Willie Chiels of New York city? Perhaps there are a few, but they are very few, and they hold places similar to that occupied by Willie. "Babe" Chiels, as he is familiarly known, is mascot of the New York American baseball club. Imagine a boy being a member of a professional baseball club! Think of the pleasure of being dressed in a regulation uniform and empowered to have charge of the bats; then the joy of knowing the heroes of the diamond personally and being received as and considered one of themselves. All this grandeur and good luck have come to "Babe" Chiels, the official mascot of the Yankees. It is fine to be a stage driver, a railroad brakeman or deckhand on a steamboat, but none of these positions compare in honor with the mascot of a big league baseball club. The man beside Willie is Manager Donovan of the New York Americans.

The First Gem.

The pearl is the one gem that comes to man perfect from the hand of nature, and to this its great antiquity as a gem is largely due. Precious stones whose beauty and brilliancy depend on polishing and cutting would naturally be discovered and utilized later.

The discovery of the diamond, for instance, probably dates within historic times. Though known earlier, it was not generally included among the gem treasures of royalty even as late as the seventh century.

It is quite probable that the pearl was the first gem known and treasured by prehistoric man since the search for food must have been the first occupation of the earliest of the race, and the shining pearl would thus have been discovered in river mussels if not in marine oysters. Certain it is that the Old Testament and the ancient written histories allude to pearls and that remoter evidence is found in the tombs and excavated cities of still earlier eras. The Egyptians, Babylonians and Assyrians held the pearl in an esteem verging on reverence.

The Witty Father.

A family, including a young man just home from college, was seated at the dinner table, on which were two nice roasted chickens, one at each end. The father, a practical man of the world, asked his son if he was learning at college.

"Yes, indeed," the son replied. "Why, I can make two count three."

"Nonsense, my boy. It can't be done."

"But, father, I can prove it. For instance, the chickens. This is one chicken at your end of the table."

"Yes," said the father.

"And that is two at mother's end."

"Well?" said the father.

"Well, two and one are three."

The father was puzzled for a moment, but only a moment, for he quickly recovered and said:

"Well, I will take this chicken; wife, you take that one, and, son, you can have the third."

Pull and Let Go.

When the friends you have invited arrive give each one a different colored ribbon. Each one holds it by one end. The other ends are all united in the hands of the one who leads the game, usually the hostess. She stands in the middle of the circle. When she says "Pull!" they must let go. When she says "Let go!" they must pull the ribbon which they hold. Those who fail to comply with the rules of the game must give a forfeit.

The Cotton Flies.

An amusing outdoor game is the cotton flies. One of the players takes a flake of cotton or bit of down, which she casts into the air in the midst of a circle formed by the guests. She at once puffs with her breath to keep it floating in the air, and the one toward whom the flake takes its course must puff in the same way to keep it from falling. This flake can be kept up a long time if the players are quick.

Conundrums.

Why is a defeated army like wool? Because it is worsted.

When is a bee like a criminal? When in his cell.

A CENTURY OF SERVICE.

"A Century of Service," is the title of an interesting little book written by John B. Clapp in observance of the rounding out of a hundred years in business of the Silas Peirce & Co. of Boston. Silas Peirce its founder was born in Scituate on the farm now occupied in the ninth generation of ownership by Silas Peirce the present president of the Company.

Quincy has had its share in the progress of this firm the late A. Moreton Swallow of Hancock street being a partner from 1871 until 1890. At the present time Amos T. Leavitt of Wollaston is one of the managing directors. There are many familiar faces in the groups of those employed in various capacities in the Boston store. The story of Mr. Swallow and Mr. Leavitt we quote from the book as follows:

A. MORETON SWALLOW.

A. Moreton Swallow was born in Nashua, N. H., and educated at Townsend Academy. His grandmother was Lucy Emerson, a cousin of Ralph Waldo Emerson. It was not until he has passed his majority that he came to Boston and entered upon a mercantile career here. He was on Elm street for several years with J. Blanchard & Son, a firm that changed its name several times during its existence. In 1868 he became a salesman for Silas Peirce & Co., and three years later, when Fitzroy Kelly was admitted to the firm, Mr. Swallow also was made a partner. He remained with the concern until 1890 when he retired, at that time being the oldest member of the firm. After his retirement he lived quietly at Quincy, Mass., until his death in 1901. Many of the old customers of the house will recall the severe accident that befell him a few years before his retirement, when his head was crushed by a descending freight elevator. Miraculously he escaped permanent injury but was confined to his bed for many weeks. He was genial, always courteous and smiling, and something of a philosopher. At the time of the accident he was questioned closely as to the manner of its occurrence and if he became insensible. His reply was: "No, I knew everything that happened and the only thought that came to me and that kept repeating itself in my mind, was, 'What a fool I was to be so careless!'"

AMOS T. LEAVITT.

Amos T. Leavitt is another of the managing directors who comes from New Hampshire. Born in Hampton, he graduated from the Academy of his native town, and coming to Boston found employment in a retail store. But the boy had ambitions beyond the retail business, and after a few months started again at the foot of the ladder, this time with Silas Peirce & Co., as he wished to be connected with a wholesale business. He went with the concern on October 3, 1887 and worked hard during the day and in the early morning and at night carried papers to eke out his small salary. After some years he was a store salesman and besides made one or two trips a month through the country. When the corporation was formed he was made a director and has shown judgment and tact in the management of the business, always resourceful in his settlements of the problems that arise where many men are employed.

Mr. Leavitt lives in Quincy, where he has always shown a pronounced interest in everything that relates to the affairs of the city. He is an active and energetic worker in numerous philanthropic organizations and as one of the trustees of Hampton Academy has done much to keep the alumni together and maintain the spirit that characterized the school in his day. It is rather a curious fact that while neither Mr. Leavitt, nor the president, nor the treasurer were college graduates, all three have been intimately connected with educational matters.

WON SEARS PRIZE.

Miss Marguerite Davis, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Edwin E. Davis of Presidents hill, is receiving congratulations upon the attainment of a distinguished honor, the first Sears prize in the life class at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. This prize, which is $50, was won by a seated figure of a woman done in charcoal and forms a fitting culmination of two years work. Miss Davis is now in the third class.

The work, together with other work representative of the several courses of instruction was shown at the recent exhibition in the museum. The production of the Quincy young woman attracted much attention and it was generally agreed by the critics to be far and above the other work of the same class. There were three classes of work: antique, life and painting. The Sears prize is given by Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears.

A Boston critic writing of Miss Davis's work says: "Outstanding among the life drawings is the study by Miss Marguerite Davis, which was awarded first Sears prize, a work with no hint of the amateur in any detail of the expertly modeled figure. Noteworthy is the economy of means used and the good taste of the whole."

GOING TO EXPOSITION.

Miss Annie Z. White of Copeland street and Miss Catherine Hussey of the Parkway are preparing for their trip to the Panama Exposition. They plan to leave on June 28th.

TEUTONIC FORCES CHECKED

Russia Delivers Hard Return Blow on Dniester River, Taking Large Number of Prisoners and Much War Material—French Get Large Amount of War Material and Food From Germans—Italians Claim Progress In Austria, While Another Report Says Invaders Were Repulsed—Turks Say Allies' Losses Were Enormous on Gallipoli Peninsula—Serbian Troops Invade Albania

London, June 12.—The Russian bark Thomasina was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off the southwest coast of Ireland. The members of the crew of the ship reached Queenstown.

The Thomasina was overhauled by the German submarine forty miles south southeast of Old Head of Kinsale. A warning shot was fired by the submarine and the crew of the Russian bark was ordered to take to the boats. Seven shells were then fired into the vessel, which sank in thirty minutes.

The captain of the bark and the crew of twenty men rowed toward land for seven hours until picked up by the steamship Polandia. The crew comprised seventeen Russians, two Swedes and one Norwegian. The Thomasian was in ballast.

The Russian steamer Dania was torpedoed by a German submarine. The members of the crew were saved The Dania was of 1689 tons net.

The Swedish steamer Otago, bound for Hull, was torpedoed and sunk. The captain of the Otago and the crew of sixteen were landed in the Tyne by the Danish steamer Veratyr. They say no warning was given before the Otago was torpedoed. The attack occurred in the North sea.

The Glasgow steamship Strathcarron was torpedoed without warning by a German submarine while outward bound from Barry. The crew, which put off in boats, were rescued by a steamer and landed at Cardiff, Wales. The Strathcarron was a vessel of 2807 tons and was reported to have entered the government service.

The trawler Intrepid was sunk by a German submarine in the North sea. The members of the crew of the vessel were landed by a steamer at Lowestoft.

The British fishing smacks Welfare and Laurestina were attacked and sunk by Zeppelins in the North sea.

Russians Check Teuton Drive

British observers of the war, forming their opinions on the latest dispatches from Russia, believe that the Austro-German forces threatening Lemberg from the southeast have been checked in their advance. Russia, they declare, has delivered a return blow and a hard one.

The great masses of German and Austrian troops which have forced a passage of the Dniester river, near Zurawna, have, according to the latest announcement of the Russian war office, been flung back, the Russians taking 6700 prisoners with seventeen cannon and forty-nine machine guns. Thus for the moment Lemberg is thought to be safe, for nowhere else along the Galician front have the Teutonic allies been making progress recently, with the exception of their southern extension into Bukowina.

News was received that Russian reinforcements were moving south along the Dniester river from Mikolaiow to Rohatyn, but it is hardly to be expected that they will achieve such quick results.

If this victory has been decisive it is the first real check delivered by the Russians since the start of the new Austro-German rush through Galicia. If true it will give renewed faith to Great Britain and France in the recuperative powers of Russian arms.

Russians Falling Back

In Bukowina, however, the Russians are falling back between the Pruth and Dniester rivers with the intention, it is believed, of making the Dniester their line of defense from the Roumanian frontier to the southeast of Przemysl. They have very strong positions along this line, and they will be in a position to deliver a vigorous offensive as soon as the Austrians and Germans begin to withdraw troops for their western and southern campaigns.

It is possible that this withdrawal commenced some days ago, for Dutch correspondents report the arrival of large numbers of troop trains in Belgium and the commencement of a battle south of Ypres. The official reports, however, make no mention of such a battle.

Russian reinforcements have arrived in the Baltic provinces and in Galicia, and it has become their turn to attack. According to the German official report, part of the German forces on the Dubysa river in the Baltic provinces, threatened by an encircling movement, were obliged to withdraw, although in the region of Shavli they claim to be making progress.

More important, in the belief of the British military observers, however, is the apparent change that it taking place in the Galician battle. Here, again, according to the German account, the Russians are advancing to the south and southeast of Lemberg, and also are attacking General Linsingen's force which crossed the Dniester near Zurawna.

Germans Lose Heavily In France

It appears that apart from the enormous loss in human life, the Germans abandoned to the French much valuable war material when they were driven out of Neuville St. Vaast, north of Arras.

The French have just succeeded in making a partial inventory of their booty and their description of the material that fell into their hands explains why the Germans fought practically to the last man in a desperate attempt to hold the well-stocked position.

Heavy guns, mine throwers, rifles, explosives and ammunition in large quantities were discovered by the victorious troops in the houses and in the trenches surrounding the village. Cases of food, provisions and equipment were also found.

The losses in men were probably among the heaviest of any single engagement of the French, for the ground was littered with dead and the French ambulances removed many German wounded.

Further progress in the district of Hebuterne is also recorded in the official Paris report. The French advance at that point represents a distance of one and one-third miles along a front two-thirds of a mile long.

The Austro-Italian Conflict

The Italian invasion of Austria over the eastern frontier has made further headway and, according to a report from Innsbruck, Austria, the Italians have captured the town of Ploeken, near the border.

A dispatch from Udine, Italy, says the Italian forces are advancing through Predil pass, about six miles on the Austrian side of the line. Farther south they are in sight of Trieste, the chief port of Austria, according to Rome advices.

Dispatches from Cologne and Geneva mention heavy fighting, particularly near Gorizia, on the east side of the river, twenty-two miles northwest of Trieste. The Cologne report states that the Italians were repulsed at this point, as well as near Gradisca and Monfalcone.

Capture of Monfalcone by the Italians was announced officially from Rome. According to the Geneva advices, the battle has not been decided Austrian losses in the Gorizia fight are placed at 8000 to 10,000.

Hot Battle on Gallipoli.

Heavy fighing on Gallipoli peninsula has followed the French and British offensive movement undertaken a week ago. It was announced officially in Paris that additional territory has been won by the French.

A message from Constantinople states that the French and British lost 2000 men killed on the night of June 5-6, and that their losses all last week were enormous.

Serbs Push Into Albania

News of a move that has been expected ever since Italy entered the war comes from the Balkans. Serbian troops have invaded the storm-tossed country of Albania, have already occupied Elbassan, which is sixty-four miles southeast of Scutari, and are pushing steadily on to Durazzo, the important post on the Adriatic, which, in the hands of an ally, would be of immense service to Italy.

At the same time the Montenegrins are engaged in a drive upon the port of Alessio, also on the Adriatic and some 100 miles north of Durazzo.

MORE ARRESTS EXPECTED

Federal Probe of Lusitania Affidavits Temporarily Halts

New York, June 12.—The federal grand jury which began an investigation to determine whether there was an attempt to defraud the United States in connection with the affidavits submitted to the government to prove that the steamship Lusitania was armed was temporarily adjourned.

The investigation has thus far resulted in the arrest on the charge of perjury of Gustave Stahl, a German reservist, who made one of the Lusitania affidavits; but it was intimated that results much more far-reaching are expected by the federal authorities. Important arrests are expected.

While the inquiry is specifically directed against Paul Koenig, a detective employed by the Hamburg-American steamship line, and through whose hands Stahl's affidavit is alleged to have passed, the government authorities indicated that they were seeking to find out for whom Koenig was acting.

LOVERS DIE TOGETHER

Man Sends Bullets Into Heart of Fiancee Before Killing Self

New York, June 12.—Frederick J. Hussenius fired two bullets from an automatic pistol into the heart of his fiancee, Anna Malmquist, a young music teacher, and then set one into his own brain.

A Central park policeman heard three shots. He found the couple clasped in each other's arms. The pistol was in Hussenius' hand.

BOMBSHELL IN GERMAN RANKS

Bryan Gives Unexpected Views In His Latest Address

WILSON IS STRICTLY NEUTRAL

Says United States Cannot Place Embargo on Arms and Sinking of Lusitania Is Unjustified—German-Americans Urged to Exert Influence With Berlin to Avert War

Washington, June 12.—Ex-Secretary Bryan's "address to the German-Americans of the United States" throws a bombshell into the ranks of the Germans who have come to regard him as their champion in this country.

First, and most important of all, he shows that an embargo on munitions of war, which has been the cardinal principle in the contentions of the Germans, would be a breach of neutrality on the part of the United States. In his own words the Germans "have overlooked the fact that the only way in which such action on our part could hasten peace would have been by helping one side to overcome the other."

In another portion of the statement he says the sinking of the Lusitania cannot be justified, and that the killing of innocent women and children, "whether by drowning or starving," cannot be justified.

He warns German-Americans not to entertain the idea for a moment that President Wilson is not strictly neutral and just as friendly to Germany as to England. Bryan suggests some changes in the shipping laws, principally the excluding of passengers from ships carrying contraband or ammunition.

Referring to German-Americans as "fellow citizens in whose patriotism I have entire confidence," Bryan, besides asking them to use their influence with the German government to persuade it not to take any steps that would lead in the direction of war, urged:

That they forget, never to be recalled, any suspicion of lack of neutrality or friendship toward the German people on the part of the President of the United States. Also that they should not attempt to connect negotiations between the United States and Germany with those between the United States and Great Britain "because the cases are different."

Taking his entire statement he advances no doctrines that are antagonistic to those in the note just sent to Germany, and the wonder is correspondingly increased as to why he ever thought it necessary to resign because of it.

With this statement Bryan expects to end for the present his efforts to lay before the public the situation which caused him to resign the portfolio of secretary of state. On Wednesday he gave out an explanation of why he left the cabinet rather than sign the last American note to Germany regarding submarine warfare; Thursday he issued an appeal to "The American People" to stand for persuasion rather than for force in asserting rights under international law, and Friday he made a brief statement expressing gratification at what he termed a change of tone on the part of the "jingo editors" regarding the note to Germany.

MINERS' CLASH FEARED

Militia Patrolling Streets of Illinois Town Following a Lynching

Johnston City, Ills., June 12.—Three companies of the Illinois national guard are patrolling the streets here as a precaution against further disturbance between American and foreign miners, growing out of the lynching of Joseph Strando, one of the foreigners.

Strando, with three others, was accused of shooting to death W. E. Chapman and wounding his daughter, Mrs. Benjamin Schull, wife of the manager of a local mine.

Strando admitted a few minutes before the noose was drawn that he was one of those who had planned the death of Benjamin Schull and had killed the latter's father-in-law by mistake. Strando confessed that he witnessed the shooting and named three men now in jail as those who had fired the fatal shots.

The plot to kill Schull was in retaliation for the recent dismissal of several foreign miners.

FRANK'S FINAL HEARING

Considered to Be Practically a Retrial of Famous Case

Atlanta, June 12.—The final battle to save Leo M. Frank from the gallows and to give him an opportunity to prove that he was unjustly convicted of the murder of Mary Phagan opened this morning in the executive rooms of the state capitol before Governor Slaton.

Owing to the unusual interest taken in the case, the hearing is in effect a retrial of the case, except that Solicitor General Dorsey probably will take no part further than to file formal objections.

NAVAL ACTIVITY BEING QUICKENED

Authorities Deny Expectation of Serious Trouble

Washington, June 12.—It is admitted in an official quarter that there is a quickened activity in the construction and repair departments of the navy and a determination to proceed with the new work authorized by the last congress with all possible speed.

At the same time suggestions that the fleet was being tuned up in the expectation of possible trouble were repudiated by administration authorities.

The statement was made that the present administration of the navy department had entered upon a more progressive policy of expansion and centralization of military authorty than had marked its earlier efforts.

Cambridge, Mass., June 12.—Charles E. Warren, who on June 5 shot and killed Walter G. Green and wounded Miss Ruby H. Stewart at Newton, was held without bail when rearraigned before Judge Sisk on a charge of murder in the first degree.

Warren refused to plead, and the court ordered a plea of not guilty to be entered for him. When asked if he were guilty or not guilty Warren remained motionless, with hanging head, and seemed unable to answer.

BROCKTON AGAIN DEFEATS Q. H. S.

Players Elect Bryan Captain For Next Year

The Brockton High school team came to Merrymount park Friday afternoon and administered another defeat to Quincy High school in a South Shore league game. The score was 8 to 3. Five of the runs were scored in the first three innings with Hamlin in the box. He was relieved by Hoffses.

Before the game the players met and elected Edward Bryan of West Quincy, a member of the class of 1916, captain of the team for next year. Bryan has been the regular third baseman all season and has been an energetic player. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bryan of Cross street.

Brockton came over, intent on victory, the rivalry between the localites and the visitors having in no way abated. The odds favored Brockton as is usually the case.

Two double plays by Quincy, one in the first and one in the third crimped possible opportunities for further scoring. The summary:

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

"You think so, do you? Well, I'll make a jack rabbit out of you if I find you on this ranch again. You've worked on my girl in some way till she's just about quit me. I don't see how you did it, you measly little pup, but you surely have turned her against me!" His rage burst into flame as he thought of her last words. "If you were so much as half a man I'd break you in two pieces right now, but you're not. You're nothing but a dead on the hoof lunger, and there's nothing to do but run you out. So take this as your final notice. You straddle a horse and head east and keep a-ridin', and if I catch you with my girl again I'll deal you a whole hatful of misery. Now, that's right!"

Thereupon, with a final glance of hate in his face, he whirled his horse and galloped away, leaving Norcross dumb with resentment, intermingled with wonder.

"Truly the west is a dramatic country! Here I am involved in a lover's wrath and under sentence of banishment all within a month! Well, I suppose there's nothing to do but carry out Belden's orders. He's the boss," he said as he rode on. "I wonder just what happened after I left? Something stormy evidently. She must have given him a sharp rebuff or he wouldn't have been so furious with me. Perhaps she even broke her engagement with him. I sincerely hope she did. She's too good for him."

And so from point to point he progressed till, with fine indignation, he reached a resolution to stay and meet whatever came. "I certainly would be a timorous animal if I let myself be scared into flight by that big bone head," he said at last.

Nevertheless he felt very weak and very much depressed as he rode up the street of the little town and dismounted at the forest service building.

CHAPTER V.

The Supervisor of the Forest.

NASH, who was alone in the government office, looked up from his work. "Come in," he called heartily. "Come in and report."

"Thank you. I'd like to do so. And may I use your desk? I have a letter to write."

"Make yourself at home. Take any desk you like. The men are all out on duty."

"You're very kind," replied Wayland, gratefully. There was something reassuring in this greeting and in the many signs of skill and scientific reading which the place displayed. It was like a bit of Washington in the midst of a careless, slovenly, lawless mountain town, and Norcross took his seat and wrote his letter with a sense of proprietorship.

"I'm getting up an enthusiasm for the service just from hearing Alec Belden rave against it," he said a few minutes later, as he looked up from his letter.

Nash grinned. "How did you like Meeker?"

"He's a good man, but he has his peculiarities. Belden is your real enemy. He is blue with malignity—so are most of the cowmen I met up there. I wish I could do something for the service. I'm a thoroughly up to date analytical chemist and a passable mining engineer, and my doctor says that for a year at least I must work in the open air. Is there anything in this forest service for a weakling like me?"

Nash considered. "I think we can employ you, but you'll have to go on as fire guard or something like that for the first year. You see, the work is getting to be more and more technical each year. As a matter of fact"—here he lowered his voice a little—"McFarlane is one of the old guard and will have to give way. He don't know a thing about forestry and is too old to learn. His girl knows more about it than he does. She helps him out on office work too."

Wayland wondered a little at the freedom of expression on the part of Nash, but said, "If he runs his office as he runs his ranch he surely is condemned to go."

"Well, you get Berrie to take up your case and you're all right. She has the say about who goes on the force in this forest."

It was late in the afternoon before Wayland started back to Meeker's with intent to repack his belongings and leave the ranch for good. He had decided not to call at McFarlane's, a decision which came not so much from fear of Clifford Belden as from a desire to shield Berea from further trouble, but as he was passing the gate the girl rose from behind a clump of willows and called to him: "Oh, Mr. Norcross! Wait a moment!"

He drew rein and, slipping from his horse, approached her. "What is it, Miss Berrie?" he asked, with wondering politeness.

She confronted him with gravity. "It's too late for you to cross the ridge.

"I told him I wouldn't stand for his coarse ways, and I won't!"

It'll be dark long before you reach the cut-off. You'd better not try to make it."

"I think I can find my way," he answered, touched by her consideration. "I'm not so helpless as I was when I came."

"Just the same you mustn't go on," she insisted. "Father told me to ask you to come in and stay all night. He wants to meet you. I was afraid you might ride by after what happened today, and so I came up here to head you off." She took his horse by the rein and flashed a smiling glance up at him. "Come, now, do as the supervisor tells you."

"Wait a moment," he pleaded. "On second thought I don't believe it's a good thing for me to go home with you. It will only make further trouble for—for us both."

"I know what you mean. I saw Cliff follow you. He jumped you, didn't he?"

"He overtook me, yes."

"What did he say?"

He hesitated. "He was pretty hot and said things he'll be sorry for when he cools off."

"He told you not to come here any more—advised you to hit the outgoing trail—didn't he?"

He flushed with returning shame of it all, but quietly answered, "Yes, he said something about riding east."

"Are you going to do it?"

She looked at him steadily. "Why?"

"Because you've been very kind to me, and I wouldn't for the world do anything to hurt or embarrass you."

"Don't you mind about me," she responded bluntly. "What happened this morning wasn't your fault nor mine. Come; father will be looking for you."

With a feeling that he was involving both the girl and himself in still darker storms, the young fellow yielded to her command, and together they walked along the weed bordered path, while she continued:

"This isn't the first time Cliff has started in to discipline me, but it's obliged to be the last. He's the kind that think they own a girl just as soon as they get her to wear an engagement ring. But Cliff don't own me. I told him I wouldn't stand for his coarse ways, and I won't!"

Wayland tried to bring her back to humor. "You're a kind of 'new woman.'"

She turned a stern look on him. "You bet I am! I was raised a free citizen. No man can make a slave of me. I thought he understood that, but it seems he didn't. He's all right in many ways—one of the best riders in the country—but he's pretty tolerable domineering."

Mrs. McFarlane greeted Norcross with cordial word and earnest handclasp. "I'm glad to see you looking so well," she said, with charming sincerity.

LEAGUE LEAD IS IN DOUBT

Weymouth and Rockland High schools set up a unique way out of a controversy Friday by returning to the field after the game had formally closed to play an extra inning and a half. Umpire Ganzel ruled in the ninth that Rockland won 9 to 8. A wrangle started, the return was made and Weymouth won the game 13 to 8. If Ganzel is upheld in his decision the championship of the South Shore league goes to Brockton High, which was tied with Weymouth. If the game is allowed as it finished in the tenth inning Weymouth and Brockton are still tied with seven wins and one loss each.

At the time of the critical play two were down in the ninth, the score a tie, 8 to 8, with Crowley on first and F. Osgood at the bat. The latter hit the ball which bounded over a stone wall, allowing the batter two bases. F. Osgood overran Crowley, forcing the latter off second, and he started for third. The throw to second missed both players and the ball was thrown to catch Crowley at third, but it went over the baseman's head into the crowd, allowing Crowley to score the winning run.

For several minutes Weymouth High protested, but Umpire Ganzel ruled that the throw over third was a new play and that Crowley had a perfect right to score. On the boys resuming play F. Osgood was at the bat and Crowley on first as before the fateful decision. In the first of the 10th Weymouth made five runs, which leaves the score, with its supplement. Weymouth 13, and Rockland 8.

Bohemians.

The term "Bohemian," applied to those who lead a certain style of life, originated in France, where it was first applied to the gypsies, who were erroneously supposed to be natives of Bohemia. At some time early in the nineteenth century the name came to be applied to persons of unsettled habits who did not observe the conventional rules of society. "Bohemia," the haunt of artists and students with little money, was in the Latin quarter of Paris and flourished, especially in the period of 1830. The classical description of it is contained in Henri Murger's "Scenes of the Life of Bohemia," which is published in several translations. Puccini's opera, "La Boheme," is founded on this famous book. As James Anthony Froude explains, the term Bohemian is not necessarily uncomplimentary. Speaking of Bohemians, he says, "I mean merely a class of persons who prefer adventure and speculation to settled industry and who do not work well in the harness of ordinary life."—Philadelphia Press.

Hard Times.

Ernest was very big and very black, and when it came to sleeping and eating fully justified his name. Ernest did not fancy steady work, but he was apt to be available when spring came for odd jobs at a dollar a day and his dinner.

One spring he came in with a sheepish grin.

"Miss Sally, I been hearin' in de lodge meetin' 'bout dese hard times, an' I 'low I better raise my sal'ry to a dollar an' a quarter a day."

"You're not worth that, Ernest, and you know it. Besides, I can't afford to pay more."

Ernest scratched his head; this was a matter for more thought than he had anticipated.

"I figgered out when dey wuz takin' 'bout dem hard times dat I couldn't 'ford to work for no less. But"—his black face gleamed with a sudden thought—"I won' eat so much."—New York Post.

Eastern Scrub Pine.

A Lazarus of the forest is the eastern scrub pine, also called Jersey pine, a small, puny tree of poor and pitiful form, willing to subsist on the "crumbs" that fall from the table of others. It grows in New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and farther south and west. It creeps into open spaces and is the companion of sassafras and huckleberry bushes. Old, worn out, gullied fields appeal to this pine, because little else will grow there and it is not obliged to fight for room. In course of time, however, as the impoverished soil begins to recover broad leaf seedlings come in. As these increase in size the scrub pines die and finally disappear. Though they have been in full possession of the ground, they are unable to hold it against competitors.

The Bashful Lover.

The girl who has a bashful suitor should cease lamenting the inconveniences of the situation and thank Providence for him. He will be very, very faithful. No need for heartburnings, no cause for jealousies, will arise in this connection. For not only have the other girls no time for him (a fact which taken alone, is hardly a recommendation to the average woman, by the way), but he himself—oh, joy of joys!—will have no time for the other girls.

And so the maiden who has a very bashful lover should cease repining. Once she has secured that eminently suitable person, it is up to her to train him and educate him in the way he should go. And there is no fear that he will ever depart from her.—Ellen Adair in Philadelphia Ledger.

And That's the Reason.

"Don't you want your nice bread and butter, Anne?" asked her father. Anne shook her head. "It's a shame to waste such nice bread and butter," continued her father. "I'll eat it myself." Anne watched the process with big eyes and a look of expectancy on her face.

Finally, when the last mouthful had disappeared, Anne asked, "Papa, did it tickle?"

"Tickle!" said her father. "Why, no. What do you mean?"

"I thought it would tickle," said Anne. "it had a long hair on it."—Delineator.

A Princess Of Idlewild

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

There was once a principality called Idlewild, the prince of which died, leaving only one daughter, Narcissa. She became the sovereign. Narcissa from her earliest youth had been a studious person.

The principality of Idlewild was very like those of Italy during that period when great poets and artists flourished and the practical gave place to the sentimental.

Shortly after the coronation of the new sovereign the prime minister was replaced by a poet whose verses were setting the Idlewildeans crazy. This change was followed by the replacement of the secretary of war by a lady who had made a great reputation as a reproducer of Greek festal dances. Then was the portfolio of finance given to a man whose performances on the violin had often moved audiences to tears. The minister of the interior was replaced by a woman whose recitations were considered marvelous.

Thus did Princess Narcissa replace a practical cabinet by an artistic one. Many of the people were delighted with the new managers of affairs of state, but a few shook their heads and prophesied that the new departure would not be successful.

The new cabinet had hardly been formed when King Wolfgang IV. of Tessebianca sent a deputation to Idlewild asking for the repayment of a long standing debt due him by the principality. The prime minister received the diplomats, addressing them in hexameters, lauding their sovereign and welcoming them to Idlewild, then turned them over to the minister of finance, who poured forth such melodies on his violin that they were in raptures, forgetting all about the debt they had been sent to collect.

They were about to return to the king of Tessebianca when one of their number remembered that the king would probably ask for the funds. He ventured to reopen the subject and was informed that the matter properly belonged to the interior department and the head of that bureau would address them. Having been introduced to her, she gave them one of Demosthenes' orations in the original Greek, transporting them with admiration.

The embassy departed, too full of emotion for utterance, and made their way back to Tessebianca. Before reaching home the spell under which they had been brought had been dissolved under the heat and dust of the journey, and they knew not what report they should make to the king as to the results of their mission. After a conference they decided to tell his majesty that the government of Idlewild had refused to discuss the question of the debt due Tessebianca and had sent them away with many compliments for his majesty, but no money.

Now, the king was a rigidly practical sovereign. He scoffed at the compliments paid him in hexameters and forthwith declared war against Idlewild, sending there a hundred gentlemen on horseback with twenty trumpeters to proclaim a state of hostility between Tessebianca and Idlewild.

When these gentlemen reached the borders of Idlewild they sent word to the princess, inviting her to come out and listen to what was in store for her on account of their sovereign's wrath. The princess sent for the minister of war, and the two were closeted together for an hour. A messenger was then sent to the war proclaimers that the princess would listen to the proclamation the next morning. Thereupon the deputation, at the invitation of a country gentleman, went in camp on his lawn, that was level and green as the surface of a billiard table.

They had scarcely breakfasted the next morning when, hearing music, they looked up and saw a company of dancers headed by the war minister of Idlewild dancing exquisitely. For two hours, with intermissions for rest, these ladies danced before the proclaimers of war, then invited them to listen to a fantasia on the violin by the minister of finance. These exercises were followed by others from different members of the cabinet, and the program was continued the next day.

One of the proclaimers, with a soul so small that it could be stuffed into a hazelnut, left the festivities and, galloping to his sovereign, informed him of what was taking place. His majesty, in a towering rage, mounted his horse and never stopped till he had come upon his proclaimers of war being entertained by the Idlewildeans. By this time the princess had come on the ground, and the king, of course, rode up to the canopy under which she sat on her throne and, dismounting, advanced to make an angry protest against the winning over of his messengers.

The queen smiled so sweetly upon the king that the angry word on his lip was turned to a compliment. She then introduced her prime minister, who read his hexameter eulogium on the king, and the prime minister was followed by others of the cabinet.

To make a long story short, the king married the princess, and war in that land was never afterward known.

What a pity the governments of Europe could not have been governed by sovereigns like the princess of Idlewild! It would have saved the people from the greatest war that has ever been fought.

GIVES POISON TO HER THREE BABIES

Mother Takes Own Life, But Little Ones May Recover

Wakefield, Mass., June 12.—Mrs. Frances W. Ennis is dead and three of her four small children are near death from the effects of corrosive sublimate tablets administered by the mother. Only prompt application of first aid with strong emetics saved the lives of the children.

Mrs. Ennis is believed to have given the poison to the children first and then to have taken a large quantity herself. To make sure of the fatal effects of the poison, she took her husband's razor and slashed her throat.

Mrs. Ennis, who was 27 years of age, had suffered from despondency since the birth of her youngest child, three months ago, according to her husband, who is a clerk in the employ of the Boston and Maine railroad.

For forty-eight hours the men, without food or water, were adrift in open boats. During this time a severe blow was encountered, and when the Harriet hove in sight and picked them up, all four men were in the last stages of exhaustion from hunger, thirst and lack of sleep.

BRYAN TO ISSUE ANOTHER STATEMENT TUESDAY

Will Discourse Further On "The Causeless War"

(By United Press)

Washington, June 14—Bryan at Old Point Comfort sent word out today that he would issue another statement Tuesday or Wednesday on "The Causeless War." The statement he explained would have nothing to do with the resignation but would discuss "The war as it is, what led up to it and the way out."

GERMANS BEGIN ATTACK.

(By United Press.)

Paris, June 14—The Germans have begun a new attack on Souchez. They are hurling large quantities of high explosive shells against the French trenches and the walls of the old sugar refinery. Official statements this afternoon admitted that the bombardment had wrecked part of the French trenches, north of the mill and had forced French troops to retire. This reverse, however, was balanced by a French victory on the stone ridge of the Lorette Hills.

THE WEATHER.

Although the sun shone brightly Sunday it was poor weather for automobiling because of the danger of a mayoralty storm, say city officials. Doubtless more than one of these gentlemen eyed the many fortunate individuals speeding by in their own cars and ruminated how sad it was to have a municipal auto, a week-day auto which was emphatically out of commission on Sundays. Alas thought the c. o. no more can we ride to the north, east, south, or west of Quincy, nor within Quincy itself unless it be upon the business of the city which paid for the machine. We thought for a moment, ruminated the c. o., that the cars were ours, given us by a grateful people, but we learn from his honor that this is not so. Oh, the ingratitude of republics.

DRIVES AWAY STREET VENDERS

Chief McKay Orders Sidewalk Merchants To Discontinue Trade

THEY BLOCKED STREET

The sidewalk venders who have blockaded Howard street, in the vicinity of the Fore River shipyard since the company moved from Braintree, were "moved out" by Acting Chief McKay, Saturday evening and will be permitted to ply their trade no more.

The spot on Saturday afternoons has always been like a fakirs row. Suspenders, collar buttons, razors, perfumed soups, handkerchiefs and sometimes overalls were sold regularly from small stands while foreigners distributed fruits of the season from push carts and wagons.

Nearly 5500 men are employed at the shipyard at the present time and the force may be increased. The majority of these men leave by the main gate and the period passed in patronizing the fakirs and fruit men has always resulted in serious congestion.

Waste paper and all sorts of debris was thrown on the street and when the venders moved on the sidewalks streets and private property were littered with rubbish.

Only ten, 14 less than the usual number, were on hand when Acting Chief McKay arrived. His orders were obeyed without question. Some of the workmen were disappointed but the majority were pleased.

Many merchants and residents of the city personally thanked the police head for his action. Councilman Charles Yule, in speaking of the incident Saturday evening was very complimentary to the police.

ALUMNI ENJOY MERRY PICNIC

Dignified Grads Have Royal Good Time

More genuine fun was afforded the members of the Quincy High school Alumni association who journeyed down to Glen Echo Park, Holbrook, on Saturday afternoon for the first annual picnic, than at any other event held by the association during this, its first year.

There were no indoor sports; every thing was the outdoor variety, even to the dancing which many frequenters of the ball-room indulged in at the open-air pavilion in the park. But stay! there were indoor sports in the evening, notably bowling, at which Miss Ruth Bass, and Miss Dorothy Packard demonstrated their superiority over several of the vainly aspiring and perspiring men of the party.

The bulk of the picnic crowd left Quincy square shortly after 2 o'clock in the afternoon, armed with lunch boxes and with coats which then seemed in mockery of the sun overhead and the best June weather of the year

On arrival at the park about 3 o'clock, the party was joined by other graduates of the High school, some of whom had come down previously by automobile and some of whom had come by the regular cars.

All immediately adjourned to the ball field where "Russ" Bates and Harold Hill, athletes of the good old days, picked two nines from among past, present, and perhaps future wielders of the big stick, and the great game was on.

With "Big Bill" Edwards in the box the Cigar-Smokers, headed by Capt. Bates, appeared to have everything their own way in the first few innings thanks to timely drives by O'Connor and Bates. Then "Ken" Edwards brother of the mighty Bill, took up the flinging on the mound and burned them over so fast that in the next three innings all the Cigar-Smokers could grab was 6 runs, in groups of 1, 2, and 3.

Even at that the Peanut-Eaters came into the fifth and last, inning 7 runs behind their rivals and with no hope of victory. Then things happened. Everybody got a wallop at the ball. Fred Kingsbury, better known as a runner than a base ball player, stood in the way of one of Bill's twisters and took his base. When "Ken" Edwards followed with a centrefield clout in Carl Prescott's territory, Fred had a chance to do some training for that mile he is going to run June 26 in the Harvard Stadium and one run was over the pan.

Then Russ Tupper slammed one into right field, Harold Hill and "Bub" Thayer got safe ones and with two down and 3 runs needed to tie, Horton Page knocked a homer into left field and tied it up. Singles by Edwards and "Ted" Rollins put the game on ice without further ado, and the Cigar-Smokers joined their rivals at eating peanuts from the big bag which had been placed under the trees.

The team lined up as follows:—

Cigar-Smokers—G. Jameson, c., "Bill" Edwards, J. O'Connor, 1b, "Ned" Hall, 3b., Carl Prescott, cf., Russell T. Bates, lf., W. Hyland, rf.
Peanut-Eaters — Fred Kingsbury, p., Kenneth Edwards, p. Morris Hooper, 1b and p., Russell Tupper, 2b., Harold Hill, 3b., Horton Page, lf., Ted Rollins, cf., L. H. Thayer, rf.

The score kept with the greatest deliberation and care by Miss Bass, follows:

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	Tot.
Cigar-Smokers	4	5	2	1	3	15
Peanut-Eaters	1	3	2	2	8	16

Umpire, Frederick M. Atwood; Heavy-lookers-on, J. H. Hooper.

Meanwhile, through the good offices of Miss Dorothy Packard and Miss Eleanor Whittemore there had been placed near the grove on the right a great tub filled with delectable lemonade, seasoned partly by a chunk of ice, partly by a tin dipper of substantial proportions and partly by twigs and bugs which it coaxed now and then from the pine trees overhead

As soon as the crowd could be pried from the lemonade tub, J. Harry Hoop-

QUINCY MAN KILLED IN COLLISION AT SEA

George H. Kendrick on Steamer Rammed in Fog

George H. Kendrick, a well known resident of Quincy and Wollaston, was one of the two persons killed on the steamship Bunker Hill of the Eastern Steamship outside line between New York and Boston when the steamer was rammed by the steam yacht Vanadis, owned by C. K. G. Gillings, which was headed toward Boston. The accident took place about 25 miles outside of New York, just after a heavy fog set in.

Mr. Kendrick was in his stateroom just over the dining room when the crash came. He was thrown some distance. When picked up he was dead, probably having been instantly killed.

Besides the two men killed three others were injured. The bowsprit of the "Vanadis" entered the port side of the Bunker Hill wrecking the dining room and carrying away sections of three decks. The yacht then rebounded and again smashed into the Bunker Hill. Neither boat was damaged below the water line and both were able to proceed back to New York.

George H. Kendrick, one of the two men killed, was well known in Quincy where he was born and where he has resided for the greater part of his life. His parents were one of the prominent South Quincy families, Kendrick avenue being named for the family.

He received his education in the Adams school and later entered the employ of the Boston & Maine railroad. He was employed in the offices of the railroad in Boston for many years. Later he entered the rubber hose business and was employed as a travelling salesman for a Boston firm.

Recently he was one of those interested in the formation of the Massachusetts Packing and Belting Company with offices at 141 Milk street, of which he was president. Recently he went to New York on a business trip and had been attending a convention at Atlantic City, from which he was returning to his home.

Two years ago he removed to Wollaston, since which time he has resided at 18 Beach street. He was about 45 years of age and leaves a widow and one child.

He was a member of Quincy Lodge of Elks and was an enthusiastic yachtsman.

Thomas Fitzgerald and James O'Riley were fined $25 for disorderly conduct on a car at Weymouth. They pleaded guilty to a drunk charge and it was filed. Both said they had no recollection of raising a disturbance The conductor however felt differently and said they had been bothersome from Hingham to Weymouth and while he was taking the registers the men sunk his hat over his ears, stepped on his shoes and indulged in profanity, shocking women passengers.

Charles H. Attaya of Boston pleaded not guilty to operating without a license. His machine was struck by another on the Blue Hill parkway, Milton. Officer Davis of the park police said that the man was unable to drive and couldn't take his car through he gate at the police headquarters and had to push it through. Attaya said he had his car registered and that the man who sold it to him told him that would cover operating for ten days. Judge Avery said he would fine him $10 but would grant a continuance. The case went over to June 19.

CHIEF McKAY LOSES $7.50

Acting Chief McKay has just had the unpleasant experience of discovering that an ice chest he was to sell for $8 had been sold several days before for fifty cents and that the lucky purchaser was one of the junkies of the city.

The article was sold, unknown to him, when the junky called Monday. On Thursday the man who sold him a new refrigerator phoned him an offer of $8 for the old one.

COURAGE AND WAR

The retirement of Mr. Bryan suggests a question which may or may not be profitable to discuss but which is certainly interesting. It is history that William Jennings Bryan put Woodrow Wilson in the President's chair. Except for what he did at the Baltimore convention Champ Clark doubtless would have been the Democratic nominee. This is another way of saying that Theodore Roosevelt would have been elected President for it is inconceivable that Mr. Taft could have secured more votes than he did or that Champ Clark could have polled Wilson's vote.

What would have been the position of the United States if Theodore Roosevelt were President? Many will immediately exclaim that the country would have plunged into the war long ago. They point to his fierce and, under the circumstances, most improper denunciation of Wilson's probable course at the time of the sinking of the Lusitania.

For our part, although believing that it would have been a national calamity if Roosevelt had been elected and that President Wilson is handling the foreign situation in an admirable manner, nevertheless we are inclined to wonder whether there would have been any Lusitania disaster at all if Roosevelt had been at the helm.

Although Germany's attitude toward the United States is somewhat of a puzzle and although we shall not know it clearly until we receive the reply to the latest American note it seems fairly apparent that Germany is not eager to go to war with us. Now if that is the case it seems logical that she was misled regarding the probable attitude of the United States in the event of an incident like the Lusitania disaster. She must have felt that she could bluff the administration into accepting excuses for an inexcusable act or must have felt that the administration was too pacific to be drawn into the war even upon such a provocation.

Germany would never have had any delusions of that nature if the bellicose colonel were at the head of the nation. She would have known full well that as soon as the news of the sinking of the Lusitania reached the ears of the President the Big Stick would get in its work without much delay. She would know that the American fleet would be on the way toward her shores before any note was sent.

This would not have been the right way for the President to act, of course, but the fear of a dangerous man is rather likely to keep the other fellow peaceful so far as he is concerned. There is a moral in all this. Any flabby answer, such as the ex-Secretary of State would have drafted if he had had his way, means ultimate war. A courageous attitude on the part of a nation which can back it up does not induce war, but tends to prevent it.

NAVY'S CHOICE OF GUNS.

Secretary Daniels sticks to it, in spite of the criticism of ex-Secretary Meyer and others. His declaration that our naval guns now being mounted will "shoot further, shoot straighter and hit harder than any naval gun now in use by a European country" having been challenged, Mr. Daniels, after consulting with Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, chief of ordinance, has made a supplementary statement of great interest.

In the Queen Elizabeth the British have a dreadnought carrying 15 inch guns which are larger than any the United States is putting on any of its battleships built or building, but our naval officers hold that the best American dreadnought armed with 14 inch guns is more than a match for the British vessel. They point to the naval axiom that a ship should mount the smallest big guns that will pierce the enemy's armor at the maximum probable fighting range. They assert that the 14 inch guns of the Pennsylvania will pierce the maximum armor afloat at 12,000 yards and the Queen Elizabeth's 15 inch guns will do little more than that.

According to the statement authorized by Secretary Daniels, the 14 inch guns on the Pennsylvania will range a little farther than the 15 inch guns on the Queen Elizabeth, and their "flatter trajection" gives them increased probability of hitting. Moreover, the Pennsylvania mounts twelve guns to the Queen Elizabeth's eight, giving an increase of 50 percent. in the volume of our fire over the British. Owing to this increased probability of hitting and greater volume of fire, it is estimated that the number of blows delivered by the American ship in a given time will exceed those given by the British 70 percent. It is admitted that the bursting effect of the 15 inch shell will be greater, but it is contended that the destruction caused by the 14 inch shell will be quite sufficient for the purpose.

Some of these points may not be entirely clear and convincing outside the limited circle of experts, but nobody will question the advantage of a greater number of guns or the desirability of delivering seventeen hits to ten of the enemy, provided the hits are made effective by guns powerful enough to serve the purpose.

Of course our naval experts have most carefully investigated before deciding that twelve 14 inch guns a more destructive than eight 15 inch guns, and their optimism and air of certainty tend to inspire confidence, but they and the heads of other navies will probably be better informed as to big gun ranges and armor penetration after the present war is over. Meanwhile our experts must decide these matters to the best of their ability.

The Springfield Republican makes the following suggestion "Perhaps in modern warfare the national flag ought to be painted on a merchant ship's bottom."

"Secretary Bryan has resigned. So are the rect of us.—Waltham Daily Free Press Tribune.

That's about right, contemporary.

The length of the list of building permits printed in Saturday's Ledger is an indication that the building boom is still going merrily on.

Congratulations, Fore River, upon the securing of that freighter contract.

Someone arises to ask! "I wonder if any of the city officials went joy riding in city automobiles Sunday?"

PADEREWSKI'S PLIGHT.

Since art knows no nationality, neutrals of all shades of belief can unite in expressions of sympathy for Ignacc Paderewski, the Polish pianist and composer, whose present plight epitomizes that of his unhappy beloved country. Broken in health, the savings of a lifetime swept away, his beautiful home laid waste, the artist whose consummate wizardry has charmed a world of music lovers for a generation has come to America in an endeavor to aid his afflicted fellow countrymen. When it was first announced that Paderewski would seek to raise funds for the suffering Poles amid the scenes of his former triumphs, it was naturally assumed that his medium of appeal would be public performances, and an army of admirers were filled with pleasurable anticipations. But it seems that the effect on mind and body of Poland's calamities and his personal misfortunes has been to rob brain and fingers of their magic skill, and Mme. Paderewski says it is doubtful if he will ever touch a piano again.

The artist is a proverbially poor business man. Paderewski's enormous earnings, extending over a period of many years, were invested in a magnificent estate in Galicia. It was the object of his life to give employment to as many of his neighbors as possible. Foresight would have suggested the placing of some of his funds in securities in the United States or other countries, as more than one member of European royalty is reputed to have done. The late Queen Victoria was an investor in American city real estate. The late King Edward put large sums into American railroad stocks. Caruso, Scotti and other grand opera stars, while owning splendid villas abroad, are known to have diversified their investments. What were press agents' stories, doubtless, used to relate the enormous insurance carried by Paderewski against accident to his hands and fingers. But he had no insurance against the fortunes of war. Genius and clodhopper alike are the victims of Mars' cruel caprices.—Pittsburg Gazette Times.

AUTO TRUCK HITS CARRIAGE

Occupants Escape Serious Injury

A carriage owned by White Bros. milk dealers, Newhall street, Atlantic and driven by Miss Stella White was struck by an auto furniture van on Hancock street, near the corner of Greenleaf street, Saturday noon and the girl and a young boy riding in the carriage at the time were thrown out, but both fortunately escaped with a shaking up. The two rear wheels of the carriage were smashed into kindling wood.

According to Miss White at the time of the accident the carriage had just turned from Greenleaf street into Hancock street when the auto van came along and ran into it. She says the van was making good speed and made no effort to slow up and before she could get out of the way it ran into her.

The girl picked herself up and caught the horse who had gone but a few steps and stopped. She also took the number of the auto van and later in the day her father communicated with the owner of the van who made an appointment to come to Quincy and settle for the damages.

DECORATE GRAVES OF FIREMEN

The Quincy Firemen's Relief association held its annual Memorial Day service Sunday when the association, headed by Chief Faxon Billings, decorated the graves of nineteen firemen at the Mt. Wollaston and St. Mary's cemeteries in Quincy and at Mt. Calvary cemetery, Boston. At Mt. Wollaston cemetery the grave of a former member of the Watertown fire department was also decorated. Simple services were said at each of the cemeteries. While at St. Mary's cemetery an alarm sounded from Box 39 and the auto of Chief Billings which was stationed at West Quincy dashed up and took the chief to the fire.

Exercises appropriate to Flag Day will be held by Quincy lodge of Elks tonight at the Elks' Home on Foster street. An interesting program has been arranged.

AVIATOR JONES IN AIR AGAIN

Although Harry M. Jones, the aviator who flew over Boston last Friday and who is making his headquarters at the old Squantum aviation field, was unable to get a license to fly Sunday it did not prevent him from taking air trips. He applied to the Highway Commissioners for a license and while the commissioners admitted the existence of a law which provided that no man could fly in Massachusetts unless licensed by the Highway Commission they said no money had been appropriated to be used for issuing licenses and none could be issued.

Jones then went to the office of the attorney-general and from there to the State police but nothing could be done for him here and he was given no assurance that he would not be arrested if he flew. He however determined to fly and he did.

Sunday morning after attending to some business he started the motor of his machine in motion and then rising flew to Saugus and had breakfast with his friends in that town. On this trip he took with him George Armitage of Providence, R. I., and flew over the harbor at an altitude of about 3500 feet. He landed on the racing track at Saugus and after breakfast flew back to Squantum.

Late Sunday afternoon Jones made flights about Squantum, taking up several passengers. No attempt was made to place him under arrest.

Jones said that he was ready to comply with the law and had tried to do so but was unable to obtain a license. It is probable that the matter of a license will be fixed up today.

PARISH HAS NEW NAME

St. Frances To Be Church Of Most Blessed Sacrament

The name of the parish of St. Frances-by-the-Sea has been changed to the Church of the Most Blessed Sacrament, in accordance with a recent order by Cardinal O'Connell.

The announcement was made by Father Madden, the new pastor, at the masses Sunday and is in recognition of the Feast of the Blessed Sacrament, on which day it was set apart from St. John's parish.

The church was given the name of St. Frances in recognition of Mrs. Frances Tracy whose efforts were a big factor in making its construction possible. Father Madden announced masses on Sundays would be at 7, 8, 9, and 10 o'clock and that repairs to the edifice would be made shortly.

SQUANTUM BOYS WIN 1st GAME

The Squantum Boys club won their first game of the season Saturday afternoon when they defeated the West Roxbury team by the score of 8 to 5. The boys christened their new uniforms which they received Saturday morning. Eleven complete uniforms were received by the team from the receipts of their recent minstrel show.

The Squantum boys presented a very neat appearance on the field. Their uniforms are light grey with the words "Squantum B. C." on the shirts in dark blue.

On the field the Squantum boys showed that they could handle the ball as neatly as they appeared. It was a close game but in the lucky seventh the boys made a big rally and scored six runs which won them the game.

Lane and Jesso were the battery for the West Roxbury team and Callahan and Larson the battery for the Squantum nine. Callahan put some stuff on the ball after the third inning and not a man crossed the plate for their opponents after that inning In the sixth the Squantum boys had got to Lane and the way the Squantum boys hammered out the runs was a delight to the home rooters.

The score by innings:

West Roxbury	2	2	1	0	0	0	0	0	—5
Squantum	1	1	0	0	0	0	6	0	0—8

The situation of the farmer is rapidly approaching an acute stage and the question is being freely asked," "Who will defend the farmer?" This seems an incredible question here in Masachusetts, but when we look over the unwise, unjust and almost hysterical attemps to secure laws as well also at the laws which have been enacted, and the seemingly interminable list of inspectors and inspections to which he is subjected, we do not wonder that it has become a serious question in the minds of the farmers and it is not strange he asks himself what is to come next.

But there is a reason for all this While the farmer has been kept busy on the farm endeavoring to eke out an existence and perhaps make a little money to pay the taxes, those who would use his efforts have been busy attempting to secure legislation beneficial to themselves, a recent example being the so-called "lager clean-milk bill" which was vetoed by the Governor of the Commonwealth

It is to meet just such emergencies that our movement has been inaugurated, and we, who love this dear old Commonwealth with all her traditions, including her agricultural industry, feel that we would be false to that filial devotion we owe to her if we neglected an opportunity of resisting an aggression upon a class of her citizens who have upheld with dignity, the farming industry ever since the foundation of the Government.

We earnestly hope that you will attend this meeting, to give evidence by your presence, of your interest in this important movement, and we further urge you to extend this invitation to your neighbors on our behalf and bring them with you to what we believe will mark the beginning of a new epoch in the farming industry.

Respectfully yours,

BEST TO COMPROMISE

DURATION OF FULL SKIRT STYLE IS UNCERTAIN.

Wisest Course Is to Have Them Made of Moderate Width With a Leaning Toward Fullness—Altering Last Year's Gowns.

In going over the season's wardrobe it is the best to stake one's chances on the wide skirt staying with us until July or August. There are dressmakers who are prophets, and who say that we shall probably wear the full skirt for two or three years at least. There are others who say it will be out of fashion by midsummer. The only way to be even partly safe is to compromise on moderate width with a leaning toward fullness.

If your last summer skirts had long tunics, the remedy is easy. That truism has been repeated over and again for two months. The added fact that the new skirts, both plaited and circular, have wide bands of a different fabric and sometimes of a different color at the hem, gives one even more hope for successful alteration.

Plaiting is in high demand and the knife-plaited tunic, therefore, which was considered as an unfashionable garment, can be made into a skirt by the addition of a deep band. It may be of satin if the skirt is of cloth, or cloth if the skirt is of silk. No one objects to these combinations nowadays.

Then there is the question of the long sleeve to be answered. Suppose the gowns of last year, also the coats, had three-quarter sleeves—what then? Fortunately, fashion has brought about the use of double sleeves. The upper part is opaque, the lower part transparent; therefore one can add chiffon or muslin, net or lace to a short sleeve and bring it down to the wrist. These lower sleeves are very often full as well as transparent, and they are finished at the wrist with a velvet bracelet and a narrow ruffle. All these details are good to remember when you are up against the task of altering sleeves.

There has come about an odd combination of fabrics in the last month which allows a plaited skirt to be attached to a straight, long-waisted, beltless blouse of another fabric. This idea is very helpful to the woman who is altering clothes.

Take, for instance, a white serge gown copied from a late Callot model in which the long, straight, girlish blouse was of white satin attached under a line of embroidered scallop below the waist to a knife-plaited skirt of thin, supple white serge. The long, white satin sleeves were laced at the back from wrist half way to elbow with blue and red silk cords through white embroidered eyelets, and there was a turnover collar of white embroidered linen.

As strong as the belt and normal waist line seemed to be among the majority of gowns, there is also a very fashionable frock that calls for a straight line from shoulder to hem. It is slim until it reaches the hips, where the side plaiting begins to spring out and give it a flare. These frocks have low hip pieces formed of embroidery or machine cording to break the long lines down the body. They are especially effective in white linen trimmed with pale yellow and in pongee and shantung.

Damask Lunch Cloths.

Some of the newest lunch cloths are being shown of embroidered damask. The material itself is unfigured, but the embroidery is usually elaborate. A very silky mercerized cotton is employed for working out the design, and this, with the soft sheen of the damask, makes a very rich cloth almost too pretty for table use. These cloths are more practical when made in the size of a large centerpiece, for then the individual plate and tumbler doilies of plain laced-edged damask can be used to protect the polished table surface and are more easily laundered than the heavily embroidered cover.

His Happiest Day

By F. A. MITCHEL

There is something in a July morning that bespeaks not returning life, like April or May, or growing life, like June, but ripening life. The sun shines hot, there is the hum of industrious insects, and pleasantest still is the sound of a distant mowing machine. It is this mellowed rattle that bespeaks July. It denotes long swaths of ripened grain lying on the ground ready to be gathered into barns, then to be made into bread to give strength to millions of people.

It was such a morning as this that Mary Robbins, a farmer's daughter, caught the sound of the mowing machine down in her father's wheatfield. The day before a young man had applied for work. He was a strapping, manly fellow, with a pair of honest eyes toward which his thick hair grew, and he was continually tossing his head to throw it back. He had been engaged for the harvest, and now he was driving that mowing machine whose rattle was wafted up to the farmhouse on the breeze.

"It's a mighty hot mornin'," said Mary to herself, "and I don't envy that young feller swelterin' out there in the sun, drivin' round that square field. He's been out there since 7 o'clock, and it's now 10. He must need a snack. I'll just put some o' that bacon that was left over from breakfast between two slices of bread, get some milk out o' the springhouse and take 'em down to him."

A little later John Horton, the farm hand, paused to give his lathered horses a rest and, looking up, saw the farmer's daughter from the waist upward above the waving wheat.

"Purty as a sail ridin' the waves," he remarked to himself. "She seems to be heading straight this way."

Presently Mary emerged from the standing wheat, treading upon that which had fallen. Then the young man saw that in one hand she carried something rolled in a napkin, while in the other was a large tin cup. He wiped the sweat from his brow that he might see more clearly, and something pleasurable rose up in his breast when he realized what was coming.

"Gettin' hungry?" said Mary, with a smile, as she reached the farm hand and, unrolling the white napkin, displayed the sandwich.

"Waal, now, ain't this jist too fine for anything?"

He took the sandwich, and as his teeth struck the succulent bacon the expression on his face would have served for an advertisement for a prepared food. Then he took the cup and drained half of it at a gulp, and it seemed as if he had poured the essence of joy into his stomach.

"It's a long spell between breakfast and dinner," said Mary. "I just thort you'd like a leetle sittin' up, so I brought you a snack."

They had never met till the night before, and, since the young man was a stranger to her and Mary did not wish to appear bold, she turned to go back to the house.

"Can't you wait a bit," said John, "till I finish the milk so you kin take back the cup?"

"Oh, I'm in no consid'able hurry," replied the girl, and she stood still.

"This milk is cold," said John, "and they say a heap o' cold milk put sudden into the stummick is liable to bring on colic."

He looked at a tree beyond the fence. Mary took the hint and said it would be better for him to eat his snack in the shade. He let down a few rails, they stepped over the rest and, going to the tree, sat down on the grass. John finished his refreshment, but Mary made no move to return to the farmhouse, and he did not resume his mowing.

The sweetest moments neither wealth nor power can buy. The cool breezes blew upon these two young persons; the flecked sunbeams danced upon the grass about them. They were tasting the incipient sensation of two hearts drawing together, delicious as the first swallow of rare wine. The July scenery was around them with its odor of production. The mowing machine was silent. The horses were switching the flies with their tails.

"Mary!"

A woman's voice, the voice of Mary's mother, came over the fields from the house. At the same time the sound of a horn came from a neighboring farm.

"La sakes," cried Mary, "it's dinner time!"

That evening after supper Farmer Robbins paid John Horton a day's wages and told him to move on. John knew the reason, but said nothing. Inwardly he remarked that the two hours he had spent with Mary were worth a discharge ten times over.

Farmer Robbins locked the stable door after the horse had been stolen. It may require a burglar ten minutes to steal a watch; a girl's heart may be stolen during a flash of lightning. John Horton had stolen, through no fruit of his, Mary's heart, but he declined to steal Mary from her father. He went away, but several years later he passed that way and found Farmer Robbins dead and Mary working the farm. He was engaged as manager and married her.

But he declares that the happiest day of his life was the day he was discharged for spending his time in the shade of a tree instead of attending to his farm work.

It was certainly an important day, for it brought him a wife.

Every One Within His Reach

"Travel?" retorted a clever business man. "Not I. I can sit right here and do business by telephone at less expense than the cost of hotels and car fares, and at the same time keep track of affairs in my office.

"My telephone is a part of my office force. With it I can reach every actual or prospective customer in this territory. Every toll call I make is productive in actual orders or in good-will.

"If the person I want is not at hand to answer my toll call, I don't have to wait—I simply leave word to have him call me at my expense.

"If I don't get him at all, I am not charged for the call, so that my toll calls are not an expense but an investment."

SUFFRAGE MEETING.

Those who were present at the Suffrage meeting at Electa hall Friday evening were charmed by the two young speakers, Nils Kjellstrom and Miss Inez Kjellstrom. Miss Kjellstrom spoke first and referring to the periodical literature of forty years ago showed that precisely the same arguments were used against the higher education of women that were now used against the enfranchisement of women,—that it would unsex women and make them like men, that women were biologically unfitted for higher education, As these apprehensions have proved groundless, we need not fear the far less radical change of giving women the vote, she urged.

"Women need the vote as they did not need it a hundred years ago. Then each household was an independent unit. The housewife was the producer of everything that the family consumed,—she milked the cows, made the butter and cheese, cured the meats, gathered the eggs, spun and wove the garments of the entire family. What other families did did not affect her family. Nowadays we are dependent on the community for the things we consume and must trust to government regulation that our garments are free from disease and our food is pure.

"Moreover all those things that women were doing in the home a hundred years ago they are still doing outside the home for wages that are low, hours that are often long and under conditions that are often detrimental to their health and the health of the next generation. Women wish to make the laws regulating woman's work a truer protection.

"That women have turned their attention to these things is proved by reference to the legislation in the woman-suffrage states. There we find minimum wage laws, eight hour laws, child labor laws, red-light abatement laws."

Mr. Kjellstrom argued the absurdity of saying that the men represented the women and were protecting them. "Are they protecting them when every year thousands of women and children are disappearing into the underworld? Are they protecting them when 165 lives are lost in a factory fire through the employer's neglect of conditions that had been brought to his attention? Last year 500 laws were passed in this state and of that number only 50 had any relation to the welfare of man, woman, or child. The legislators were concerned with business questions and human life and health, always woman's first care were neglected. These figures show that we always woman's first care, were neglected. These figures show that we need the woman's point of view in government."

When asked what laws were needed in Massachusetts, the speaker mentioned a minimum wage law, eight-hour law for women, and more than the present twenty-four inspectors for the fifty-thousand factories in the state.

NEGATIVE WINS HOT DEBATE

Question Was Whether Movies Do More Harm Than Good

Resolved —"That moving pictures do more harm than good" was the subject of a debate at the St. John's parish school Friday evening between the team of the St. Johns Holy Name society and the Bible class of St. Joseph's parish of Medford. The latter took the negative and were declared the winners.

Fr. Michael J. Owens, in announcing the verdict of the judges—himself, Fr. Ray Brosnahan of the Immaculate Conception parish of Weymouth, and James A. Ryan of Medford, said, of course it would hardly be the right thing to overlook the visitors after they had come such a distance, but the award to them is no consolation prize because they presented the best argument and were better prepared.

The St. Johns debaters were John Sharkey, William Costello and Edward Foy. The visitors were John Garrity, Edward Finnegan and Joseph Gillis.

Peter M. Sullivan was chairman of the evening. The boys debated seven minutes and were allowed two minutes for rebuttal. Edward Foy and Joseph Gillis, the closing arguers, were allowed three minutes extra.

The Medfordites were accompanied by Fr. John J. McMahon of St. Joseph's, a class mate of Fr. Walter A. Quinlan of St. Johns parish at Boston College. The attendance was very large.

GOLF CLUB SWEEPSTAKES

A. T. Leavitt, H. B. Driver, J. L Donavan and G. F. Tully were winners in the Wollaston Golf club sweepstakes Saturday. C. M. Hart won the low net prize with 78. J. J. Gallagher and R. R. Freeman finished with 83 and 85 respectively. Their handicaps were 5 and 4. The handicap of Leavitt was 22 and his net 67:

LATEST NOTE WAS CHANGED

"Softening" Did Not Alter Bryan's Decision to Resign

STRONG PHRASE WAS OMITTED

Belief That "Strict Accountability" Was Deleted After Premier Had Tendered Resignation—Wanted to Settle Lusitania Affair by Provision In Bryan "Breathing Spell" Treaties

Washington, June 14.—In the third statement which he has issued since his resignation from the office of secretary of state, William J. Bryan said that when the latest note to Germany was shown to him in its final form it contained an important change of a "softening" nature.

This change was not sufficient, however, according to Bryan, to justify him in asking "permission" that his resignation be withdrawn. He felt, he explained, that the United States could not do less in replying to Germany's offer of arbitration than to express a willingness to apply the principle of the Bryan peace treaties to the case.

When the note in its final form with this important change was shown to him, Bryan's resignation had been offered and had been accepted by President Wilson but had not become effective. Bryan was still secretary of state. Under the terms of his letter of resignation, he was to retain office until the note was sent.

From the ex-secretary's latest statement it is apparent that he had determined to leave the cabinet and that the only condition on which he would have remained was the inclusion in the American note of an offer to Germany to settle the Lusitania affair by applying the provision in the Bryan "breathing spell" treaties for an investigation of the facts in relation to the case before a resort to war.

That part of Bryan's statement relating to the "softening" change in the American note was based on an explanation made by Mr. Lansing, the secretary of state ad interim, of what he called a misinterpretation of what was previously said by him concerning the submission of the final draft of the note to Bryan before the latter's resignation became effective.

Lansing said that he did not mean to give the impression that no changes were made in the note after Bryan's resignation had been tendered. What he did mean, he explained, was that no changes had been made after the final draft of the communication to Germany was shown Bryan, who read the note just before it was placed on the telegraph wires.

What the changes were Lansing declined to say. Bryan has also refused o disclose what they were.

In the note of May 13, sent six days after the Lusitania went down, the government used this language, after a statement of the rights of immunity claimed by the United States for its merchant ships and citizens.

"It must hold the imperial German government to a strict accountability for any infringement of these rights, intentional or incidental."

In the note of June 9, the language used in statinz the rights of immunity claimed by the United States is practically identical with that used in the note of May 13, but the "strict accountability" phrase is omitted.

There is a strong belief that this phrase was deleted from the draft of the note as it stood at the time Bryan tendered his resignation and the time it was shown to Bryan in its final form immediately before it was transmitted to Berlin.

In some quarters there is opinion that the softening to which Bryan refers in his statement was accomplished both by the deletion of the "strict accountability" phrase and the inclusion of the offer to act as a medium of communication between Germany and her enemies.

Bryan's latest statement still lacks convincing proof that he had just reason for leaving the cabinet as a critical moment, according to the preponderance of view here.

Nothing that has been said by him since his retirement, it is contended, has served to show why he should have felt impelled to retire on the basis of the moderate note of June 9, after he had signed and thereby sanctioned the forceful terms of the notes of Feb. 10 and May 13. His latest statement is intended as a part explanation of this mystery, but it is not regarded as particularly illuminating on the subject.

The editorials of the German press were read with particular interest by Washington officials, who drew much encouragement from the references to the friendly tone of the American note.

TALK OF COMPROMISE

American Note Creates Favorable Impression In Berlin

The text of the American note was published in the Berlin papers. In circles which are often good barometers of the sentiment in responsible quarters, the note seems to have made a distinctly favorable impression and is believed to offer the possibility of negotiations on which a satisfactory settlement might be reached.

The conciliatory tone of the note apparently has evoked a responsive attitude in Berlin. Individuals who, in the earlier stages of the negotiations, displayed stiff-necked adherence to their own views, which made discussion almost impossible, are now willing to talk of compromises in which the compromise would not be all on one side.

The official viewpoint can probably be correctly appraised only after conferences of Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, Foreign Minister Jagow and representatives of the army and admiralty, the naval and general staff. The emperor will speak the final word.

The newspapers say that negotiations will continue, but whether a real result can be obtained is questionable, since the demand of the "Anglo-Americans" that the submarine warfare be stopped "lies outside the scope of practical discussions."

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berea McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the supervising ranger of Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Nash, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

"I'm browner anyway," he answered, and turned to meet McFarlane, a short, black bearded man with fine dark eyes and shapely hands—hands that had never done anything more toilsome than to lift a bridle rein or to clutch the handle of a gun. He was the horseman in all his training, and, though he owned hundreds of acres of land, he had never so much as held a plow or plied a spade. His manner was that of the cow boss, the lord of great herds, the claimant of empires of government grass land. Poor as his house looked, he was in reality rich. Narrow minded in respect to his own interests, he was well in advance of his neighbors on matters relating to the general welfare, a curious mixture of greed and generosity, as most men are, and, though he had been made supervisor at a time when political pull still crippled the service, he was loyal to the flag. "I'm mighty glad to see you," he heartily began. "We don't often get a man from the sea level, and when we do we squeeze him dry."

His voice, low, languid and soft, was most insinuating, and for hours he kept his guest talking of the east and its industries and prejudices, and Berrie and her mother listened with deep admiration, for the youngster had seen a good deal of the old world and was unusually well read on historical lines of inquiry. He talked well, too, inspired by his attentive audience.

Berrie's eyes, wide and eager, were fixed upon him unwaveringly. He felt her wonder, her admiration, and was inspired to do his best. Something in her absorbed attention led him to speak of things so personal that he wondered at himself for uttering them.

"I've been dilettante all my life," was one of his confessions. "I've traveled; I've studied in a tepid sort of fashion; I went through college without any idea of doing anything with what I got; I had a sort of pride in keeping up with my fellows, and I had no idea of preparing for any work in the world. Then came my breakdown and my doctor ordered me out here. I came intending to fish and loaf around, but I can't do that. I've got to do something or go back home."

At last Mrs. McFarlane rose and Berea, reluctantly, like a child loath to miss a fairy story, held out her hand to say good night, and the young man saw on her face that look of adoration which marks the birth of sudden love, but his voice was frank and his glance kindly as he said:

"Here I've done all the talking when I wanted you to tell me all sorts of things."

"I can't tell you anything."

"Oh, yes, you can; and, besides, I want you to intercede for me with your father and get me into the service. But we'll talk about that tomorrow. Good night."

After the women left the room Norcross said:

"I really am in earnest about entering the forest service. Landon filled me with enthusiasm about it. Never mind the pay. I'm not in immediate need of money, but I do need an interest in life."

McFarlane stared at him with kindly perplexity. "I don't know exactly what you can do, but I'll work you in somehow. You ought to work under a man like Settle, one that could put you through a training in the rudiments of the game. I'll see what can be done."

"Thank you for that half promise," said Wayland, and he went to his bed happier than at any moment since leaving home.

Young Norcross soon became vitally engaged with the problems which confronted McFarlane, and his possible enrollment as a guard filled him with a sense of proprietorship in the forest, which made him quite content with Bear Tooth. He set to work at once to acquire a better knowledge of the extent and boundaries of the reservation. It was, indeed, a noble possession. Containing nearly 800,000 acres of woodland and reaching to the summits of the snow lined peaks to the east, south and west, it appealed to him with silent majesty. It drew upon his patriotism. Remembering how the timber of his own state had been slashed and burned, he began to feel a sense of personal responsibility.

He bought a horse of his own, although Berrie insisted upon his retaining Pete, and sent for a saddle of the army type, and from sheer desire to keep entirely clear of the cowboy equipment procured puttees like those worn by cavalry officers, and when he presented himself completely uniformed, he looked not unlike a slender young lieutenant of the cavalry on field duty, and in Berrie's eyes was wondrous alluring.

He took quarters at the hotel, but spent a larger part of each day in Berrie's company, a fact which was duly reported to Clifford Belden. Hardly a day passed without his taking at least one meal at the supervisor's home.

As he met the rangers one by one he perceived by their outfits, as well as by their speech, that they were sharply divided upon old lines and new. The experts, the men of college training, were quite ready to be known as Uncle Sam's men. They held a pride in their duties, a respect for their superiors, and an understanding of the governmental policy which gave them dignity and a quiet authority. They were less policemen than trusted agents of a federal department. Nevertheless, there was much to admire in the older men, who possessed a self reliance, a knowledge of nature and a certain rough grace which made them interesting companions and rendered them effective teachers of camping and trailing, and while they were secretly a little contemptuous of the "schoolboys," they were all quite ready to ask for expert aid when knotty problems arose. It was no longer a question of grazing. It was a question of lumbering and reforestration.

Nash, who took an almost brotherly interest in his apprentice, warningly said: "You want to go well clothed and well shod. You'll have to meet all kinds of weather. Every man in the service—I don't care what his technical job is—should be schooled in taking care of himself in the forest and on the trail. I often meet surveyors and civil engineers, experts, who are helpless as children in camp, and when I want them to go into the hills and do field work they are almost useless. The old style ranger has his virtues. Settle is just the kind of instructor you young fellows need."

Berrie also had keen eyes for his outfit and his training, and under her direction he learned to pack a horse, set a tent, build a fire in the rain and other duties.

"You want to remember that you carry your bed and board with you," she said, "and you must be prepared to camp anywhere and at any time."

The girl's skill in these particulars was marvelous to him and added to the admiration he already felt for her. Her hand was as deft, as sure, as the best of them, and her knowledge of cayuse psychology more profound than any of the men excepting her father.

One day toward the end of his second week in the village the supervisor said: "Well, now, if you're ready to experiment I'll send you over to Settle, the ranger, on the Horseshoe. He's a little lame on his pen hand side, and you may be able to help him out. Maybe I'll ride over there with you. I want to line out some timber sales on the west side of Ptarmigan."

The next morning as he rode down to the office to meet the supervisor he was surprised and delighted to find Berea there. "I'm riding too," she announced delightedly. "I've never been over that new trail, and father has agreed to let me go along." Then she added earnestly: "I think it's fine you're going in for the service, but it's hard work, and you must be careful till you're hardened to it. It's a long way to a doctor from Settle's station."

He was annoyed as well as touched by her warning, for it proclaimed that he was still far from looking the brave forester he felt himself to be. He replied, "I'm not going to try anything wild, but I do intend to master the trailer's craft."

"I'll teach you how to camp if you'll let me," she continued. "I've been on lots of surveys with father, and I always take my share of the work. I threw that hitch alone." She nodded toward the pack horse, whose neat load gave evidence of her skill. "I told father this was to be a real camping expedition, and as the grouse season is on we'll live on the country. Can you fish?"

"Just about that," he laughed. "Good thing you didn't ask me if I could catch fish." He was recovering his spirits. "It will be great fun to have you as instructor in camp science. I seem to be in for all kinds of good luck."

They both grew uneasy as time passed for fear something or some one would intervene to prevent this trip, which grew in interest each moment, but at last the supervisor came out and mounted his horse, the pack ponies fell in behind, Berrie followed and the student of woodcraft brought up the rear.

VANADIS RAMS BUNKER HILL

Yacht's Nose Enters Dining Room of Passenger Ship

ONE ON BOARD MEETS DEATH

Boston Man In One of Staterooms Wrecked When Ships Collide In Dense Fog—Both Able to Reach Port at New York Under Their Own Steam

New York, June 14.—George H. Kendrick, president of the Massachusetts Packing and Belting company at Boston, was killed and John J. Brown of Cambridge was seriously injured when the Metropolitan line steamship Bunker Hill, Boston bound, with a big passenger list, was rammed by the big steam yacht Vanadis off Hunt's Point, about twenty-three miles out from this city.

Plowing through the port side of the Bunker Hill, about amidships, the yacht wrecked nearly twenty-five staterooms. Kendrick was in his stateroom when he was killed. Brown was thrown overboard in a mass of debris and both of his legs were broken.

Great excitement among the Bunker Hill's passengers prevailed, and boats were lowered to pick up those who were on the yacht and others who were thought to have been knocked overboard from the big steamer.

The Bunker Hill had left New York with a big list of passengers, including many New England people. The weather was clear up to about five minutes before the collision occurred. A heavy fog suddenly settled down and the Bunker Hill was proceeding slowly when the Vanadis plunged into the passenger boat.

There was a wild rush for the decks; women screamed and fainted and large quantities of debris was showered over several dozen who were in the dining saloon.

A few who had just entered their rooms succeeded in clinging on to the wreckage and were rescued. Many of the passengers were on the upper decks and in the lounging and smoking rooms.

The commander of the Bunker Hill, Captain Holmes, had no time to avoid collision, according to passengers. The crew were immediately ordered to get the lifeboats in readiness and to assist the passenegrs in any way possible.

The bow of the Vanadis penetrated the side of the steamer, making a hole three feet above the water line abaft the beam on the port side. Many of the passengers were in the dining-room when the crash occurred and the nose of the yacht jammed into the room.

Part of the ceiling crashed to the floor, furnishings were wrecked and excitement prevailed, in the midst of which two passengers jumped overboard. Both were safely picked up.

After the first crash the Vanadis, according to passengers, again plunged forward, this time leaving her bowsprit stuck fast in the hull of the Bunker Hill.

After those who had been knocked overboard were rescued, and those of the crew of the yacht who were in the water had been picked up, Holmes turned the Bunker Hill about and sarted back to New York.

The yacht also put back under her own steam. When the steamer arrived at the dock many of the women were suffering from nervous shock and had to be assisted ashore.

HEARING GOES OVER

Georgia Governor Hears Arguments For and Against Frank

Atlanta, June 14.—Arguments for and against Leo M. Frank's application for clemency were made before Governor Slaton here and an adjournment was taken until today to allow Solicitor Dorsey time to prepare a brief and present oral argument against the application. Frank's counsel will be heard in reply.

Joseph M. Brown, who was governor of Georgia when Frank was arrested for the murder of Mary Phagan, protested against any overturning of the verdicts and judgments of Georgia juries and courts, "on petitions of persons outside the state."

William M. Howard, in his argument for Frank, said the "condemned man would rely on the record of the case to convince the governor of his innocence."

Slaton said he wanted to ascertain how the testimony of James Conley, a negro, one of the state's principal witnesses, harmonized with that of other witnesses for the state and defense.

SWEEPS FIRE DOWN CELLAR

The alarm from Box 29 at 3.34 Sunday afternoon was for a slight fire on the roof of the Columbia Granite Co. sheds on Columbia street. It is thought that the fire started from a lighted cigarette or cigar being thrown onto the roof. The fire was extinguished with slight loss by a chemical stream.

The alarm from Box 431 at 5.30 was for a fire in the house of an Italian family on Hall place. A slight fire started among a lot of papers on the second floor and the woman of the house took a broom and swept them down the cellar stairs. A fire was thus started. The fire department extinguished the blaze with a chemical stream. The loss was slight.

The Quincy Point combination was called out at 5.30 Sunday morning to extinguish a slight fire in a service car of the street railway that had started from a short circuit. There was no loss.

SQUANTUM Y. C. HOLDS 2 RACES

Two races were held Sunday afternoon under the auspices of the Squantum Yacht club. One of these was a special race for knockabouts for a silver cup, open to boats of any club in the state, and the second a regular club race.

The race for the silver cup brought out representatives from four clubs. There was a good easterly breeze throughout the race and the course selected was one of 7 1-2 miles giving the boats a beat, a run and a reach. Shortly after crossing the line the Cheroot became disabled by the ripping of her sail along the gaff and had to retire. The other boats sailed a close race, and at the finish there was less than two minutes between the first and the last boat. The race was won by the Acanthus of the Quincy Yacht club. The summary:

AIRSHIP BOMBS FALL UPON POLA

Austrian Arsenal Wrecked and Fleet Badly Damaged

GOVITZIA'S FALL SEEMS NEAR

Austrians Have but One Line of Communication Between Capital of Crownland and Rest of Country—Teutons Suffer Heavy Losses and Leave Large Stores Behind In Fleeing From Russians—Not One of German Regiment Escaped In Battle With French Troops

London, June 14.—One of Italy's daring airships has again raided the great Austrian port and naval base of Pola, at the head of the Adriatic, and wrecked a great part of the arsenal.

In addition bombs were hurled among the Austrian fleet, which has long been bottled up in the harbor, and effected considerable damage among the warships.

It was in the arsenal at this point that Austria had gathered quantities of guns, ammunition and other war material for the use, not only of the fleet, but also the land forces to be used in the campaign against the advancing Italians. Dispatches from Rome say that a large portion of the arsenal was destroyed, fires being started in several places by the exploding shells.

The shipping in the naval port included one battleship, two cruisers and several submarines, and many bombs reached their mark among them.

At Gate of Goritzia

In their steady occupation of the valley of the Isonzo, Italian troops are now battering at the gates of Goritzia, twenty-two miles northwest of Trieste, and the capital of the Austrian crownland of Goritzia.

News from Udine, near the Italian frontier, wired by way of Paris, is that Italian artillery bombarded the fortifications of the positions surrounding Goritzia, including Santa Maria, San Pietro, San Marco and Santa Lucia.

These reports state that railway lines north and south of Goritzia have been cut, and the only communcation between the city and the rest of Austria is by a long and difficult mountain road along the Chiapovano valley.

It is added that documents found upon Austran officers who are among the prisoners taken by the Italians show that the Austrian general staff had planned to prevent the Italians crossing the Isonzo river between Tolmino and Goritzia. The capture of Plava by the Italians upset this plan for maintaining a barrier on that part of the front.

Further west, in their invasion of the Trentino, another Italian army has arrived in sight of the city of Trent, through their capture of the summit of Monte Zugna.

City of Trent In Sight

This height, which is one of the commanding positions in the section of the Adige valley, dominates the town of Rovereto. From its top the city of Trent can be seen in the distance to the northwest, less than twenty miles away.

The Austrians had strongly fortified Monte Zugna in such a way as to give the impression that they put great dependence upon it in their system of frontier defenses, but very strangely had not strengthened the garrison. The position was surrounded by strong wire entanglements and three lines of trenches, while a platform had been built for cannon. There were also in the place two large barracks, said to have cost $800,000 and possessing the most modern equipment.

The place fell an easy prey to the Italians. Seeing that the fortifications were undermanned, an Italian reconnoissance platoon deployed in several detachments, giving the impression of a battalion instead of a detachment of less than a hundred. The Austrian garrison, it is reported, surrendered, and the mountain was occupied without a single Italian casualty.

Russians Report Victories

From Petrograd comes more details of the defeat of the Austro-German forces on the Dniester below Lemberg. In the three days' fighting, which resulted in the Teutons being hurled back across the river with awful losscs, the Russians captured altogether 348 officers and 15,431 men, with seventy-eight machine guns and seventeen cannon.

In their hasty flight the Germans and Austrians left behind a large quantity of arms, ammunition wagons, field kitchens, transports and other war material.

Since this defeat the Teutons have changed their plan of campaign in Galicia. Balked in their efforts to reach Lemberg from the south they have commenced an attack on the Russians on the San river north of Przemysl, and along the Dniester in southeastern Galicia.

Petrograd reports that in a violent battle on the right bank of the Vistula, near Starozeby, the Germans were defeated after reaching to within 4000 paces of the Russian trenches.

German forces making a drive upon the fortress of Kovno have been pushed back by the Russians along the Mariampol road and along the railway from Kovno to Wirballen, Poland.

A Berlin official report says that in Galicia a bridge-head at Sieniawa was captured by the Germans, who took more than 5000 Russian prisoners.

German Regiment Annihilated

"When the French troops captured the important position before the farm of Toutvent," writes the official eye witness on the French battle front, "they found nothing remaining of the formidable fortifications installed there but masses of debris. The accurate fire of our heavy artillery wrenched the wire entanglements from from the ground, upheaved the trenches in some places, filled them in others and obstructed the approaches

"The position was held by the One Hundred and Seventieth Baden regiment of 1000 men," the writer continues, "not one of whom escaped death or capture. Two other companies of 200 men each, in reserve, also were almost desroyed."

The French captured by assault a powerfully fortified ridge near the Souchez sugar refinery north of Arras, and maintained it despite intense German bombardment.

Southeast of Hebuterne French infantry carried three of the German lines of trenches, making 100 prisoners belonging to four different German regiments.

French artillery fire centred upon Puisieux, near Rheims, caused a heavy explosion followed by fire and a panic among he German troops.

Russian Raid on Black Sea

Russian torpedo boats destroyed the buildings of the Turkish seaport of Samsun on the Black sea, according to an official statement given out in Petrograd. Many Turkish boats, the announcement says, were sunk. The text of the statement reads:

"On the night of June 10 our torpedo boats had an engagement with the ex-German cruiser Breslau and caused her some damage.

"At Samsun our torpedo boats destroyed the buildings of the ports and sank many of the enemy's boats."

Second: General Villa dispatched a note to Carranza offering to unite and wipe out all differences for patriotic purposes and asking the Carranzistas to appoint delegates to arrange the preliminaries for the conference between the factions which Villa proposes.

Third: Villa has sent a personal envoy to Washington, who is bringing Villa's reply to President Wilson's Mexican warning note of June 2.

KILLED BY PISTOL WOUND

Rhode Island Chauffeur Victim of Mysterious Tragedy

Pawtucket, R. I., June 14.—Lester C. Hopkins, operator of a motor bus, was found in his machine unconscious from a pistol wound which later caused his death. No statement regarding the shooting was obtained from him.

Residents of nearby houses heard shots and a woman told the police that a man who seemed greatly excited had asked her for a drink of water when she looked out of the window to see what the matter was. Her husband, who is a special officer, escaped.

The police afterward arrested a suspect who was thought to answer the man's description, and a minor charge was lodged against him pending a further investigation.

er, '06, vice president of the association, commenced to run off a series of sports for women and men which he had previously planned. The events were handled with swiftness and precision and with a goodly entry in each case, though there may have been a few sore arms and legs Sunday as a result of too earnest endeavor.

The star of the girls' contests was Miss Dorothy Packard, who got two second places, one in the potato race, in which clothespins were substituted for potatoes and one in the base ball throw for girls. Her throw of 84 feet in the latter event looked good for first prize until Miss Ruth Bass came along with a heave of the Sargent school variety that almost cleared the car tracks and went further than the tape could measure. Miss Nettie Pote was a close third.

Miss Packard was beaten in the potato race by Miss Dorothy Kingsbury whose performance indicated that all the running ability of the family had not been bestowed on her brother. Third place went to Miss Mary A. Coyle.

The obstacle race provided the most fun of the afternoon, it being excellent training for housekeepers. The task set for the contestants was as follows: to run to one mark and thread a small needle; to return to another and light a candle and carry it without extinguishing it to the second mark; then to untie seven or eight knots in a small shoestring and race for the finish. As in the other events, heats were necessary to wear down the field. In the final Miss Eleanor Whittemore proved the speediest of the field, though she was closely pressed by Miss Katherine Reed, who was only one knot behind. Miss Florence Crowell snatched third place.

The winners in these events were awarded blue, red and white badges inscribed with the name of the association, the date and the occasion, and "Bill" Edwards insisted on the right to pin the prizes on the lucky girls. When it came time to award prizes to the men, "Bill" and the others who had bid for the job, were more slothful.

The star of the men's events was easily Morris Hooper, now of M. I. T. He won the standing broad jump with a leap up around 9 or 10 feet, out-distancing his competitors, got third in the 100-yard dash (which some said was more than 100) and, teamed up with Fred Atwood, got a third in the three-legged race

"Ken" Edwards also featured, getting a first in the dash in which he just beat out Fred Kingsbury, and a second with Gordon Jameson in the three-legged race. The latter, as usual, provided the most fun of the men's races. Thayer and Hill, figuring that the first pair to the turn would win, ran like mad down the first stretch. "The turn" was a small pine tree which they hung to with a vim until they got a good start on the home journey. Woe overtook some of the competitors in this event whose action was so poor that they found themselves making love to the daisies and witchgrass.

The events were run off by Harry Hooper, assisted by "Russ" Bates, chairman of the athletic committee of the Alumni association, Harold Hill and Miss Marie Bass, also members of the committee and Lucien H. Thayer, president of the Alumni. "Ned" Hall, '07, held the starter's gun in approved fashion.

The summary:

Women's potato race—Won by Miss Dorothy Kingsbury, '11. Miss Dorothy Packard, '09 second; Miss Mary A. Coyle, '05, third.

Women's obstacle race—Won by Miss Eleanor Whittemore, '12, Miss Katherine Reed '14, second; Miss Florence Crowell '14, third.

Women's ball throw—Won by Miss Ruth Bass; Miss Dorothy Packard, '09, second; Miss Netie Pote, third.

Men's broad jump—Won by, B. M. Hooper, '13; L. H. Thayer, '06, second; Russell C. Tupper, '07, third.

Men's 100-yard dash—Won by L. K. Edwards; Fred Kingsbury '14, second; B. M. Hooper, third.

Men's three-legged race—Won by Hill and Thayer, K. Edwards and Jameson, second; M. Hooper and Atwood, third.

Supper was the next thing planned, but several fellows altered the program by going in for a swim in Glen Echo Lake bathing suits, which are of all varieties and hues. Then everyone got out the box lunches they had brought and ate them under the trees or in boats—or up on the rocks, who knows?

The remainder of the program was impromptu and by preference, some dancing, others playing pool or bowling.

The return ride to Quincy was by special car, which left at 9 o'clock, bearing a large and vociferous crowd who left no doubt to the natives along the way that they were from Quincy High school and of the Alumni. The party broke up in Quincy square about 10.30 after a happy day.

Announcement of the annual meeting of the Alumni association, which takes place in the High school Wednesday evening, June 23, at 7.45, was made at the picnic. Notices of the meeting and ballots for officers are to be sent to members this week. The meeting, with speaking by Emery L. Crane, singing of popular songs and speaking by representatives of the senior class, will be followed by dancing in the gymnasium, with light refreshments.

WANT SUPERIOR COURT HELD IN THIS CITY

Board of Trade Committee Discuss Question

Several matters of importance were taken up and considered Monday evening at a meeting of the committee on municipal improvements of the Board of Trade of which Atty. John W. McAnarney is the chairman. The most important of these perhaps was the question of having sessions of the superior court held in Quincy.

At the present time all sessions of the superior court are held at the county seat, Dedham. It is very inconvenient to reach and Quincy people who are obliged to attend sessions of the superior court often complain, it was urged. Norfolk county is peculiarly situated in some respects for both Weymouth and Cohasset are included in Norfolk county while Hingham, which lies between these two towns, is situated in Plymouth county. A person residing in Cohasset having occasion to attend sessions of the superior court must leave home very early in the morning in order to reach Dedham in time for the opening of court at 10 o'clock. People from Quincy are also obliged to leave early in order to arrive on time. It is a 35 minute ride from Boston to Dedham by train and attendants at sessions of the superior court are put to many inconveniences which would not occur if sessions were held in Quincy.

Quincy is within a nineteen minute ride of Boston and is also much easier reached from Cohasset, Weymouth, Randolph and Holbrook than is Dedham. Quincy has a large court house which it is believed could be adapted to hold sessions of the superior court. This question has often been talked of but no formal action has ever been taken. At the meeting Monday evening the question was discussed informally and a committee was appointed to take the matter up with the Quincy Bar association in order that when the necessary steps are taken there may be a concerted action between the Bar association and Board of Trade.

The committee also took up the matter of the nuisance of the canal. Those familiar with the canal will remember that at the lower end, near what was known as Johnson's lumber wharf, there were a set of locks operated by the tide, so that the canal was always full of water. Recently, however, the parties operating the lumber wharf have given up the use of water power, which has been supplemented by electric power. The water therefore has been allowed to run out of the canal with the result that at low tide, muddy, bad smelling flats are exposed. It is understood that arrangements can readily be made with the owners of the old locks so that by a small outlay they can be put in shape and operated to retain the water in the canal when the tide turns.

The committee will take up the matter with the owners of the locks and see just what can be done and later take it up with the Mayor.

Another matter considered was the question of a chapel at Mt. Wollaston cemetery. Nothing special however was done and no action taken. The committee adjourned for a week.

MEETS WITH PLANNING BOARD

Council Committee to Work in Harmony

On invitation of the Planning Board the special committee of the City Council, appointed at the last meeting to canvas the findings of the Quincy Grade Crossing Commission, met with the Planning Board Monday evening at City Hall. As the Planning Board has already taken up the question of the grade crossings it is believed that the two bodies can work together along the same lines much better than they can work independently.

It has been reported that while the abolition of the grades at Saville and Water streets are the only ones contemplated in the report of the commission, it is well known that when this work is done the railroad purpose to put in four tracks. This will necessitate the widening of some of the bridges in the city. In this connection it is reported that what is known as Presidents bridge will be widened, which will mean a much steeper grade at the approach to this bridge from both sides, a matter which doubtless will receive careful attention. Then there has been a rumor that the Quincy and Quincy Adams stations may be consolidated into one station near the present main freight yard between Granite and School streets.

ARRESTED ON SERIOUS CHARGE

Joseph M. O'Hare was arrested at a house at Adams shore about five o'clock this morning on a warrant issued to the Malden police. The squad of Quincy police which surrounded the house consisted of Acting Chief McKay, Inspector Goodhue, Patrolmen Cahill and Halloran O'Hare was wanted in connection with a serious statutory offense. Information that he was here was given a few days ago and he was promptly located.

ELKS HOLD FLAG DAY OBSERVANCE

Senator Langelier, Speaker of Evening, Talks of Present Crisis

SAYS ALL BACK PRESIDENT

Members of Quincy lodge of Elks hall exercises in observance of Flag Day at the clubhouse on Foster street Monday evening. Exaltd Ruler Edward Lirkin conducted the ritual of the flag and was assisted by the officers. Those who took part in the program were Edward D. Fegan, who read the history of the flag, Edward V. Sweeney, who read selections about the flag, Henry P. Kittredge who spoke briefly on the flag.

Mr Kittredge told how impressive a sight it was to see the flag which hangs in the post office building at Washington, 70 feet long and the largest in the world; a thrilling sight to visitors, American or foreign born.

Senator Langelier was the speaker of the evening. "Carlyle said 'our lives are wound around symbols' and American life is wound around the flag," declared the senator. "The kindest act ever performed under the flag was in 1865 when Grant after accepting the surrender of Lee, gave back the several thousands of horses and implements of war to be used in the rebuilding of the Confederacy."

"We all know the crisis through which our country is passing today, and which is now being handled by our worthy President and I am glad to tell you, brother Elks, that up on Beacon Hill it makes no difference to which party the senators and representatives belong, they are a unit in agreeing in this present crisis and so far as outside affairs are concerned they are willing to stand back of the President and of Old Glory."

He then read from an essay on the flag, written by John A. Sullivan, corporation counsel of Boston, as follows: "This flag which spreads its folds above us is the cherished emblem of our national life. Reared aloft in war, and always potent to stimulate our soldiers to greater deeds of heroism, so may it be equally potent in time of peace to command our energies and our talents for the promotion of the common weal."

In closing he said: "Let us resolve that it will be maintained as the symbol of liberty, justice and brotherly love, that we shall never permit it to be dishonored by others."

The exercises closed with the singing of America.

GRADUATION OF ST. JOHN'S PARISH SCHOOL

Fr. Owens Presents Diplomas To Twenty Four Pupils

Twenty-four pupils of the St. John's parish school were graduated this morning with impressive exercises and in the presence of Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor and director of the school, Fr. M. J. Madden, pastor of the new parish of the Church of the Most Blessed Sacrament at Houghs Neck and Fr. Walter A. Quinlan, curate at St. John's. Nearly 300 parents and members of the families of the graduates were present.

The exercises were the third since the school was erected by the late Fr. John J. Coan. Eleven of the pupils were boys and 13 were girls. They gave the program and were assisted by girls of the sixth grade who sang the Children's Hour of Longfellow.

The greeting was by Miss Margaret Griffin. In her salutatory she spoke of the intellectual harvest reaped by the pupils. The valedictory was by Dominic Guarcello and William Callahan, both of whom were tied for first place. Their topic was "Fidelity to Faith and to Country" and the former created a deep feeling when he said "Not the commands of a whole British fleet could turn me from the American cause."

The program included several patriotic numbers, one the song "To Thee, O Country," Eichburg, sung by the graduates, and the other "The Challenge," in which the boys trooped onto the platform carrying rifles. After a short drill they recited poems to the North and South and closed with a greeting to the flag.

The musical program consisted of violin solos by Emma Savoie, accompanied by Gertrude McGrann, both graduates. Their rendition of Il Trovatore was exceptional for children. William Callahan contributed a violin solo.

"The Changed Cross" was given by the graduates. It was symbolical in that a little girl threw away her cross of proverty and others bearing crosses of sin, beauty, wealth, pride, learning and fame did the same. When it came to choosing a cross to follow the footsteps of the master she found the cross of poverty was lighter than the others. The girls were dressed as angels and wore crowns.

Fr. Owens in presenting the diplomas said it was a source of gratification to preside at the first graduation since he became pastor. Catholic education he said is not a new story in the diocese but it is of quite recent date in Quincy and like all things that are new people need to be educated to its worth before they begin to value it.

"The schools are conducted so children can receive a secular education as well as a grammar school education," he declared, "and we believe they will go forth and show that which is born in a Catholic, respect and reverence, and these children, we believe, will show their worth in the high schools and in their lives."

He then spoke in high appreciation of the Sisters of St. Joseph who taught the pupils and in closing said he knew that he voiced the sentiments of the children when he expressed a grateful thanks to the sisters.

THAT WEDNESDAY CLOSING.

It is the feeling of some of the merchants that the Wednesday afternoon closing project has not been handled in the right way. While they give the Ledger credit for material aid in bringing about the agreement to close Wednesday afternoons beginning June 23 and extending through August they feel nevertheless that the question should properly have come up before a meeting of the merchants concerned, who should then take whatever steps seemed best for the common good.

That this is precisely the attitude of the Ledger is indicated by the following extract from an editorial entitled "Matter For Consideration," which appeared in the editorial column of this paper on Wednesday, June 9:

"The Board of Trade, or the proper sub-division of the Board, is the proper body to consider the matter. There is a meeting of the Board Thursday evening. Why not act at that time, merchants, rather than delay, and why not act in harmony?"

It is the discussion and decision of just such questions as this which would make the work of the Board of Trade more effective A retail merchants' divcision of the Board of of Trade should have considered the question, we believe. It was only when the merchants showed no inclination to "get-together" on the matter that the Ledger, in conjunction with a few of the merchants, took up the matter and secured something tangible.

The matter was, and is, primarily one for consideration by the merchants and their clerks. The public has interests in the question, however, and as a spokesman for the public the Ledger conceives its duty to be an expression of opinion and the furtherance of the project by all means within its power.

At the same time we recognize that the matter did not reach consideration until a late date and we realize that some merchants cannot make the arrangements necessary to permit them to begin the Wednesday afternoon closing on June 23. We trust that next year the matter will be considered by the proper persons and at the proper time.

DRIVE OUT THE USURPERS

Acting Chief of Police McKay acted wisely in ordering away the street venders who congregated before the entrance of the Fore RiverShipbuilding Corporation. The congestion caused by these men plying their trade will employees of the yard is considerable.

Aside from the congestion, however we believe that it is unfair to the merchants of Quincy to permit these sidewalk stands. Regular business men who pay taxes to the city and aid in building, among other things, the very sidewalk upon which the venders were standing are entitled to some consideration. It is not fair to permit this swarm of non-tax paying fakirs to usurp any part of the business of legitimate merchants.

Why does not some Chatauqua manager perform a public service and enlist the services of the ex-secretary of state of the United States for a regular series of lectures? This might help to check the flood of Bryanesque notes with which the long suffering American people apparently are destined to be flooded.

"Big Bill" Edwards is "some" pitcher even though he did lose the base ball game at the Q. H. S. Alumni association picnic by the score of 15 to 16.

EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYED

The Legislature having enacted a law that compensates workingmen for all accidents by holding employers responsible, the employers, to protect themselves, have a right to select those whom they employ who are the least likely to become subjects for compensation. The General Electric Company will, in the future insist that applicants for employment undergo physical examination to determine their ability to avoid accidents. The general manager is quite within his rights when he says that "A simple physical examination will easily show whether an employee is competent to undertake heavy work or not, and, if not, of course an attempt will be made to find some other occupation. Defective eyesight is quite common and people with defective eyesight should not be put in locations where they are particularly exposed to danger and injury if their eyesight is not good." This is another exemplification of the spirit of "safety first" that is becoming more and more an accepted principle of life. A man who is physically defective in but a small degree should not expect to obtain employment in an occupation where only the strongest can hope to succeed. The idea conveyed in the General Electric examination may serve to put the right man in the right place, to make a proper and sensible distribution of the working forces of a large corporation to the mutual advantage of employer and employed. The new law will make both sides that are affected by its provisions more careful, with the result of fewer accidents and less frequent occasions for calling it into operation. The great divergence of opinions in his matter of responsibility for accidents, some employers being liberal in their treatment of unfortunate employees, while others were indifferent and sometimes brutal, made the enactment of the present law possible. It is easy to be seen that cases may arise where the consequences to each party might produce hardships. The foresight of the General Electric management points the way to the minimizing of the hazards, as well as the resuting hardships. As time goes on and other thoughtful manufacturers take up the problem, we may reach a point where the humanitarian benefits will be accepted as more than balancing the financial elements of the enactment.—Lynn Item.

OVERWHELMING ODDS

Walter McQueen, a person of color, faced Justice Howard in the police court at Jackson, Tennessee, the charge against him being assault and battery on the person of Lily Belle Hopper. In addition to the battered complainant three of her friends appeared as witnesses against him.

The clerk read the warrant, beginning: "City of Jackson, Tennessee, against Walter McQueen"—and so on. The prisoner scratched his head, meantime contemplating the glowering faces of the chief witnesses for the prosecution.

"Please, suh, read dat fust part over agin to me," he requested.

"'City of Jackson, Tennessee against Walter McQueen,'" obliged the clerk.

"Well, jedge," said Walter, "ef de whole city of Jackson an' dese foah cullid ladies is organized ag'inst one nigger, what chance has he got? I's guilty!" —Saturday Evening Post.

PRUSSIANS AND GERMANS.

Prussia is Germany, at least so far as the rest of the world knows, for it is with Prussia, calling herself the Imperial German Government, that all international contracts are made. But though Prussia in so many and such important senses is Germany, are the Prussians Germans?

To be sure the Prussians always speak of themselves as the most German of Germans—as the very culmination of Germanism—but in other days not at all remote a questioner who encountered a Bavarian or a Saxon in one of his frequent moments of irritation against Prussians was sure to receive a wholly different estimate of their representative character. And there have been other denials of the Prussian claim.—New York Times.

LIQUOR LICENSE HEARING TODAY

Dorchester Residents Come to Our Aid

Mayor Campbell, President Whiton and Councilmen McGrath and Smith are attending this afternoon the hearing before the Licensing Board of Boston at the office of the Board, 1 Beacon street, appearing in opposition to the granting of licenses to sell liquor at Neponset. It is understood that there are two applicants for licenses, one for a grocer's liquor license and the other for a license to conduct a salon. The Mayor and committee will make a strong protest against the granting of any licenses in Neponset. They will point out that it is a transfer point of the street railway and that protection should be given the many women who use the street cars and transfer from one line of cars to another at this point.

The residents of Dorchester are also opposed to the granting of any more liquor licenses of any kind in Neponset and they will join with Quincy in making a protest. The Dorchester No-License association has taken up the matter and will send a delegation to the hearing, headed by Senator Sanford Bates, Representatives Samuel H. Mildram, Harrison H. Atwood and Joseph J. Benson.

The pastors of St. Ann's church at Neponset and the Walnut street Baptist and Congregational churches are also against the granting of licenses. The Civic Federation of Women's clubs, Rev. Simon B. Blunt of All Saint's church, Ashmont who has a mission at Neponset, as well as pastors of other churches in the immediate vicinity, will also voice their protest at the hearing.

IMPRISONED IN TELEPHONE BOOTH

The next time a well known Quincy young man seeks to communicate with his lady love through the instrumentality of a public telephone station he will take good care to inform the man in charge of the place where the booth is located and admonish him not to be in too much of a hurry to lock up so that his experience of Saturday night may not be repeated.

Although he intended to make the usual Sunday call upon the young woman time hung heavily on his hands Saturday night and in passing a hall on Arthur street he was struck with a happy thought. He would go in and use the public telephone and have a little chat. The thought immediately bore fruit and entering the telephone booth he was soon busily engaged in sending love messages over the telephone wires.

Time flew rapidly although the young man is willing to take his oath that the conversation was not over ten minutes duration. However, when he came from the booth his heart beating rapidly, he was surprised to find the hall in inky darkness. Thinking at first it might be a joke he was inclined to take it good naturedly, but as nothing but a dull echo responded to his cries he began to take the matter seriously. He did not relish the idea of spending the night on the hard benches of the hall.

Searching his pockets he dug out another nickle and dropping it into the little slot in the telephone box was soon in communication with the police into whose willing ear he poured his tale of woe. Would they help him? Sure they would. An officer was sent in search of the janitor. This was not an easy job and an hour or more elapsed before he was located and got to the hall to release the imprisoned lover.

Although his ardor was somewhat dampened when he came from his temporary prison he was nevertheless happy with the thought that only a few hours would elapse before he would be with the lady of his choice.

The last meeting of the season of the Philathea class of Bethany church was held Monday evening at the home of Miss Mabel E. Lovejoy on Huntly road. The meeting took the form of a flower party. The house was very prettily decorated with flowers and the guests of the evening were costumed to represent flowers.

Following the business meeting there was a pleasing entertainment, the program, a musical one, including a piano solo by Miss Ethel Humphrey, vocal solos by Miss Ida Mattson, songs by a trio composed of Miss Mattson, Miss Allan and Miss Lovejoy. The program, a most delightful one, closed with flower games.

PLAN OUTING ON ST. JOHN'S DAY

The committee of Quincy commandery, Knights Templars, having in charge the outing on St John's Day announce that the trip between Quincy and Middleboro, where the commandery will make its headquarters at King Philip Tavern, will be made by automobiles instead of electric cars as first announced.

Those intending to participate in the outing as well as Sir Knights owning automobiles are requested to report in front of the Asylum near the fountain in city square at 8.30. The start will be made as soon as possible thereafter. On arrival at the Tavern the committee has arranged a series of sports, not the least of which will be a base ball game. RUSH TO PAY POLL TAXES

From 7 o'clock until after 9 o'clock there was a long line of citizens waiting to pay their poll taxes. The fourteen days in which citizens had to pay their poll tax before summons are issued, expired Monday evening, which accounted for the rush. The line extended from the office of the tax collector down the main corridor and along the front of City Hall. They were not all men in the line, a number of women and young girls also being lined up, having been sent by the husband or father to pay the city the $2 tax. Inside the railing at the tax collector's office, Collector Curtis and several young women clerks were kept on the jump taking in money.

CONFIRMS CLAIM

Letter Received From Woman In Austria

Confirmation of the Italian claim that they have bombarded the works of the Whitehead Torpedo Co., at Fiume, Austria, and have caused a shut down was indirectly received in Quincy today from Mrs. Alice Hultman Eckart, whose husband Louis is superintendant of the works. The card stated that they were in Wien, Austria, and were on their way to Switzerland.

The card did not contain definite information but it is believed that if the works were in operation Supt. Eckart would still be in charge. The card intimated that there would be no question as to their safety when they crossed the border.

WATER STREET PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Clarence E. Campbell of the Water street Presbyterian church on Sunday evening preached the last of a series of sermons of the great doctrines of the church. The series has provd very popular and has drawn good audiences The subject Sunday was: "What Is Fundamental?" The speaker said in part:—

"Any unprejudiced observer, ignorant of the history and present condition of the Christian church, upon reading the New Testament would say: 'Surely here is a religion so simple, so vital and so spiritual that its followers can have no possible occasion for quarreling with one another.' And yet that is just what they have done. Christians are preeminently sectarian in their divisions and the history of the church since apostolic times is concerned mostly with the battles going on within its own fellowship—until today we have so many outward brands of Christianity, all differing in some respects, that one must necessarily ask the quesion: well, what is fundamental anyway?

"One of our most familiar hymns has as its opening line: 'Blest be the tie that binds.' Underneath all this outward dissimiliarity we know that there must be a tie that binds all true Christians; What is that tie? Is is a doctrinal or sentimental tie? I venture to affirm that it is neither. It is a tie, the tie of Christian experience. We can never hope to find a common basis in a common doctrine, for doctrine is one's definition or explanation of what we conceive the Christian life to be; and how we explain or define this Christian experience will depend somewhat upon our intellectual attainments. No two will honestly explain their experience of God in the same terms because it is not identically the same experience. And yet if we make doctrine or theology the common basis we must all affirm that we have had similar experiences and life is not so uniform as that; and the one who knows theology does not necessarily know God.

"We must go down to the fundamental reality itself, underlying all theology, and there find again our one foundation, our common faith, our elemental tie that binds. And that tie is the personal, spiritual experience of God in the soul of man. Here is the fundamental for this vital spiritual experience produced the Bible, the church, and all doctrines about which the battles are waged today. We have tried to make doctrines about Christ fundamental, instead of inciting to a real experience of Christ himself. If one has this experience of Christ in his soul we do not fear for his theology and he has a tie that will bind him to any one, who is honestly endeavoring to build the kingdom of Christ in the hearts of men. 'If any man is in Christ he is a new creature.' 'In Christ,' not believe something about Christ. That's experience and not theology. Out of that experience, life: in it, unity; after it, freedom. I see no way to a unified church, a revitalized Christianity, a convinced world, but this: the recognition of the one fundamental experience or Christian faith underlying all creeds, theologies, cults, enterprises.

"Oh, all ye fierce warriors of the faith, Augustinians and Pelagians, Luthers and Zwinglis, Anglicans and Dissenters, Puritans and Quakers, Old School and New School, Conservatives and Liberals, but one thing is needful—faith, love, Christ in the soul—personal experience of Christ.

"There are, it is true, certain simple cardinal doctrines growing directly out of experience, such as the Fatherhood of God, The Redemptive Personality of Christ, the Life Immortal, upon which we all agree. It is upon these, next to faith itself, that we should throw our common emphasis. Upon less essential doctrines we should agree to differ without disfellowshiping one another.

"And if you are living under a vital personal experience of Christ I don't care what you think of baptism, or your peculiar ideas of the church, or how you want to commemorate the Lord's Supper, or anything about your doctrine of inspiration of the Bible—you can become a member of my church. I would not exclude any who tell me that Christ is all in all. If you have this one experience, be you Catholic or Protestant, Christian Scientist or Spiritualist, you are my brother and belong to my church.

"It is no time to cherish misunderstandings and suspicions when the forces of materialism and immorality are flooding in upon us as they are today. When men and women are drifting from their moorings and out upon a sea of loneliness and despair, when young men and women are giving way to doubt and temptation, when foes of the kingdom are pointing the finger at a disunited and ineffective church, when the war-god of lust and blood is brutalizing the world and killing the finer virtues of human life, it is no time to be bickering among ourselves over theological and denominational differences. Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity—yes, how imperative if we would be true to the forward call of our common Master."

FIRST PARISH CHURCH.

The subject of Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson of the First Parish church Sunday morning was "The Children and the Church." He spoke on the importance of interesting the children in the church and of the pleasure it gave him to see the children with their parents in church. He pointed out that the future of the church and the country depended upon these children.

Announcement was made of the annual Sunday school and parish picnic to be held at Houghton's Pond, June 26. One of the features of the picnic will be a game of ball between the boys and their fathers.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

The beautiful floral decorations at the morning service came from Frederick H. Bishop and were much appreciated. In the devotional service the pastor made use of the new Unitarian sevice book and offered prayer for the bereaved. He also read the governor's proclamation of Flag Day and a beautiful poem "How beautiful it is to be alive," by H. S. Sutton. The sermon was upon "Habit" from the text "Train up a child in the way he should go and even when he is old he will not depart from it."—Proverbs 22: 6.

All the boys in the parish interested in starting a Junior base ball league are invited to meet at the Y. M. C. A. this evening.

At the Children's Sunday service the pastor will be assisted by the Sunday school superintendent, Mrs. H. C. Needham, and the chairman of the Sunday school committee, Fred M. Rollins.

The New England Home for Little Wanderers will dedicate its new building at 161 South Huntington ave. Boston, this afternoon.

Mrs. W. E. Rowe has returned from her Western trip which took her to the Pacific coast in the interest of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher associations.

A Social Service institute will be held at Meadville, Pa., July 19 to August 13 under the auspices of the Meadville Theological school and the Department of Social and Public Service of the American Unitarian association.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Boynton left Saturday for their annual vacation in North Sutton, N. H.

The annual June Festival will be held upon the grounds of Mr. Charles T. Baker, 215 Safford street, Friday evening and Saturday afternoon and evening, June 18—19.

The members and friends of the Wollaston Unitarian church are one in their praise of the clean and refined photoplays which they can see now in the parish house under the auspices of the social department of the church. It is understood that the minister in planning next year's church calendar will arrange a series of evening services in which moving pictures will be used to illustrate and enforce the moral and religious teachings of the Gospel.

Next Sunday will be observed as Children's Sunday There will be special exercises in which the children participate; a number of children will receive the rite of baptism; beautifully bound and suitably inscribed Bibles will be presented, in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of their baptism, to all members of the Sunday school that were baptized in the church in 1905, the annual collection for the relief of weary and careworn mothers and sickly and emaciated children will be received by four young misses and there will be a special sermon by the minister.

PARK AND DOWNS.

At the morning service Rev. Wm. B. Ayers took for his text Philippians 1: 13 "I can do all things in Christ Jesus, who strengtheneth me."

"The pitiful past of a lack of faith is that without faith a man is prompted to give up and do nothing," he said. "It is not for nothing that the rejection of faith is held up as the greatest crime. It is great in its cumulative power and it stultifies the whole man. When we examine ourselves none of us have the natural ability to perform the duties to which we are called.

"If we stop at self we give up. Having no confidence in our own strength we fear to go on. This is where faith makes the whole man. If we believe in God, His providence and His plan, then we have the courage to take the first step not seeing our way beyond. This is the secret of all success.

"It is the rare occasion when a man can see the end of what he is trying to do. Trusting only in one's own judgment makes cowards and selfish men. They will do nothing save what brings an immediate return to them and they will possess not the courage to do that of which they cannot see the end. An active, living faith in God is the most practical thing imaginable. Trusting God to carry him through his journey and bring him safely back the explorer plunges into the trackless wilderness or across the uncharted seas.

"Trusting in God to make the end possible, but not seeing it himself the boy starts to work his way through college or the man assumes a new task or enters a profession. History is a record of forlorn hopes led by men who had faith to take a step at a time and so achieve the end desired. No man can attain perfection at a leap and if he tries he will fail. He has not the qualities within him that make him perfect but if he starts with a reasonable faith in God and makes the required effort he can do all things in Christ Jesus who strengthens him."

THE GREEK ELECTIONS

War Party Returns Venizelos to Head of Government

Athens, June 15.—The Venizelos "war party" won an overwhelming victory in the Greek elections, latest returns show. At least 200 Venizelos deputies were elected, assuring the former premier a majority in parliament and making certain his return to the head of the government.

Venizelos' supporters organized a demonstration here when complete returns showed the former premier had swept Attica.

ROBBERY WAS NOT MOTIVE FOR CRIME

Morrison Is Held on the Charge of Murdering Hopkins

Pawtucket, R. I., June 15.—Charged with the murder of Leslie C. Hopkins, driver of a jitney bus, Herbert J. Morrison was held without bail for a further hearing on June 18. He pleaded not guilty.

Hopkins, who lived at Providence, had a jitney bus route from Olneyville through Broadway to Market street, Providence. The point in Pawtucket where he was found is near the Attleboro line, about five miles from his route.

When searched by Medical Examiner French, who viewed the body, there was found more than enough money to cover his day's receipts, so the police do not believe that robbery could have been the motive for the shooting.

HEARING NOT COMPLETED

Governor to Hear Further Argument In the Frank Case

Atlanta June 15.—Testimony for and again Leo M. Frank, presented at his trial and in subsequent court proceedings, was reviewed before Governor Slaton at the hearing on Frank's application for commutation of his death sentence. When the hearing is resumed Wednesday, W. M. Howard will complete his argument in behalf of Frank and the case then finally will be submitted to the governor.

Solicitor Dorsey, in his argument, undertook to sonvince the governor of Frank's guilt on the testimony of other witnesses than Jim Conley, the negro who was convicted as an accessory after the murder.

Howard also relied upon the record to show Frank's innocence. He declared the trail of he murderer led from the "murder notes," which were found beside the girl's body, and which Conley testified he wrote at Frank's dictation.

SLAYER GIVES SELF UP

Surrenders to Police After Brutally Murdering His Wife

Boston, June 15.—"I have killed my wife," said a man who walked into the Hanover street police station late last night and asked Lieutenant Barry to arrest him for drunkenness.

The man was Michael Amoroso, 25 years old, living on the fourth floor of a tenement house. The murder was a brutal one. With their mother dying on the floor with her throat cut from ear to ear, her 3 and 1-year-old babies slept peacefully on a bed only a few feet away.

MRS. JESSE I. LITCHFIELD.

Services for Jennie Bartlett Field, wife of Jesse I. Litchfield of Arlington street, Wollaston, were held at the home Monday afternoon and largely attended. The service, simple but impressive, was conducted by her pastor, Rev. Carl G. Horst of the Wollaston Unitarian church, assisted by Rev. A. L. Hudson of the First Parish church of Quincy, a family friend and pastor for many years in Buffalo at the church attended by Mrs. Litchfield's sister, Mrs. Frederick Potter.

There was a wealth of flowers, covering the casket and every available space in the room. Burial was at Mount Wollaston cemetery.

Mrs. Litchfield was the youngest daughter of John Q. A. Field of Independence avenue and passed all her life in Quincy. She had a large circle of friends, her bright cheerful personality attracting and holding them. She did much for her friends being ever ready to do for them even at sacrifice of her own time and strength. So strong, so capable, so ready to help if needed or equally ready to enjoy social affairs that the sudden passing out came as a great shock and sorrow to hosts of friends.

On Monday, June 7th, she attended a meeting of the Junior Friday club and the following Monday the club attended her funeral services.

To the devoted and bereaved husband and only daughter Silvia much sympathy is extended.

ARE TO MARRY.

Mr. and Mrs. James Barton of 186 Phipps street announce the engagement of their daughter, Jennie Rankin, to John Wallace Murray of Kendrick street. Both are well known South Quincy residents. The marriage will probably take place in the fall. The groom to be is a brakeman on the N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R.

GRIDLEY BRYANTS WIN CHAMPIONSHIP OF CITY

Crowley's Pitching Defeats Leader of National League

SCHOOL CHAMPIONS.

1915—Gridley Bryant
1914—Mass. Fields
1913—Willard
1912—Mass. Fields
1911—Wollaston
1910—Willard

The Gridley Bryant grammar school of the American league beat the Montclair team of the National league in the second and last game of the world's series at Merrymount park Monday afternoon and won the championship of the city by a score of 6 to 2. It was the first time the school has won that honor since the school base ball was organized six years ago but it is the third time it has gone to Ward four, the Williards having won it two years.

Crowley and Corella were big features in securing the victory. Crowley drove out a homer and scored a man, fanned ten men and got two assists. In the second inning men reached first on a hit and an error but Crowley tightened up and fanned the next three men. In four other innings he fanned two men and fanned the third out in the last inning.

The Gridleys started out to finish the series in fine style. They got to Mellanson who started pitching and held on to him for three innings. Then Miss Lucy Hennigan, manager of the team, ordered a change in the lineup. Pope came in from scond, Mellanson went to second, Thompson went in at third from left field, Lemieux was taken out, and Hayes sent in at left field.

The change came too late however, although Pope didn't allow a hit the rest of the game.

Young O'Neil choked off a run in the sixth inning when he threw out Miller at home, after Pope had scored on his catch of a long fly.

The cup will be presented next week and will probably be given this year by the Board of Park Commissioners of the city. It will be presented to Principal Andrew Johnson, master of both schools, and he will make the formal presentation to his winning team, which beyond any doubt is the best combination of the school ball players the city has ever seen.

Young Corella injured his finger in the third inning when he was struck by a widely thrown ball. He was game and in the succeeding excitement forgot all about it.

The Gridley's runs in the first inning were scored in quick fashion. Ferriter hit and stole second and third. Burgess, trying to nail him, overthrew the base and allowed the run. Corella hit and was scored on Crowley's homer.

In the second inning Gagaro reached when Burgess dropped the third strike, was advanced on Corella's sacrifice. He and Bennett got home on Haggerty's hit. Amet was passed and Haggerty was caught between third and home. He ran back and forth, dodged the men and scored.

Callahan scored for Montclair on a hit by Burgess and Pope scored on the catch in left field by O'Neil. The score:

An enjoyable whist party was held Monday evening at the home of Miss Marion Pineo on Cross street in aid of the Crescent street table of the coming St. Mary's lawn party.

There were fifteen tables in play and the lady's prize was won by Miss Laura Lamb. The man's prize was awarded to "Ted" Minahan. The consolation prize went to Sarto Minahan. A special prize was given to Walter Monahan.

After the whist a social hour followed in which Richard Hussey and Joseph Hagen entertained with several selections. They were accompanied on the piano by Leo Kenny. Refreshments were served.

RE-ELECTS CAMPBELL

The annual outing of the Texile Machinery Manufacturing association was held Monday and included a harbor trip and dinner. The party after enjoying a harbor trip in the steamer "Frances" made a landing at Hull where dinner was served at the Boston Yacht club house. Following the dinner a business session was held at which Frederick H. Bishop of Woilaston was re-elected president of the association and Mayor Chester I. Campbell secretary and treasurer. It was also voted to hold an exhibition of textile machinery the last week in April, 1916, and Mayor Campbell was appointed as manager of the exhibition.

The Seventeenth is to be quite generally observed as a holiday in this city. The banks and most of the business houses are to close all day.

RUSSIANS ARE FORCED BACK

Lose Positions Along a Forty-Three-Mile Front

16,000 ARE MADE PRISONERS

Great Victory Claimed by Germans For Mackensen's Forces in Galicia—Italian Troops Make Slow but Steady Progress, but Meet Strong Resistance—French Capture Heavily Fortified Ridge, While Germans Also Claim Victory—Several More Ships Prey of German Submarines

London, June 15.—Berlin claims a sweeping victory over the Russians in Galicia. The German offensive, which was checked at Zuravno, has been resumed on a wider front and farther to the north.

According to the statement of the German war office, the army under General von Mackensen has taken the Russian positions on a line extending forty-three miles on the front between Sieniawa and Cyerniawa, northwest of Mosciska, and that in the operations resulting in the capture of those positions 16,000 prisoners fell into the hands of the Austro-Germans.

Farther to the southeast the Austrian section of the line extends from Halicz to a point twenty miles from the Russian frontier. The chief action on this part of the line at present, aside from sporadic raids into Bessarabia, appears to be the Austrian efforts to capture a bridge head at Halicz, efforts which are still unsuccessful.

In the north the Berlin statement claims slight advances northwest of Shavil, in the Kovno provinces and on the road between Mariampol in Suwalki province and Kovno.

The Petrograd View

Newspaper reports from Petrograd say that the objective of the new Austro-German move in the struggle on the Dniester, or even the direction of this attack, are not yet apparent. The present crossing is sixty miles further down the Dniester than the Zuravno attempt, and it seems to Petrograd military experts as if the Germans were giving a wider sweep to their efforts to turn the Russian left.

The Russian official report does not admit any defeat northwest of Mosciska, merely mentioning the locality where the action is said to have taken place, in a paragraph which declares that the Austro-Germans, after heavy losses in the region of Mosciska, did not resume the offensive.

According to Petrograd the Austro-Germans have made another crossing of the Dniester, where a brilliant cavalry charge at Zaleszczyky resulted in a local Russian success, but no claim is made that the invaders were pushed back across the river.

Some of the more optimistic critics in Petrograd express the opinion that in consequence of the recent defeat suffered by the Teutonic allies their attempt at Lemberg has been abandoned and the army aiming at the Galician capital has broken in two and separated from the army in Bukowina. These writers also incline to the view that Mackensen's army is moving toward Poland and that it will resume the effort to reach Warsaw.

Italians Continue Advance

Occupation of the Carinthian town of Valentina by the Italians is announced officially at Rome. Along the Isonzo river a battle of large proportions has been in progress for several days. Although the Italians apparently have won some advantages, the Austrians have brought up reinforcements and are offering a determined resistance.

In the three weeks that have elapsed since the declaration of war by Italy on Austria, the Italian forces have been making slow but steady progress. The Italian efforts at present are being directed mainly at Trieste, with the peninsula of Istria, in which lies Pola, Austria's chief naval station, as their great objective.

The Italians have already occupied important strategic points along the Isonzo river, which they have crossed, and for several days a battle of really large proportions has been in progress in this section of Austrian territory.

From the Italian side it is reported that Plava has been occupied, but this is denied by the Austrian war office.

The Austrians are said to have brought 45,000 men and sixty-four batteries to aid their defense guarding Goritzia, Trieste and other important towns, against which the Italians are advancing. It is expected that the Italian movement, which is now getting under full swing, will necessitate the bringing of heavy Austrian or German forces from other battle fronts, for the Austro-Italian frontier is large and the Italian troops and artillery are pressing forward in great numbers.

On the Western Front

The French have consolidated the positions captured by them at Souchez and Neuville St. Vaast, attacking the ridge to the north of the sugar mill of Souchez. Although several hundred feet high, the ridge is dominated by the French guns on the recently captured plateau of Notre Dame de Lorette.

The ridge was heavily fortified as well as the approach at its foot, but could not resist the French assault launched with great vigor, which landed the attackers on the crest, from which the Germans were driven by the bayonet argument.

Subsequent furious bombardment failed to dislodge them and they have now, in their turn, strongly consolidated their new position, thus materially reducing the German chance of successful resistance at Givenchy.

Contrary to this French official statement the Germans issued an official statement reporting a severe defeat for the French between Arras and Lievin.

"We repulsed strong French attacks on our positions on both sides of the Lorette hills and on the Neuville-Reckincourt front with heavy losses," says the report.

German Subarines Still Busy

German submarines have blown up several more ships in the waters surrounding Great Britain.

The British steamer Hopemount, of 3300 tons, was sunk off Cardiff, Wales. Four members of the crew were wounded by shells fired from the German craft.

The British steamer Desabla was torpedoed. She hailed from Glasgow and her tonnage was 6047.

The Danish schooner Katrine arrived in the Firth of Forth, having on board the crew of the Danish schooner Cross Marstal, which was seized and burned in the North sea by a German submarine.

Word was received of the destruction of the British steamship Arndale, 3583 tons, by a mine in the White sea, off northern Russia. The Arndale was carrying munitions of war to Archangel.

CHICAGO CITIZENS ARE "HOOFING IT"

Car Service Tied Up by Strike of 14,500 Railway Men

Chicago, June 15.—The first day of the big Chicago street car strike passed without serious mishap. No surface cars were run, and only few trains on the elevated. A brick thrown through a window of an elevated train was the only violence.

The quiet of the day was not accepted by the police authorities as assuring continued tranquility. Chief of Police Healy said he would ask authority to enroll 1000 extra policemen to be available for disorder when the companies attempt to operate.

The strike has thrown 14,500 persons out of employment, 1310 miles of single, elevated and surface track were rendered idle and a burden thrown on the steam roads, automobiles, vans and other vehicles which they were able to meet only in small part.

The strike was declared because the employes wanted a guarantee of increased wages which, according to the company, would mean an added expense of $1,400,000 a year, too large a sum to be granted.

SENTENCE WILL STAND

Supreme Court Refuses to Review Conviction of Caminitti

Washington, June 15.—F. D. Caminetti lost his fight in the supreme court for a review of his conviction in violating the Mann white slave law. The court denied the application, without opinion.

Caminetti, who is the son of A. Caminetti, commissioner general of immigration, was found guilty with Maury I. Diggs of transporting, for improper purpose, two girls from Sacramento, Cal., to Reno, Nev. He was fined $1500 and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment.

This was the first case under the Mann law to reach the supreme court, in which the commercial element was absent. The review was asked on the ground that the law is not applicable to cases in which only immorality is involved, and that, further, if it is applicable, it is unconstitutional.

Diggs was sentenced to two years' imprisonment and a fine of $2000.

WARDEN ON THE JOB

Catches Prisoner In His Arms and Frustrates Suicide Attempt

New York, June 15.—Hyman Liebman, a prisoner in the Tombs about to have been placed on trial for murder, jumped from the fourth tier of the prison cells forty feet into the arms of Warden Hanley.

The latter had heard the keepers shout, looked up and braced himself to catch Liebman as he fell. From possible death or serious injury on the stone flagging Liebman escaped with only a shaking up and a few bruises. Hanley was bruised but not badly hurt.

Liebman was under indictment on a charge of killing his 7-year-old child, Sadie, by throwing her out of a window at his home last March. Another child, Samuel, aged 5, was thrown from the window and sustained injuries which he will bear through life.

EACH NATION SURE OF FINAL VICTORY

Sentiment Prevailing In Capitals of Countries at War

New York, June 15.—Nelson O'Shaughnessy, who was the United States official representative in Mexico in the critical days that preceded the taking of Vera Cruz and was later assigned to the American embassy at Vienna, reached New York aboard the Cunarder Orduna in response to cable instructions from Washington to report to the secretary of state.

O'Shaughnessy sailed from this port Sept. 9 last for Vienna, where he was secretary of the American embassy. He said he had been also in Budapest, Berlin, London, Paris and Rome, and that in the capital of each of the warring nations the population seemed supremely confident that the outcome of the struggle would be in their favor. He declined to comment upon the significance of his recall.

"AN AMAZING FABRICATION"

Stahl's Affidavit as to Lusitania Guns Is Thus Branded

New York, June 15.—Agents of the department of justice, who have been investigating the allegations that the Lusitania carried guns, branded as an amazing fabrication the affidavit of Gustav Stahl, the German reservist who swore he saw four six-inch guns on the Cunarder.

Stahl's statement said he saw the artillery when he carried the trunk of Neal J. Leach, a Lusitania steward, aboard the liner.

The secret service men say Stahl never took the trunk aboard the steamship because Leach's trunk is now in possession of the government and never left his former boarding house until they took charge of it. It was ascertained, though, that Stahl and Leach were acquainted.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Nash, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

CHAPTER VI.

In Camp.

FOR several miles they rode upward through golden forests of aspens. On either hand rose thick walls of snow white boles, and in the mystic glow of their gilded leaves the face of the girl shone with unearthly beauty.

Twice she stopped to gaze into Wayland's face to say, with hushed intensity: "Isn't it wonderful? Don't you wish it would last forever?"

Her words were poor, ineffectual, but her look, her breathless voice, made up for their lack of originality. Once she said: "I never saw it so lovely before. It is an enchanted land!" with no suspicion that the larger part of her ecstasy arose from the presence of her young and sympathetic companion. He, too, responded to the beauty of the day, of the golden forest as one who had taken new hold on life after long illness.

Meanwhile the supervisor was calmly leading the way upward, vaguely conscious of the magical air and mystic landscape in which his young folk floated as if on wings, thinking busily of the improvements which were still necessary in the trail and weighing with care the clouds which still lingered upon the tallest summits, as if debating whether to go or to stay. He had never been an imaginative soul, and now that age had somewhat dimmed his eyes and blunted his senses he was placidly content with his path. The rapture of the lover, the song of the poet, had long since abandoned his heart. And yet he was not completely oblivious. To him it was a nice day, but a "weather breeder."

"Don't you wish it would last forever?"

"I wonder if I shall ever ride through this mountain world as unmoved as he seems to be?" Norcross asked himself after some jarring prosaic remark from his chief. "I am glad Berrie responds to it."

At last they left these lower, wondrous forest aisles and entered the unbroken cloak of firs whose dark and silent deeps had a stern beauty all their own.

The horses began to labor with roaring breath. A dozen times he thought, "We must be nearly at the top," and then other and far higher ridges suddenly developed. Occasionally the supervisor was forced to unsling an ax and chop his way through a fallen tree, and each time the student hurried to the spot, ready to aid, but was quite useless.

"One of the first essentials of a ranger's training is to learn to swing an ax," remarked McFarlane, "and you never want to be without a real tool. I won't stand for a hatchet ranger."

The sky was overshadowed now and a thin drizzle of rain filled the air. The novice hastened to throw his raincoat over his shoulders, but McFarlane rode steadily on, clad only in his shirt sleeves, unmindful of the wet. Berrie, however, approved Wayland's caution. "That's right; keep dry," she called back. "Don't pay attention to father, he'd rather get soaked any day than unroll his slicker. You mustn't take him for a model yet awhile."

He no longer resented her sweet solicitude, although he considered himself unentitled to it, and he rejoiced under the shelter of his fine new coat. He began to perceive that one could be defended against a storm.

After passing two depressing marshes, they came to a hillside so steep, so slippery, so dark, so forbidding, that one of the pack horses balked, shook his head and reared furiously, as if to say, "I can't do it, and I won't try." And Wayland sympathized with him. The forest was gloomy and cold and apparently endless.

After coaxing him for a time with admirable gentleness, the supervisor, at Berrie's suggestion, shifted part of the load to her own saddle horse, and they went on.

Wayland, though incapable of comment, so great was the demand upon his lungs, was not too tired to admire the power and resolution of the girl, who seemed not to suffer any special inconvenience from the rarefied air. The dryness of his open mouth, the throbbing of his troubled pulse, the roaring of his breath, brought to him with increasing dismay the fact that he had overlooked another phase of the ranger's job. "I couldn't chop a hole through one of these windfalls in a week," he admitted, as McFarlane's blade again liberated them from a fallen tree.

He was beginning to be hungry also—he had eaten a very early breakfast—and he fell to wondering just where and when they were to camp, but he endured in silence. "So long as Berrie makes no complaint my mouth is shut," he told himself. "Surely I can stand it if she can." And so struggled on.

Up and up the pathway looped, crossing minute little boggy meadows on whose bottomless ooze the grass shook like a blanket, descending ravines and climbing back to dark and muddy slopes. The forest was dripping, green and silent now—a mysterious menacing jungle.

"I'm glad I'm not riding this pass alone," Wayland said as they paused again for breath.

"So am I," she answered, but her thought was not his. She was happy at the prospect of teaching him how to camp.

At last they reached the ragged edge of timber line, and there, rolling away under the mist, lay the bare, grassy, upward climbing naked neck of the great peak. The wind had grown keener moment by moment, and when they left the storm twisted pines below its breath had a wintry nip. The rain had ceased to fall, but the clouds still hung densely to the loftiest summits. It was a sinister yet beautiful world—a world as silent as a dream, and through the short, thick grass the slender trail ran like a timid serpent.

"Now we're on the divide," called Berea, and as she spoke they seemed to enter upon a boundless Alpine plain of velvet russet grass. "This is the Bear Tooth plateau." Low monuments of loose rock stood on small ledges, as though to mark the course, and in the hollows dark ponds of icy water lay, half surrounded by masses of compact snow.

"This is a stormy place in winter," McFarlane explained. "These piles of stone are mighty valuable in a blizzard. I've crossed this divide in August in snow so thick I could not see a rod."

Half an hour later they began to descend. Wind twisted, storm bleached dwarf pines were first to show, then the firs, then the blue green spruces, and then the sheltering deeps of the undespoiled forest opened, and the roar of a splendid stream was heard. But still the supervisor kept his resolute way, making no promises as to dinner, though his daughter called: "We'd better go into camp at Beaver lake. I hope you're not starved," she called to Wayland.

"But I am," he replied so frankly that she never knew how faint he really was. His knees were trembling with weakness, and he stumbled dangerously as he trod the loose rocks in the path.

They were all afoot now descending swiftly, and the horses romped down the trail with expectant haste, so that in less than an hour from timber line they were back into the sunshine of the lower valley, and at 3 o'clock or thereabouts they came out upon the bank of an exquisite lake, and with a cheery shout McFarlane called out, "Here we are, out of the wilderness!" Then to Wayland, "Well, boy, how did you stand it?"

"Just middling," replied Wayland, reflecent from weariness and with joy of their camping place.

With businesslike certitude Berrie unsaddled her horse, turned him loose and lent a skillful hand at removing the panniers from the back animals, while Wayland, willing, but a little uncertain, stood awkwardly about. Under her instruction he collected dead branches of a standing fir, and from these a few cones kindled a blaze, while the supervisor hobbled the horses and set the tent.

One by one the principles of camping were taught by the kindly old rancher, but the hints which the girl gave were quite as valuable, for Wayland was eager to show her that he could be and intended to be a forester of the first class or perish in the attempt.

McFarlane went further and talked freely of the forest and what it meant to the government. "We're all green at the work," he said, "and we old chaps are only holding the fort against the thieves till you youngsters learn how to make the best use of the domain."

Berrie was glowing with happiness. "Let's stay here till the end of the week," she suggested. "I've always wanted to camp on this lake, and now I'm here I want time to enjoy it."

"We'll stay a day or two," said her father, "but I must get over to that ditch survey which is being made at the head of Poplar, and then Moore is coming over to look at some timber on Porcupine."

The young people cut willow rods and went angling at the outlet of the lake with prodigious success. The water rippled with trout, and in half an hour they had all they could use for supper and breakfast, and, behold, even as they were returning with their spoil they met a covey of grouse strolling leisurely down to the lake's edge. "Isn't it a wonderful place?" exclaimed the happy girl. "I wish we could stay a month."

"It's like being on the Swiss Family Robinson's island. I never was more content," he said fervently. "I wouldn't mind staying here all winter."

"I would!" she laughed. "The snow falls four feet deep up here. It's likely there's snow on the divide this minute, and camping in the snow isn't so funny. Some people got snowed in over at Deep lake last year, and nearly all their horses starved before they could get them out. This is a fierce old place in winter time."

As the sunset came on the young people again loitered down to the water's edge, and there, seated side by side on a rocky knoll, watched the phantom gold lift from the willows and climb slowly to the cliffs above, while the water deepened in shadow and busy muskrats marked its glossy surface with long slivery lines. Mischievous camp birds peered at the couple from the branches of the pines, uttering satirical comment, while squirrels, frankly insolent, dropped cones upon their heads and barked in saucy glee.

EX-MAYOR MAY BE SELECTMAN

Bryant of Orleans Visits Quincy

Citizen Charles M. Bryant, of Orleans, Mass., was in Quincy Monday evening and as he passed through City squarehe was greeted by several of his friends. Although now a legal resident of Orleans, the genial ex-Mayor has not lost his interest in Quincy and follows closely the work of the City Council, in which he served for so many years.

One of the friends whom he met in City square started to jolly the ex-Mayor as to his alleged candidacy for selectman of Orleans and also told him a story to the effect that his particular "friend" on the Board of Assessors was thinking of becoming a resident of Orleans. "He will get thrown overboard if he does," came the quick reply. He volunteered the information that one of his long time political enemies in Wollaston had recently purchased a summer residence in Orleans.

Mr. Bryant was very enthusiastic over the many natural advantages of the town of Orleans speaking of what a beautiful place it was and declared that his own residence was particularly pleasantly situated.

AT THE THEATRE

THE AUDITORIUM.

The feature picture at the Auditorium theatre Wednesday and Thursday will be an adaptation of George Broadhurst's famous dramatic success, "The Man of the Hour." The stage version of the play is too well known to need much comment. Suffice it to say that "The Man of the Hour" was one of the most successful political plays produced on the American stage in the last decade. The photoplay is a worthy successor to the stage version and the fact that Robert Warwick plays the title role is sufficient assurance that the acting of Mayor Garrison is all that can be desired.

The particular "graft" that Mr. Broadhurst attacked is a scheme on the part of a machine "boss" and a shrewd financier to put a bill through the New York City council which would give to a traction company a group of perpetual franchises. The passage of that bill would be a great pecuniary gain for many parties, while it ties the city up forever so that competition for franchises would be unknown. Election is near at hand and in looking about for a suitable candidate for the mayoralty who could "be handled," young Garrison, who has earned for himself a large fortune is selected as the most likely man. The young man is in love with the niece of the financier, and she has told him that before she could promise to become his wife, he must prove himself and do something. The mayoralty is his opportunity. He accepts the nomination, and after a strong fight is elected. The franchise bill in the course of time passes the council and comes to the mayor for his signature. But Garrison, realizing that it is a steal, steadfastly refuses to sign. All sorts of pressure is brought to bear, and for a time it would appear that his course would cost him not only his sweetheart, her entire fortune, but take her from him. In the end strict honesty proves to be the best policy, and despite obstacles, which seem almost insurmountable Garrison wins his sweetheart.

KINCAIDE'S

With a bunch of pretty girls Lew Orth's Musical Comedy Co., is the stellar attraction at Kincaide's this week. "The Diamond from the Sky" continues its interest and there is a Keystone comedy which brings its full measure of laughter. The theatre is soon to install a new motion picture machine, now on exhibition in the window of C. C. Hearn, the City square druggist.

THE GOOD SIGN.

Walking from Hope to Hayfield by a path over the moors, writes a correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, I found the hills covered with snow.

A freezing east wind made things anything but pleasant. At one point I had to admit that I had lost my way, and it was with relief that I found a signpost. The inscription was blotted out with frozen snow.

I climbed the post, and with great difficulty and personal discomfort thawed the snow off with my already half-frozen hand, and succeeded in deciphering the inscription. It said: "Keep to the path."—London Globe.

They have thoroughly overhauled the car and it is in prime condition. The trip is one of great possibilities and will afford an exceptionally fine opportunity to view the country.

BARELY ESCAPE SERIOUS INJURY

Two Autos Collide on Washington Street

A man, a woman, and two children, escaped injury about 7.30 this morning when their auto, numbered 37693, collided on Washington street with an auto of the Fleischman Yeast Co. and was forced across the street to the fence guarding the brook at the junction of Washington street and Revere road.

The machine was preceeding toward City square at slow speed when the crash occurred. The Fleischman auto had been stopped at the store of Joseph Sweeney and is said to have swung in the path of the approaching auto.

The police say the auto is registered to Joseph A. Ham of 20 Roosevelt street, Mattapan.

BRITAIN WILL RELAX ORDER

Yields to American Demands on Sea Blockade

EMBARGO TO BE MODIFIED

Change of Tactics Has Not Halted Preparation of New Note at Washington, as Many Cargoes Are Still Detained—President Wilson Pleased at Evidence of German Friendliness

Washington, June 15.—The administration has been advised informally that Great Britain will soon modify the rigors of its blockade against the north coast of Europe. This information has been conveyed to the president through British diplomatic channels.

The British government unofficially excuses its delay in answering this government's note protesting against the interference with American commerce to neutral ports in Europe, and says the reply has practically been ready to dispatch to Washington for several weeks, but that the British foreign office felt it would be unwise to give new life to the controversy while the German-American situation was at such a critical stage.

It is understood this same sentiment still prevails in the British government, but that Sir Edward Grey and the other members of the cabinet have taken cognizance of the growing agitation here in favor of a sharp note to Great Britain, and have decided to forestall such an exigency, if possible, by administrative changes in the orders-in-council.

In other words, according to the information conveyed to the president, Great Britain in practice will concede the right of American ships to trade with neutral countries, as she has already conceded the legal right to do so.

According to authoritative information, the receipt of the informal notice of Great Britain's intention to change its tactics has not stopped the preparation of a note to that government.

Even though within the next few days the administration of the British naval blockade should be made more lenient toward American commerce destined to such neutral ports as Rotterdam or Copenhagen, the United States government has many scores to settle with Great Britain.

Since the warning sent to London on March 30, which the British government has never answered, there have been many cases where American cargoes destined for Danish and Scandinavian ports have been and still are detained by the British admiralty.

This warning apparently has had no effect, and one of the reasons why the note to Great Britain has been so long in preparation is that the state department has been instructed to lay before the president a complete history of each case of detention of an American ship or cargo. The purpose of the president was to make a strong case out against Great Britain, and upon that base a request for immediate assurances that the unlawful interference with American commerce shall cease.

Not since the negotiations with Germany began has President Wilson felt so hopeful of a favorable outcome as he does today.

To friends he expressed himself as feeling confident that the recent note would result in a full understanding with Germany, and that submarine warfare, as far as American citizens and American ships are concerned, would be placed on a satisfactory basis.

The president's confidence is based on official dispatches from United States Ambassador Gerard in Berlin, as well as unofficial dispatches not only from the German capital but from important German centres.

Gerard has reported that the note has been received with every evidence of cordiality in official circles. Even more remarkable is the general tendency in the German press to discuss the note from a standpoint of friendliness and to seek a common front for the establishment of cordial relations between the two countries.

We can't add anything to the front of "superdreadnought," so we must now invent "Superdreadnought destroyers."

A QUESTION OF TIME.

When James A. Garfield was president of Oberlin college a man brought for entrance as a student his son, for whom he wished a shorter course than the regular one.

"The boy can never take all that in," said the father. "He wants to get through quicker. Can you arrange it for him?"

"Oh, yes," said Mr. Garfield. "He can take a short course; it all depends on what you want to make him. When God wants to make an oak He takes a hundred years, but He only takes two months to make a squash."—Ladies' Home Journal.

SESSION BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Fire Department Investigators Call Witnesses

The special committee of the City Council appointed to investigate the fire department held another session behind closed doors Monday evening at the West Quincy fire station. In addition to a number of firemen on duty the night of the fire at the granite sheds on Willard street, were several citizens said to have been present at the fire. Just what was brought out by the testimony was not made public. It is a question if the committee will be able to complete its investigation in time to submit a report at the meeting of the City Council next Monday evening. The Council, however, may grant the committee further time if it sees fit.

It is reported that the witnesses examined Monday evening were District Engineer Louis K. Badger, Firemen James Dillon, who was on the witness stand for an hour, Herbert Griffin, Henry Hughes, Michael Barry and John Dinneen. It is also understood that other witnesses examined were William H. Teasdale and Neil McDonald, one of the proprietors of the granite yard on Willard street which was burned. The committee made an effort to have other citizens appear but they were unable to do so on account of previous business engagements.

QUINCY REPRESENTED AT LICENSE HEARING

Board Takes Neponset Applications Under Advisement

Quincy's emphatic and unanimous protest against the issuance of additional licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors at Neponset, was filed with the Board of License Commissioners for the City of Boston Tuesday afternoon, when nearly thirty Quincy citizens appeared in opposition to the applications for these privileges, filed by William N. Hackett & Co. and D. P. Power & Co. Nearly two hundred persons, men and women, appeared in opposition, mostly residents of Dorchester and Neponset, and for nearly three hours the Board listened to their opposition to the issuance of the licenses. A half-dozen residents of Neponset appeared in favor of the applications.

Chairman Dean presided at the hearing, and Commissioners Gow and Wood were in attendance, in addition to Secretary Epple of the Board. The hearing-room of the Board was not nearly large enough to accommodate the interested citizens. The Board announced that they had made some changes in policy in connection with the hearings and requested the newspapermen not to report the proceedings, and also that every speaker would be heard as an individual and the only examination of witnesses allowed would be by the members of the Board.

The applicants were W. N. Hackett & Co., for a second class license at 443 Neponset ave., and D. P. Power & Co., for a fourth class license at 406 Neponset ave. A fourth class license is for a bottle store and a second class license is for a bar where only beer and light wines might be sold. W. T. A. Fitzgerald appeared for Power and Mr. Hackett appeared personally for his application.

Senator Sanford Bates of Dorchester headed the opposition, and the pastor of every Dorchester church was recorded in opposition to the licenses. Among the Quincy people who appeared and spoke in opposition were Mayor Chester I. Campbell, President Whiton and Councilman Smith, the special committee from the City Council, City Solicitor Pinkham, Senator Langelier, Representative Ericson, President Fegan and Secretary Hall of the Board of Trade, Rev. A. L. Hudson, of the First church, Treasurer Sedgwick of the Fore River Company, Atty. J. J. McAnarney, George A. Sidelinger, Melville P. Hayward, of Bethany church, and Secretary Gaskell of the Y. M. C. A.

In addition to the Quincy people the business men in the Neponset district also spoke in opposition to the matter. The Quincy case was based on the assumption that, as abutters, the City of Quincy had rights in the matter, and that the licenses were asked for, not to supply Neponset, but to make a bid for Quincy business. Quincy's long no-license record was mentioned and the feeling of the people of Quincy in opposition to the liquor traffic was laid before the commission. The proponents of the licenses said that the permits, if issued would liven up business in Neponset, and criticised the opposition from this city, as they stated that it was a distinct Boston matter. At the conclusion of the hearing, the Board took the matter under advisement.

BLUES HAVE FAST PLAYERS

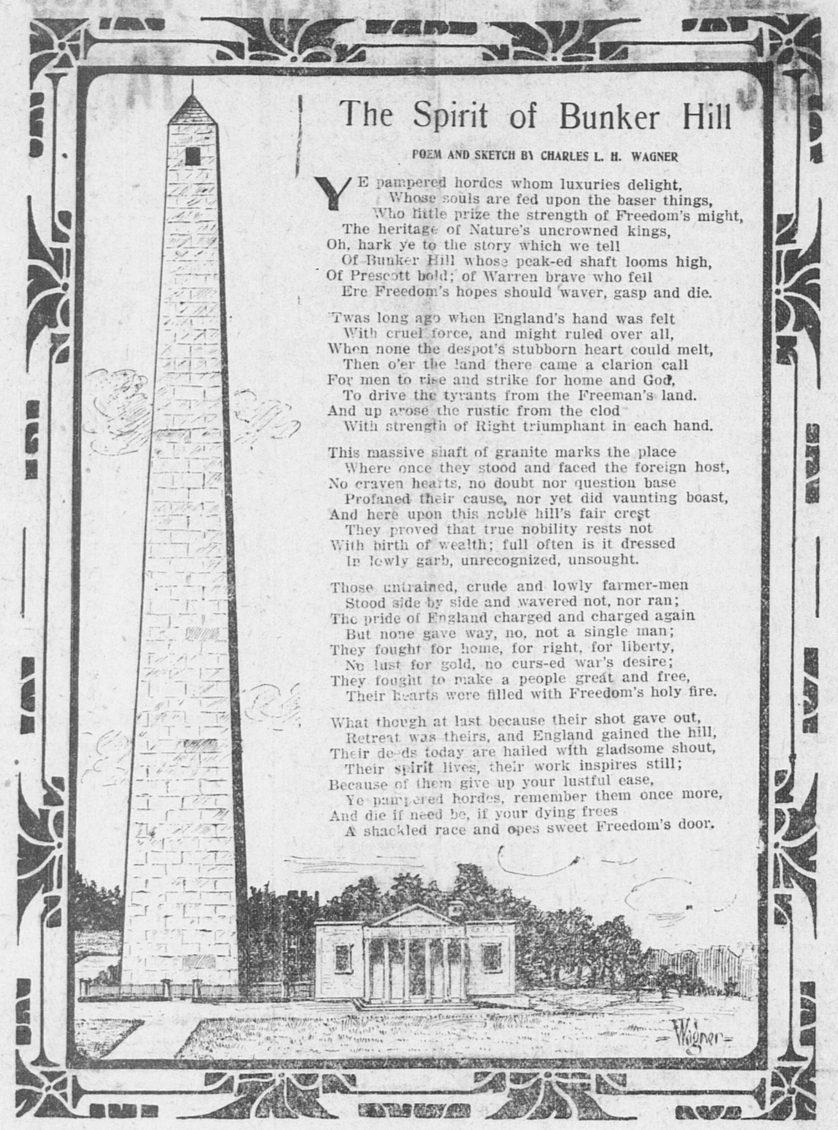

Will Tour Maine on Summer Schedule

The Blues, an organization of local ball players, leave here on June 30 for a tour of Maine. A schedule of 63 games has been arranged by Manager Joseph Ford and includes contests with the teams of the Maine trolley and Eastern Maine leagues and independent teams.

The Blues combination is a strong one and so far consists of Stan Bates, Wes Ganzel, Frank Hoyt, Frank Gillis, Willie Cane, Lewie Courtney. The fielders have not been chosen as yet.

The team should go through the series with flying colors. As a fielding combination it will probably be as strong as any in the game and if they do any hitting the majority of the games should be victories. The team will return in the fall.

The Spirit of Bunker Hill

POEM AND SKETCH BY CHARLES L. H. WAGNER

YE pampered hordes whom luxuries delight,
Whose souls are fed upon the baser things,
Who little prize the strength of Freedom's might,
The heritage of Nature's uncrowned kings,
Oh, hark ye to the story which we tell
Of Bunker Hill whose peak-ed shaft looms high,
Of Prescott bold; of Warren brave who fell
Ere Freedom's hopes should waver, gasp and die.

'Twas long ago when England's hand was felt
With cruel force, and might ruled over all,
When none the despot's stubborn heart could melt,
Then o'er the land there came a clarion call
For men to rise and strike for home and God,
To drive the tyrants from the Freeman's land.
And up arose the rustic from the clod
With strength of Right triumphant in each hand.

This massive shaft of granite marks the place
Where once they stood and faced the foreign host,
No craven hearts, no doubt nor question base
Profaned their cause, nor yet did vaunting boast,
And here upon this noble hill's fair crest
They proved that true nobility rests not
With birth of wealth; full often is it dressed
In lowly garb, unrecognized, unsought.

Those untrained, crude and lowly farmer-men
Stood side by side and wavered not, nor ran;
The pride of England charged and charged again
But none gave way, no, not a single man;
They fought for home, for right, for liberty,
No lust for gold, no curs-ed war's desire;
They fought to make a people great and free,
Their hearts were filled with Freedom's holy fire.

What though at last because their shot gave out,
Retreat was theirs, and England gained the hill,
Their deeds today are hailed with gladsome shout,
Their spirit lives, their work inspires still;
Because of them give up your lustful ease,
Ye pampered hordes, remember them once more,
And die if need be, if your dying frees
A shackled race and opes sweet Freedom's door.

INSTALLING NEW TURBINES

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation is installing new turbines in the dreadnought Nevada. One was set last week and the second has received its shop test and will be put in this week. The turbines are stronger than the specified turbines and are put in by the company at its request. The unpleasant experience with the engines of the Rivadavia prompted the company to take the step, involving an expenditure of $250,00.

CHICAGO STREET CAR STRIKE IS CALLED OFF

Parties Agree to Submit Differences to Arbitrators

(By United Press)

Chicago June 16—The great Chicago street car strike was called off at five o'clock this A. M. Full service on all elevated and surface lines was resumed before noon. Agreement to end the transportation problem was reached following an all night conference at the office of Mayor Thompson. The striking factions conceded certain points and agreed to arbitrate the others. The points to be discussed are maximum wages and the wage scale.

The mayor was vested by both sides with full power to act as umpire on points in dispute. Abitrators will be named within three days and the sides will have a week to prepare. No time is set for the finish of the hearings.

Arrangements to resume service were immediately made. Professional strike breaking firms in the east have been notified to withdraw 3000 men speeding toward that city. Six thousand strikebreakers, recently brought to the city were paid off and sent back to their homes.

DAVENPORT GETS THREE MONTHS IN COUNTY JAIL

Six Other Larceny Charges Against Him Are Continued

Frank Davenport, arrested in connection with the larceny of yacht fittings from the Baker Basin at Quincy Point, was given three months in the House of Correction this morning after he changed a plea of not guilty to guilty on a charge of larceny of 11 Pyrene fire extinguishers, valued at $77.

Four complaints charging breaking and entering and larceny and two charging larceny were preferred against him and continued to Aug. 31. Efforts to make restitution for this property will be made in the meantime, it is said.

The breaking, entering and larceny charges are as follows—a Pyrene fire extinguisher, valued at $10, from the "Eyoto" of William H. McClaskey of Boston; a compass valued at $25 from the "Red Pepper" of Charles A. James of Quincy; two Pyrene fire extinguishers, valued at $12 from the "Elsie III" L. C. Cummings of Brookline; a compass and binocle valued at $30; two Pyrene extinguishers valued at $12, a barometer valued at $25 and two platinum ignitors, valued at $35, from the "Helen M" of J. M. Hurley of Rockland, Me.

The larceny complaints charge him with the theft of a binocle and compass, valued at $30, from the "Cornet" of Louis M. Crosscup of Wollaston and a steering wheel valued at $30 from the "Typhoon" of W. G. Kittredge of Clarktown, Va.

Atty. J. J. McAnarney represented the defendant and Inspector Goodhue conducted the prosecution. There were several conferences at the bench. A half dozen yacht owners attended the hearing.

Inspector Rooney of the Boston police was also present and is interested in the alleged operations of the young man. He and Inspector McAuley were with Inspector Goodhue when Davenport was arrested in Boston two weeks ago.

The defendant has met the police more than half way they say since he was taken into custody and they claim he has admitted the part he played in the disappearance of many fittings. It is understood that he has submitted to the police a list of articles taken. Inspector Goodhue has located property he believes to total about $1000 in value.

Davenport has been somewhat of a mystery to the police who have been unable to find a reason for his alleged thefts. They say he did not smoke, chew, drink or swear and had respectable friends. His room on Massachusetts avenue, Boston, was well furnished when visited by the officers.

It is probable that the Quincy and Boston police will co-operate in an effort to find to what extent Davenport is concerned in the theft of fixtures from yachts. Inspector Goodhue has said he wouldn't be surprised if it was found that the goods taken reached from $3,000 to $4,000 in value and that the plants affected included those in South Boston, Marblehead, and Neponset.

Davenport's father was in court this morning. The boy made his home with him until a year ago when his mother died.

JUNE SEVENTEENTH.

The needlessness and horrors of the Great War now devastating the nations of Europe and murdering her peoples have created within us such an abhorrence that we are likely to feel that all wars have been needless and unjustified. Of course nothing is further from the truth. Hardly any war, horrible though it may be, is an unmitigated evil.

Among the just wars, the wars whose results have redounded to the benefit of civilization, was the American Revolution. One of the incidents of that war, the Battle of Bunker Hill, we will observe on Thursday. In comparison with the engagements of the Great War the Battle of Bunker Hill was but a minor skirmish but in the history of this country it was a notable event.

On the 16th of June 1775, the American commanders learned that the British at Boston under Gen. Gage intended to seize and fortify Bunker Hill on the evening of the 18th. Determined to forestall the enemy 1500 Americans under Col. Wm. Prescott seized Breed's Hill. On the 17th the British moved to the attack. Twice they were driven back by the gallant band which obeyed Prescott's famous order not to fire until they saw the whites of the enemy's eyes.

On the third assault of ammunition of the defenders ran low and they were obliged to fight hand to hand. They struggled bravely but finally were obliged to retreat because of the overwhelming numerical superiority of the British. The British loss was 1050, the American 450.

The men who made so gallant a stand against the British attack were not trained soldiers. Most of them knew how to handle a musket but at best they were only militiamen. Courage counted more in those days than it does now. Training counts today. The local Machine Gun Co., would prove much more effective in a similar case today than Col. Prescott and all his 1500 men, brave though they were.

QUINCY'S JUST RIGHT.

There is no question that the sentiment in favor of having a session of superior court in this city is amply justified. The matter was well threshed out at the meeting of the committee on municipal improvements of the Board of Trade which was held Monday evening.

It is too much to expect, for the present at least, that Quincy should be made the county seat. Norfolk county has too much money invested in public buildings in Dedham to make it feasible at this time to abandon them unless they can be disposed of to advantage, which seems impossible at this time.

But it is not too much to expect that the convenience of the inhabitants of Norfolk county who have business in court shall receive some consideration. Quincy should have at least one session a year of the superior civil court, extending this to twice a year as soon as possible.

Quincy in Norfolk county occupies much the same position as Brockton in Plymouth county. Plymouth is the county seat of the latter county but it is nearly as inaccessible as Dedham and there are two yearly sessions of the superior civil court, including naturalization sessions. The only city in Norfolk county is entitled to the same consideration as the only city in Plymouth county.

WHY THE DELAY?

Water bills for the coming six months which usually go out the first of June are still being held up waiting for the new water rates to be fixed. While the special committee of the City Council, which with the Mayor has been investigating the water department, has not yet made its report it is understood that as a result of what has been learned by the expert employed by the Mayor in order to place the department on a paying basis the rates will have to be advanced. This is an executive function and it is understood that the Mayor has decided to advance the rates, which will go into effect and be made public through the bills sent out the first of June.

The eight or ten thousand bills are made out and all that is needed to make them ready to mail is to add the amounts. This however can not be done until the powers that be make up their minds what the rates shall be. It would have been much better owing to the shortness of time that the new rates should not go into effect until the December bills.

Probably those ferocious Belgian women and children referred to in the German White Book were as completely armed as the Lusitania.

The colonel does not mind those fractured ribs as much as he does his shattered reputation as a rough rider.

Anyway you cannot unscramble a steel omelet.

June roses need restarching after all the rain in May.

Carranza is as garrulous as the Arabian Nights barber—and about as convincing.

Out of respect for the brides the would-be divorces ought to declare a truce until July.

Switzerland might do a tremendous business just now by exporting those Alps to flat countries.

Strange that Germany did not protest before the fact that the Lusitania was sailing armed.

Getting a municipal reform inaugurated is almost as difficult as getting a broken window pane replaced.

GRANITE PAVING BLOCK.

There is ample evidence that the granite paving block is coming back into popularity aften ten years of experience of cities with other material for permanent paving. As Milford is one of the largest producers of paving stones of any place in the country the information is both interesting and significant. The granite block paving stone has a black eye in many localities because of laying it upon sand or other unscientific foundation, which has resulted in cracks and breaks. The blocks when laid scientifically make one of the best, smoothest and cleanest pavings. The upkeep is exceedingly small. In rainy weather it is less slippery for horses and automobile tires. Its only objection is that it is more noisy. The modern method of laying paving blocks with a thick coating of tar and cement makes a road as smooth or smoother than macadam and much more durable. Brooklyn has recently laid twenty-five miles of paved streets. —Milford Cabinet.

ABOLISHING MASHING.

In some cities campaigns have been started against street mashing, although the condition in those places is probably no worse than in others. In Brockton, for instance, police are instructed to abate the nuisance so far as they may. It is especially in evidence Wednesday and Saturday nights, when the Brockton stores are open and the streets crowded. The annoyance of women by words and stares by men—not all of them young men either—is common in most communities. In some the offense goes beyond annoyance. The masher is a pest and he should be "run in" whenever he is caught and made to pay for his incivility.—Framingham News.

A STRIKING PARALLEL.

There is a striking parallel in the loss of life on the Titanic and the Lusitania. On the former an Astor was lost; on the latter a Vanderbilt. On the former a theatrical manager Harris; on the latter Charles Frohman Onthe former a writer, Jacques Futrelle; on the latter Justus Miles Forman. On the former William T. Stead; on the latter Elbert Hubbard; on the former Isador Straus, a philanthropist; on the latter Lindon Gates, Jr., all of them world wide figures.—Franklin Sentinel.

Children of Cranch and Adams Schools In Party

The members of the graduating classes of the Adams and Cranch grammar schools left City square at one o'clock this afternoon in a special car of the Bay State Street Railway Co. for a trip to points of historic interest in Boston and vicinity. In view of the fact that Thursday is the 140th anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill the visit to the Bunker Hill monument at Charlestown perhaps aroused the greatest interest amonk the youthful sightseers.

There were sixty children in the party, in charge of A. S. Townsend, principal of both schools, who was assisted by Miss Crane of the Cranch school and Miss Egan of the Adams school. As the car left the square, the children, imbued with a regular picnic spirit, cried their good byes with great vigor and drew a large crowd of curious spectators.

Visits were made to various points of historic interest in Boston and Cambridge, including the Old South church, Faneuil hall, Harvard University and many other points of interest. An announcer of the company furnished a description and history of each place. The trip was in charge of Traffic Solicitor Walter S. Belyea, who made all the preliminary arrangements. It is thought possible that other schools will follow the example set by the Cranch and Adams schools.

HAD NO LIGHTS ON HIS BICYCLE

The session at the district court Tuesday came near being held for civil cases only, no criminal business being on the list. But Attoria Di Tullio appeared and was arraigned for not having a light on his bicycle. His case was filed on payment of $3 costs.

Di Tullio was to have come before the court Wednesday. He got mixed in his dates however and was arraigned Tuesday when he appeared.

Di Tullio was summoned to court by Patrolman Broberg and was the first one before the court for riding his bicycle without lights at night. The police expect to take further action against offenders and many summonses may be issued before the summer is over.

TALKS TO ODD FELLOWS.

Ezra Gifford of Newton, representing the American Board of Missions, gave an interesting talk before Mt. After the lecture refreshments were served.

Mrs. John Woodman of Royal street leaves Thursday for an indefinite visit with her son Ernest Woodman of New Rochelle, New York.

RECEPTION TO CRADLE ROLL

Eighty Children Attend Bethany Church Affair

The annual reception to the cradle roll of Bethany church was held in the church parlors Tuesday afternoon and although the weather was not such as would argue well for a large attendance there were eighty children present, of four years of age and under, a very large part of whom were accompanied by their mothers. During the afternoon the younger of the children had a grand time playing with blocks and games. It was known as a daisy reception and daisies were the flowers used in the decorations.

During the afternoon Mrs. Willena Reed of Winthrop, gave an interesting talk to the mothers. At the conclusion of Mrs. Reed's talk light refreshments were served and a souvenir given to each child. This consisted of a box of candy on the top of which was a card bearing the child's name and a paper daisy. The reception was in charge of Mrs. W. F. Sidelinger.

She was assisted by a willing corps of workers, who helped much to make the affair a success.

Ice cream, cake and fancy crackers were served by, Misses Esther Beckford, Alice Parker, Ada Williams, Marjorie England, Marjorie Johnston, Beatrice Marnock, and Marjorie Sidelinger, who wore caps and aprons decorated with daisies.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

IN COMMENDATION.

Editor of the Ledger:

Dorchester citizens are immensely indebted to Quincy and your citizens have just cause for pride in the magnificent representation of your political manufacturing and moral forces Tuesday before the Boston Licensing Board. The occasion was a hearing on two applications for Licenses a second and a fourth class at Neponset.

I believe that not merely your senator and a representative but your mayor, city solicitor and members of the council together with heads of your great manufacturing interests, the Citizens No License League and Y. M. C. A. forces all voiced the opposition of Quincy to this foul attempt to plant a pest on your border.

Including the Dorchester contingent I never knew a protest so representative and strong of all that stands for the material and moral interests of the people.

At the opening the chairman ruled that all reporters must leave, therefore no publicity will be given.

The speakers all confined themselves distinctly to the points at issue, and the arguments were of such a character as to leave no comfort for the petitioner.

The training of your No License workers was splendidly demonstrated in their handling of the subject.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Do You Read Labels?

Domestic science teachers and food authorities are urging the housewife to carefully read the labels on all food articles.

The laws of most States compel food manufacturers to print the ingredients of their products on the label, and this enables consumers to distinguish healthful foods from those which may be deleterious.

High-grade baking powders are made of pure cream of tartar, derived from grapes. Royal Baking Powder is a type of the highest grade. It is healthful beyond a doubt and the safest and best to use.

The low-grade baking powders are made from alum, a mineral acid salt, or phosphate of lime.

Consumers can learn the character of the baking powder by referring to the label, which must state whether the contents include cream of tartar, alum or phosphate.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

At the Adams school on last Thursday a few of the books destined to be read in the vacation contest of the Children's room, were introduced most successfully by Miss Ella Packard, an assistant at the Library. The audience was most appreciative and generously applauded after each story. One hundred and thirty-six boys and girls were present from the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th grades, so the stories were told in the large hall.

The "Pinocchio" stories were introduced first; then "Tilda Jane" by Saunders; "Don Quixote" by Saavedra, and the "Bat Who Wouldn't Go to Bed," one of Pierson's charming animal stories. At the close of the story-telling, a game book was introduced by a few boys who volunteered their services.

It is most gratifying to note that the registrations of Adams school children have increased and that many of the children have visited the Library in response to the invitation to enjoy the books of the Children's room.

SAYS LUSITANIA WAS NOT ARMED

British Attorney General Makes a Specific Denial

INQUIRY BEGINS AT LONDON

Captain Turner Testifies That Liner Was Running at Reduced Speed Upon Orders From Cunard Company—But Two Questions to Consider In "Design to Murder"

London, June 16.—"The Lusitania was not armed, and she never was fitted out as a transport," was one of the remarks made by Sir Edward Carson, attorney general in the new cabinet, in addressing the court at the opening of the board of trade inquiry into the loss of the Cunard liner which was sent to the bottom off the south coast of Ireland on May 7 by a German submarine with a loss of over 1100 lives.

Captain Turner of the Lusitania placed responsibility for the Lusitania's comparatively slow speed on the Cunard company, his employers. "We were proceeding at only eighteen knots when the ship was struck at 2:15 p. m.," he testified, "though the average speed throughout the journey from New York had been twenty-one knots; it was impossible to make twenty-five knots because the company ordered only nineteen boilers worked.

"I saw the torpedo coming just before it struck. There was a loud explosion between the third and fourth funnels. I immediately ordered full speed astern, but there was no response. The engines had been put out of commission. The vessel within a few moments had listed about fifteen degrees, rendering the port lifeboats practically useless.

"I gave orders that women and children should be placed in the boats first, and then went to the bridge. I remained there until the vessel sank."

Turner said he did not know how long he was in the water. He was picked up by a trawler, he said, and landed at Queenstown. He admitted on direct examination by Carson, the board of trade's representative, that he had received certain instructions from the admiralty, but he was not pressed to tell what these were.

He denied under oath that the liner carried guns, either concealed or on the decks.

On cross-examination Turner said he was fully cognizant of the danger to which the Lusitania was exposed from submarines. The lookouts were doubled, he said, and orders given for full speed ahead if a periscope were sighted. Everything possible was done, he said, to save the lives of the liner's passengers after she was struck.

While the captain was still under cross examination, Lord Mersey, the presiding justice, ordered an adjournment to an ante-room, where the questioning of the Lusitania's master was continued in private. It was understood that at this secret inquiry Turner was asked about the instructions the admiralty issued to steamship commanders passing through the war zone and whether he obeyed these instructions.

When asked whether the passengers were giving help as far as they were able, he replied: "Interfering, I should say." He added, however, that the passengers showed a desire to assist in every way possible.

Speaking of modern steamship hands, the captain said they were not as efficient as the old-fashioned sailormen, who would have been more effective in the work of rescue.

In addressing the court Carson remarked that the question of speed would be important. Certain specific information was sent by the British admiralty by wireless telegraphy to the Lusitania, but these instructions are not to be made public, and this part of the evidence is to be taken in private.

"It is quite evident," said Carson, "that one of the main questions for the consideration of the court will be these instructions and how far the captain of the Lusitania acted upon them.

"As a rule the first question to be decided in an investigation of this kind is how the accident occurred. In this case we know that there was no accident, and that there was a premeditated design to murder. The real questions arising are only two: First, as to the navigation of the ship, having regard to the instructions and information conveyed by the admiralty; and second, as to whether everything was done that could be done after the ship was torpedoed."

Uncle Sam's Big Cable Bills

Washington, June 16.—The European war is swelling the government's cable toll into larger figures. The state department's bill for cables last month reached $18,000. One month recently the cable bill rose to $30,000.

British Naval Casualties

London, June 16.—Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons that the British naval casualties to May were 13,547.

Cabinet's Resignation Declined

Lisbon, June 16.—The Portuguese cabinet resigned en bloc, but the resignations were not accepted.

FIRST AID IN INDUSTRIES.

State To Form Industrial Hygiene Corps.

The State Board of Labor and Industries has inaugurated a state-wide organization of wage-earners into an industrial hygiene corps for the purpose of giving to persons injured or taken ill upon the premises in the various lines of industry, intelligent first aid attention and at the same time establishing a system of medical reports from the various industries of the state. This undertaking is undoubtedly one of the most comprehensive and far-reaching organizations for bettering the health and reducing illnesses among wage-earners ever undertaken in any state in the country.

There are in Massachusetts more than 600,000 wage-earners in the various industries. Accidents and illnesses in one degree or another are occurring continually in shops, factories and industrial establishments. Much of the seriousness of these cases depends upon the kind of attention given to the person at the time of the accident or at the onset of an illness. Very often life itself depends upon the cool, intelligent action of a fellow worker present at the time. it is not always practical to have a doctor or a nurse on the premises,—although very many of the industries of the state are now maintaining such professional supervision over their employees,—nevertheless it is possible and feasible to have in each establishment and in every department of the establishment one or more persons sufficiently instructed and trained to render safe first aid care until the arrival of the physician, or in the case of sudden illness, to prevent a delay in sending for medical assistance whenever a doctor is necessary.

There are innumerable occasions of simple accidents and illnesses which can be cared for at the time by persons who have been specially instructed. Too often these simple conditions are neglected or improperly treated, and, as a result, serious illness, incapacity and loss of wages result. It is said that more than 4 percent of the population of Massachusetts is on the sick list all the time from illnesses which are preventable.

The persons appointed as hygiene assistants, instructors or supervisors will be adequately instructed not only to render suitable temporary surgical and medical aid, but likewise instructed in the early signs and symptoms of the common affections and illnesses. These various assistants will also be in the best possible position to give to the medical department of the State Board of Labor and Industries a regular report on the illness or accidents occurring in various lines of industrial life and the consequent loss of time resulting from such illness. These data are not available anywhere today and are most essential in the fight against occupational diseases and accidents now being undertaken by the State Board of Labor and Industries.

The persons selected to act as industrial hygiene assistants will be graded according to the conditions existing in the various mercantile and industrial establishments. The number and rank of the persons so selected will depend upon the number and kind of wage-earners being protected. At the head of each division, however, there will be a physician or other specially trained person or chief to whom the assistants will be responsible. These chiefs will be in close touch with the medical deputy commissioner of labor, Dr Thomas F Harrington.

The Legislature has given to the State Board of Labor and Industries the authority to require all industrial concerns to keep and maintain free of expense to the employees a medical and surgical chest containing plasters, bandages, absorbent cotton, gauze and all other necessary medicines, instruments and appliances for the treatment of persons injured or taken ill upon the premises. Also to require that suitable accommodations shall be provided for the treatment of persons injured or taken ill upon the premises. Many places of employment are now equipped with such a medicine chest, and in many establishments a physician, nurse, social worker, foreman or forewoman has been placed in charge of the supervision of the health of the employees.

In addition to this corps of health supervisors, the medical department of the state militia is instructing a large number of its officers and privates each year on problems of personal hygiene, exercise, rest, sanitation, etc. These men are chiefly employed in the manufacturing and mercantile establishments. Adjutant-General Cole and Surgeon-General Frank P. Williams of the State Militia have both endorsed this plan of health supervision and have promised their cooperation in fitting the lectures and demonstrations given in the militia to conditions likely to be met in the various industries of the state. In many localities the surgeons of the militia, in addition to the physicians associated with the many industrial and mercantile establishments, will be requested to act as chiefs of the various divisions of industrial hygiene assistants. Lectures and demonstrations of a practical nature will be given by these various medical authorities upon the various dangers of industrial life as well as upon the prevention of occupational diseases. All the instruction will be of such a practical nature that it can be carried out not only in the shops, factories and industries of the State, but also in the homes of the wage-earners. Edwin Mulready, Commissioner of Labor and Industries, believes that this will give to Massachusetts an organization for bettering the health conditions among its people far in excess of that possessed by any other state in the country.

HULTMAN GETS HIS UNIFORM

Machine Gun Company Go to C mp on Thursday

Arthur B. Hultman, court officer and the largest man in the state militia, received his olive drab uniform at the regular drill of the Machine Gun company in the Alpha armory Tuesday evening. Mr. Hultman was one of the first to pass the surgeon's test but because no uniform included in the issue was large enough state tailors were obliged to make one to order. It required nearly twice as much cloth as the uniform of the ordinary sized man.

Lieut. George M. Downes, commander of the company, entertained Lieut. Albert Jones of the regular army, now staticned in the Canal zone, during the evening. Lieut. Jones was very complimentary in speaking of the showing of the men.

The commander announced that Sergt. Charles Starbird would take the company out on a tour of duty on the 17th of June. The circular issued ordered the assembling of the company at the armory at 7.30 sharp, from which point they will proceed to a camp of instruction near North Weymouth.

The men will wear the olive drab service uniform with campaign hat, service belt with pistol and bolo, olive drab shirt and leggings, and regulation shoes, and will carry haversack, canteen and dipper and collar rolls.

The rolls will include shelter tent with pole and five pins, olive drab blanket, poncho, two towels, handkerchiefs and soap.

The company will be in camp the greater part of the day. It was intended to go out the night before but plans were changed at the last moment.

The pitching of the first bivouac camp is looked forward to by the enlisted men. Instruction during the day will be preliminary training in ficid work, in preparation for the mobilizing of the 6th Regt. at its headquarters at Lowell.

The noonday meal of the company will be prepared at the camp. The men will provide the food, each taking three slices of raw bacon, two potatoes, one or two onions, two table spoonsful of ground coffee, about a quarter pound of hard-tack, a small quantity of sugar, salt and pepper. Each man will also provide himself with a pencil and a memo-book.

SPORTING COMMENT

Fore River and C. H. Bird & Son are tied for first place in the Manufacturers league. The local team has a chance to take another victory Saturday from the University Press. The visitors will be full of pep, and will pitch Seth Wade, of Lynn, who was such a schoolboy southpaw wonder, and later with Plymouth Cordage. Carrigan of Somerville will catch. Fore River will use Knight and Duggan.

A real local game, between the Makarias and Fore Rivers will be played at Merrymount park on the holiday afternoon. Jenkins and Bates, with Fore River in 1914, will play with the Makarias. It may be the only time this season two real local teams will face each other.

Did Wolgast quit? The information furnished by Alex McLean of the Atlas A. A. indicates he did. If so, good night to him as far as Boston is concerned.

There is one combination of men in the city who can afford to be good sports and laugh off questioners. They are the members of a committee investigating the fire department. No "info" of any kind is available to the public they say until after the score is completed by Miss Gertrude Hughes, official stenographer.

Sports are better patronized this summer than for several seasons and autos transport many fans. There seems to be millions of them but of course there isn't in our state alone. Sunday 104 autos were held up at Milton by a passing train.

Pete Sullivan, who starred some years ago as a Quincy Point catcher, will don the glove and mask this week for the first time in five years. He will catch for the Herald reporters against the Traveler staff at Peddocks Island.

No, dear passerby, those naked forms in the woods off Merrymount park last Saturday were not nymphs. They were only visiting ball players, changing to citizens clothes. You know there is no dressing room on the field, although one has been needed for years.

Gus Kendall of Atlantic, who loves base ball as well as composing music, which art he plys, declares the Gridley Bryant team one of the best juvenile combinations he has ever seen.

Perhaps next year, the team winning the city championship will be awarded the cup on the field. That took place but once and then the late William T. Shea, mayor at the time, had the honor of presenting to a team representing the Willard school, the alma mater of his boyhood.

The Quincy Tennis club easily won the championship of the Suburban league. Councilman James H. Slade, a member of the team, has represented the club since it was organized in 1885.

The Board of Trade committee to which the proposed cross country run was referred should lose no time in making a report. We respectfully commend to them and the local merchants its fine advertising features. Quincy has been on the map every other way. Why not try a new one.

"Fay" Phelan, the runner, although out of the hospital is under the care of physicians.

We believe the Quincy High school players used more judgement in electing Eddie Bryan, captain, than they did during the base ball season.

KING PASSES CRISIS

Immediate Danger of Constantine's Death Has Been Removed

Athens, June 16.—The surgeons who operated on King Constantine issued a statement, prior to their departure, that the worst phase of the king's illness was over and that all immediate danger had been removed.

The hope, they added, was justified that the king would soon become convalescent, although complete recovery would be necessarily slow.

SAID TO BE HIGH GERMAN OFFICIAL

Story That "Meyer-Gerhard" Has Hoaxed the United States

New York, June 16.—The Tribune publishes a copyrighted story that Dr. Anton Meyer-Gerhard, German Red Cross lecturer and Count von Bernstorff's special envoy to the imperial government, who landed yesterday in Christiana, Norway, has perpetrated a gigantic hoax on the state department of the United States.

He is none other than Dr. Alfred Meyer, privy councillor of the first rank, chief of the department of army supplies of the imperial German ministry of war, according to the Tribune.

The real Dr. Meyer-Gerhard's name was assumed by Meyer, it is claimed, and the protecting mantle of the Red Cross thrown about him that his identity and true mission to the United States to buy war supplies might not become known to those outside German officialdom.

JAIL SENTENCES AND FINES

Result of Worcester Crusade Against Baseball Pool Promoters

Worcester, Mass., June 16.—The scene in the police crusade against baseball pool selling shifted to the local police court when eleven defendants were arraigned.

Two received sentences to the house of correction, seven were fined, and the remaining two were dismissed. The testimony disclosed that half a dozen baseball pools have been doing a rushing business in this city since the season opened.

Street car conductors, jitney drivers, business men, a newsboy and a printer were included among the defendants found guilty of pool selling or promoting.

His age, 64 years, and the fact that the disease has not reached its crisis have caused some apprehension as to his recovery.

The officers elected:

Chief Companion—Mrs. Ida Ericson.

Sub Companion — Mrs. Matilda Johnson.

Recording Secretary—Miss Ellen Anderson.

WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION.

In the July Woman's Home Companion two letters are published which the editors say they cannot answer. They ask readers to send in suggestions as to how the questions in these letters should be met. One letter is from a woman who wants to get married and does not know what to do about it. The other is from a man who wants to get married and does not know what to do about it. The difficulties that stand in the way of marriage as outlined in these two letters are very real and probably exist in tens of thousands of cases.

Lively fiction is contributed by Grace S. Richmond, Mary Hastings Bradley, Owen Oliver, Mary Brecht Pulver and Margaretta Tuttle. For the outdoor girl five little articles are contributed—one for the girl who swims, another about a honeymon tramp, a third about a down-cast clambake, a fourth about the girl and the garden, and the fifth about the girl who goes camping.

The regular fashion, cooking, housekeeping, better babies, handicraft, young people's and "About People" departments complete an interesting number.

WEST STREET A. A. WIN.

The West street A. A. defeated the Willard A. A. Tuesday evening in a very exciting game played at Spring Pasture. This game opened the second week of the Sheep Rock Twilight league. The final score was 7 to 5. The battery for the winning team was Bailer and Marini and for the losers Schatzel and Pangraze.

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berea McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the supervising ranger of Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Nash, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

Wayland forgot all the outside world, forgot that he was studying to be a forest ranger, and was alive only to the fact that in this most bewitching place, in this most entrancing hour, he had the companionship of a girl whose eyes sought his with every new phase of the silent and wonderful scene which shifted before their eyes like a noiseless yet prodigious drama.

Seated Side by Side on a Rocky Knoll.

At last the girl rose. "It is getting dark. I must go back and get supper."

"We don't need any supper," he protested.

"Father does, and you'll be hungry before morning," she retorted, with sure knowledge of men.

He turned from the scene reluctantly, but once at the campfire cheerfully gave his best efforts to the work in hand, seconding Berrie's skill as best he could.

The trout, deliciously crisp, and some potatoes and batter cakes made a meal that tempted even his faint appetite, and when the dishes were washed and the towels hung out to dry deep night possessed even the high summit of stately Ptarmigan.

McFarlane then said, "I'll just take a little turn to see that the horses are all right, and then I think we'd better close in for the night."

When they were alone in the light of the fire Wayland turned to Berrie: "I'm glad you're here. It must be awesome to camp alone in a wilderness, and yet, I suppose, I must learn to do it."

"Yes, the ranger often has to camp alone, ride alone and work alone for weeks at a time," she assured him. "A good trailer don't mind a night trip any more than he does a day trip, or if he does he never admits it. Rain, snow, darkness, are all the same to him. Most of the boys are fifteen to forty miles from the postoffice."

He smiled ruefully. "I begin to have new doubts about this ranger business. It's a little more vigorous than I thought it was. Suppose a fellow breaks a leg on one of those high trails?"

"He mustn't!" she hastened to say. "He can't afford really to take reckless chances; but, then, father won't expect as much of you as he does of the old stagers. You'll have plenty of time to get used to it."

McFarlane upon his return gave some advice relating to the care of horses. "All this stock which is accustomed to a barn or a pasture will quit you," he warned. "Watch your bronchos. Put them on the outward side of your camp when you bed down and pitch your tent near the trail, then you will hear the brutes if they start back. Some men tie their stock all up, but I usually picket my saddle horse and hobble the rest."

It was a delightful hour for schooling, and Wayland would have been content to sit there till morning listening, but the air bit, and at last the supervisor asked: "Have you made your bed? If you have turn in. I shall get you out early tomorrow." As he saw the bed he added; "I see you've laid out a bed of boughs. That shows how eastern you are. We don't do that out here. It's too cold in this climate, and it's too much work. You want to lug the ground—if it's dry."

The weary youth went to his couch with a sense of timorous elation, for he never before slept beneath the open sky.

After the supervisor had rolled himself in the blanket, long after all sounds had ceased in the tent, there still remained for the youth a score of manifold excitations to wakefulness till at last he fell into an uneasy drowse.

CHAPTER VII.

Storm Bound.

WAYLAND was awakened by the mellow voice of his chief calling: "All out! All out! Daylight down the creek!" Then, breathing a prayer of thankfulness, the boy sat up and looked about him. "The long night is over at last, and I am alive," he said and congratulated himself.

"How did you sleep?" asked the supervisor.

"First rate—at least during the latter part of the night," Wayland briskly lied.

"That's good. I was afraid that Adirondack bed of yours might let the white wolf in."

"My blankets did seem a trifle thin," confessed Norcross.

"It doesn't pay to sleep cold," the supervisor went on. "A man wants to wake up refreshed, not tired out with fighting the night wind and frost. I always carry a good bed."

It was instructive to see how quietly and methodically the old mountaineer went about his task of getting breakfast. First he cut and laid a couple of eight inch logs on either side of the fire, so that the wind drew through them properly; then, placing the Dutch oven cover on the fire, he laid the bottom part where the flames touched it. Next he filled his coffeepot with water and set it on the coals. From his pannier he took his dishes and the flour and salt and pepper, arranging them all within reach, and at last laid some slices of bacon in the skillet.

At this stage of the work a smothered cry, half yawn, half complaint, came from the tent. "Oh, hum! Is it morning?" inquired Berrie.

"Morning," replied her father. "It's going toward noon. You get up or you'll have no breakfast."

Thereupon Wayland called: "Can I get you anything, Miss Berrie? Would you like some warm water?"

"What for?" interposed McFarlane before the girl could reply.

"To bathe in," replied the youth.

"To bathe in! If a daughter of mine should ask for warm water to wash with I'd throw her in the creek."

Berrie chuckled. "Sometimes I think daddy has no feeling for me. I reckon he thinks I'm a boy."

"Hot water is debilitating and very bad for the complexion," retorted her father. "Ice cold water is what you need. And if you don't get out o' there in five minutes I'll douse you with a dipperful."

This reminded Wayland that he had not yet made his own toilet, and, seizing soap, towel and brushes, he hurried away down the beach, where he came face to face with the dawn. The splendor of it smote him full in the eyes. From the waveless surface of the water a spectral mist was rising, a light veil, through which the stupendous cliffs loomed 3,000 feet in height, darkly shadowed, dim and far. The willows along the western marge burned as if dipped in liquid gold, and on the lofty crags the sun's coming created keen edged shadows, violet as ink. Truly this forestry business was not so bad after all. It had its compensations.

Back at the campfire he found Berrie at work, glowing, vigorous, laughing. Her comradeship with her father was very charming, and at the moment she was rallying him on his method of bread mixing. "You should rub the lard into the flour," she said. "Don't be afraid to get your hands into it—after they are clean. You can't mix bread with a spoon."

"Sis, I made camp bread for twenty years afore you were born."

"It's a wonder you lived to tell of it," she retorted, and took the pan away from him. "That's another thing you must learn," she said to Wayland. "You must know how to make bread. You can't expect to find bakeshops or ranchers along the way."

Chicago No Longer Views Strike In Carnival Spirit

TRANSPORTATION PARALYZED

One Line, Operating Ten-Mile System, Ordered by Federal Court to Resume Operations, Provision Being Made For Fair Treatment of Strikers—Mayor Thinks Peace Near

Chicago, June 16.—Complete tie-up of all surface transportation lines marked the second day of the strike of 14,500 Chicago street railway employes. The elevated companies ran occasional trains over part of the system, but these carried few passengers and made irregular stops.

Only a few minor acts of violence were reported. Prospects of the United States government overseeing the operation of the Oak Park division of the elevated system were in an order by Judge Kohlsaat of the United States circuit court of appeals, directing Samuel Insull, receiver for the Chicago and Oak Park elevated railroad, to resume operations at once and to report "any unlawful interference or obstruction by any person whomsoever for such action, as the court may deem proper."

With normal transportation means totally paralyzed, Chicago's population walked to work or rode in automobiles, steam trains or buses, which included vehicles of all descriptions, ranging from converted ice wagons to huge delivery motor trucks with seats for forty or fifty passengers.

The strike, which was first viewed with carnival spirit, was met with sober faces by approximately 1,500,000 people, whose usual transportation facilities had been cut off. Not a wheel turned on the 1095 miles of surface lines.

In spite of the absence of street cars, downtown traffic was congested worse than ever before, and police officials are attempting to work out a scheme of regulation to control motor cars, which have been running through the shopping quarter in the heart of the city. An effort may be made to keep the cars from entering the downtown streets and provide stations just outside where they can discharge and receive passengers.

Kohlsaat's order was issued at the instance of Briton I. Budd, president, and Samuel Insull, receiver, of the Oak Park Elevated.

The Chicago and Oak Park Elevated company, operating about ten miles of road on the West Side, went into the United States district court some time ago and obtained the appointment of Insull as receiver, following the filing of a suit against it by the Central Trust company of New York.

The receiver has not yet been discharged and the federal court has charge through the receiver of the operation of the road, and the employes of the road are thus the employes of the court.

Provision also was made in the order for fair treatment of the employes who have gone on strike, in the direction that the receiver shall furnish to the court all information as to the facts and circumstances in which the strike was called.

The court's direction to employ "such men as may be available," is contradictory to an ordinance passed by the city council, which Mayor Thompson has not yet signed. It restricts the employment of motormen to men who have had twenty-one days instruction on the Chicago lines under an instructor who has worked on the Chicago lines for a year, and prohibits the employment of conductors who have not had fourteen days similar instruction.

Reports from eastern labor centres are that numerous strikebreakers are on their way here from the east. Several hundred recruited in this city are housed in outlying barns.

Mayor Thompson stepped out of his office where the council peace committee had been in joint conference with the traction officials and union heads for two and a half hours.

"It looks hopeful," said the mayor. "I wouldn't be surprised to see the men back on the cars in twenty-four hours. It looks now as if the conferees will be able to decide on a board of three arbitrators. Of course whatever plan of settlement they reach will have to be first submitted to the unions for a vote. But I wouldn't be surprised to see cars running with union crews in twenty-four hours."

"All Cats look grey—at Night!"

"JUST Rubber and Canvass—pumped full of air!"

So thinks the Car Owner who buys from the Cut Price Dealer, the "just as good" Tire on which that Dealer quotes him the biggest discount off a Price List specially printed up for that purpose.

So thinks the Man whose Tire bill averages nearly half of his entire Season's running Expense, when it need not average one-fourth, if he would only "Work his head" and, once for all, learn the Tire Game.

THERE are Car Owners who regularly get 25% to 50% MORE Mileage, per Dollar invested in Tires, than do the Owners of other Cars driven with equal care, under equivalent road conditions.

The latter type of Owner is apt to conclude offhand (from his own experience) that all Tires must be Short-lived and Unsatisfactory.

Now this is to tell him that there is as much difference between the Mileage and Resilience of different brands of Tires, when the facts are investigated, and proven through actual Service, as there is difference between the Color of Cats—when viewed by Daylight.

This is to inform him that three Rubber Factories using precisely the same quantity and quality of Materials might, and sometimes do, produce (through the difference in their Rubber EXPERIENCE and efficiency methods) Tires of such widely different Mileage-Result as to average 3000 Miles, 4000 Miles, and 5000 Miles respectively—under parallel road conditions.

COST of production is therefore no sure guide to the Mileage and Resilience which can be put into such a subtle and "temperamental" product as the Rubber in a Pneumatic Tire.

And, though The B. F. Goodrich Co. can, and does, put the most Mileage per Dollar invested by the User, into Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires, they do not interpret this as a reason why they should charge a higher price, to include an Insurance Premium which would place their "Adjustment Basis" beyond the safe and reasonable minimum that Bad Roads and Careless Driving make necessary.

Because of its Manufacturing Advantages, its Precision Methods, and Waste-reducing Processes (resulting from its 45 years' EXPERIENCE in the working of Rubber), The B. F. Goodrich Co. can afford to and does, offer the greatest Mileage in Tires at the lowest price per Mile.

It sells the standard grade of Goodrich Safety Tires at 10% to 30% lower prices than other non-skid brands which "Guarantee" greater Mileage but cannot prove delivery of greater Mileage in actual use.

Why pay MORE for any Tire?

LOCAL BLUECOATS DEFEAT CHELSEA

Home runs by Duane and Fallon featured the game at Chelsea Tuesday between the Quincy policemen and the department of that community. Quincy closed the game with the score 12 to 6 in its favor.

Duane's homer came early in the game and was an unusually long hit. "Zip" did not have to travel very fast to complete the circuit. Fallon sewed up the game in the ninth inning, his homer being made when the bases were full. Two others also scored in the last inning, making a total of six runs earned as a parting salute to the hosts of the day. Walter Ferguson did the box work for the local boys and was in fine form.

SAYS HE CALLED FRIEND SNAKE

FORE RIVER IS MAKING RECORDS

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, having made a record building submarines for the British government, is out for a new mark in building torpedo-boat destroyers. The object is to use the ways for other contracts. There are 4200 skilled men and laborers employed. The outlook is unusually bright, not alone for war engines but merchant ships.

The destroyer "Tucker," the keel of which was laid Oct. 1, is about ready for her trial trips and the "Cushing" is nearly ready for delivery. The torpedo boat destroyers awarded April 22 and May 12 are well along June 1. They are 24 percent and a small fraction completed and are going ahead ten percent a month. Continuation of this progress will cut the contract time in half, two months sooner than contsruction of similar boats at the Bath Iron Works, of Bath, Me.

YOUNG WOMAN NEARLY DROWNS IN TOWN RIVER

William O'Brien Rescues Her After She Had Sunk Once

Miss Josephine O'Connell of Packards lane, a member of the graduating class of the Woodward Institute, was pulled out of the waters of Town river and rescued from possible drowning Thursday afternoon. She immediately fainted but was revived and taken to her home.

The young woman was one of a party of four which went for a row in the skiff of Ray Coyle. In the party were Miss Julia Coyle, William O'Brien and Edward Heggblod. They put out from Brackett's wharf and attempted to change places when off the Town River Yacht club. Heggblod to prevent the skiff from swamping jumped overboard and as the skiff righted Miss O'Connell was thrown over the side.

Unable to swim, she had gone down once when O'Brien pulled her back to safety. She was rowed ashore in an unconscious state and revived. She later went to her home.

SHOWER FOR MISS FAXON

Miss Sears Entertains at Bridge Party

Miss Constance Sears of Glendale road gave an auction bridge party Wednesday afternoon in honor of Miss Mary Faxon who is to become a bride on June 28th. The party ended with the prospective bride being completely surprised with a shower of all imaginable kitchen utensils.

Miss Faxon and Miss Catherine Johnson received lovely souvenirs for having the highest scores. After the prizes were awarded Miss Sears asked her guests to play some old fashioned games and suggested their sitting in a circle. Of course everyone but Miss Faxon knew what the "game" would be. Miss Sears then suggested that Miss Faxon be "it" and provided a cushion for her to sit on in the middle of the circle.

Just as she sat down little Miss Joan Sears came in with a huge pink rose, and springled rose leaves over the bride-to-be. Then in came a big clothes basket filled with all sizes and shapes of bundles. Miss Faxon opened and read the verses with each gift.

After all had been seen delicious refreshments were served. The color scheme of the party was pink.

HIGH SCHOOL CLUB DEBATES SUFFRAGE

Those Who Upheld Affirmative Are Given Award By Judges

LARGE NUMBER PRESENT

The debating club at the Quincy High school, which has held numerous debates during the winter term of the school, held its final debate of the season at High school hall, Wednesday evening, and on this occasion the debate was a public one. A large number attended, including many women, who were interested in the subject under discussion which was: "Resolved that the women of Massachusetts should be given the full right of suffrage."

During the debates a process of elimination has been going on. The number was reduced to six, who on this occasion were divided pro and con on the question. Those to speak in affirmative were Herbert Merrill, Robert Pope and Herbert Smith, while the negative side was defended by Gustave Von Collin, J. Hilton Marr and Albert McDonald.

The judges were John D. Mackay, chairman of the School committee, Horace W. Rice, master of the Woodward Institute for Girls, and Frank L. Mansur, sub-master of the High school. These judges decided that the affirmative had made the most convincing arguments, while J. Hilton Marr of the negative side was the best debater and to him was awarded the prize, a book.

Each debater was allowed twelve minutes to present his argument after which there was a period of six minutes in which to allow the debaters to prepare themselves for the rebuttal, and each speaker in the rebuttal was allowed three minutes.

The affirmative based its contention on three phases. First that it was natural that women should vote, second that it was expedient for the state that women should vote, and third that it was expedient for woman that she should vote. These three phases were ably propounded.

It was also argued that national prohibition was due largely to women and that the establishment of juvenile courts was another of her achievements.

The exponents of the negative contended that it was not natural that women should vote and that it was not expedient for the state or for the woman that she should vote. They contended that experience had shown this to be true, and that women would not avail themselves of the opportunity, and in this connection it was pointed out that while there were 200,000 women in the state who had the right to vote for school committee but 9,000 had become registered and but 3,000 had exercised the right of franchise. It was also argued that if women had the right to vote it would only make worse the present conditions as many of the women would be dominated by the vicious politician.

While the original arguments, both of the affirmative and negative were ably presented, it was not until the rebuttal that the real pith of the subject was brought out. The rebuttal argument of Herbert Smith of the affirmative was particularly bright and witty and showed much ability.

All of the debaters showed that they had given the subject careful study and in the course of their arguments they quoted many authorities, notably Gladstone, ex-Presidents William H. Taft, and Theodore Roosevelt and even Councillor Guy Ham.

Chairman John D. Mackay summed up the arguments for the judges and announced the finding of the board and made the award of the prize. In summing up the subject the judges called attention to the frequent use by the debaters of the words: "I have proved" claiming that this was not for the speaker to determine but for the judges and audience to decide. The judges also called attention to the claim that women were responsible for national prohibition saying that it was a well established fact that women were divided upon this important question, also as to women

FURIOUS BATTLE NOW RAGING

(By United Press.)

Paris, June 18—On an eight mile front north of Arras a furious battle over wrecked trenches and hillsides strewn with corpses is marking the centenary of Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo. The war office announced this afternoon that no official bulletins on the progress of the battle would be made public for at least 12 hours.

The announcement only increased the tension. For weeks hints of a mighty smash against the German lines on the anniversary of Waterloo have been voiced, although officially denied. Paris has been led to believe that the climax of the French fight was to be reached.

Nicholas Williams, Business Agent, Fears Threat to "Get Him" After Hot Discussion

Fearing that two foreigners would carry out their threat to "get him" after he left the meeting of the Quincy branch of granite cutters Wednesday evening, Nicholas Williams, the business agent, left the hall by a rear entrance and went to his home on Common street under police escort.

The threat followed a warm discussion of the situation of the cutters at Barre, Vt., after which some men are said to have attempted to rush Williams but were prevented from doing so by those present. They then left the hall. Friends of Williams ran to police headquarters where the affair was reported and the escort was provided.

Patrolman Farrell accompanied Williams to a house on Jackson street, where his wife was visiting, and took both as far as Brewer's corner. The remaining distance was made with Patrolman Duane.

DEPENDENT CHILDREN PROBLEM

A woman engaged in charitable work was telling the other day of a pitiable case of a child in a near by town who was badly crippled and unable to attend public school. The parents could not afford to send it to any other institution. There had previously been another case of a cripple in the same neighborhood, and provision for sending this unfortunate to a school for cripples had been made out of public relief funds. But the local authorities would not make a second appropriation for such a purpose. They said the voters would never stand for it.

To send this boy to a certain school for crippled children would cost $4 a week. At the end of his course the child would have been taught to earn a living, and in all probability would be self supporting. The medical treatment at the institution would have improved his condition.

Now the boy is growing up only a child in mentality, and will not be able to perform any useful labor. Almost unquestionably he will become a public charge. The town that declined to pay $4 a week for a few years may have to support him for a life time, and perhaps descendants of his also.

The case is typical of cases of cripples, feeble minded chidren, and other unfortunates, that are found almost everywhere. Not merely is the condition of such little ones most pathetic, but it is not good business to letthese children come to manhood and womanhood in such condition if it can be helped. Many of them can be ttaught useful occupations. Their bodily infirmities often sharpen their wits and all they need is treatment and education at the critical growing period.

Often the trouble is with the parents, who are unwilling to pay a few dollars for consulting physicians. They perhaps see some half trained practitioner, who prescribes some useless linament. So the case drifts along and the trouble becomes permanent.

A FRANK ANNOUNCEMENT.

Members of the lower branch of the State Legislature will be sorry to miss their genial colleague, Robert M. Washburn, who says he will not again be a candidate, feeling that eight terms is enough for any man. The representative from Worcester is an able man and has proved an able legislator. The concluding paragraph in his announcement of intended retirement is wholly characteristic of the man and is well worth repeating. He says: "I am fortunate in that I have not been subjected to at least three common political delusions—that the office has sought the man; that my work has been at great self sacrifice, or that the people are under an obligation to me for past service, for I have sought, and held office, preeminently because it has suited my fancy, and the past eight years have been the most interesting years of my life."

Will Quincy's representatives in the Legislature take the same attitude when they retire?

The Executive Council of Massachusetts, considering the expenditure of the $6000 authorized by the State Legislature for the expenses of the state delegation to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, voted that no part of the appropriation should be used for the purchase of wines or liquors for the members of the delegations or their guests. Thirsty delegates must pay for their liquid refreshment out of their own pocket. This decision is a wise one and it would do no harm if the distinguished gentlemen who are to represent the Commonwealth at the great Exposition should deny themselves any intoxicants whatever. Indeed, such denial might redound to the good name of Massachusetts.

And now comes Francisco Villa, past and present bandit and murderer, and declares that he is favorable to the election of Manuel Vasquex Tagle, an eminent Mexican who has taken no part in the many revolutions since Madero's death, as provisional president. Let us trust that the Administration at Washington, which has ordered Mexico to become peaceful and which has met with this apparently conciliatory offer from Villa, will not be deluded. Villa has about as much intention of filling the role of a true patriot as has his erst-while friend and present foe, the more dignified but just as murderous Carranza.

One great advantage of the new police uniforms is that the policemen and the firemen may easily be interchanged in an emergency.

Why not send Mr. Bryan on a peace mission to the Yacqui Indians? A grave international situation is created by a declaration of war from these ferocious warriors upon the United States, Germany and Mexico, which W. J. B. would alone know how to handle.

The next holiday, July Fourth, falls on Sunday and is celebrated, of course, on Monday. This again suggests the question: why would it not be better to have all holidays fall on Saturday or Monday. The Seventeenth of June, falling on Thursday, ruined the week and benefitted no one as it would have if the celebration had been on Saturday.

Quincy made a most respectable showing at the hearing before the Board of License Commissioners of the City of Boston Tuesday on the application for liquor licenses in Neponset, just over the Quincy line. The delegation, official and semi-official, expressed an emphatic protest which should have produced an effect upon the Board.

Mayor Thompson is to be congratulated upon the important part which he played in checking the street railway strike in Chicago, which was rapidly assuming the proportions of a real calamity.

The Board of Health is "on the job." This energetic body of men wasted no time in taking up and remedying, with the cooperation of the Quincy Lumber Co., the condition in the canal.

The Equal Suffragists have received some very effective munitions of war. Mrs. Frank Leslie of New York has left a million and a half to Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt for the advancement of the cause.

SHIFTING RESPONSIBILITY.

A medical practitioner in Springfield Mass., who was found guilty of anillegal act, was placed on probation providing he would leave the state of Massachusetts within 30 days. In other words, Massachusetts simply shifted the responsibility for the man onto some other state, although by no stretch of the imagination is any other state responsible for the man. It is not right—this policy of dumping one's undesirables onto somebody else—nor is it certain to result in the correction of the ways of the offending party. Each state ought to face its own responsibilities.—Barre Times.

RIGHT KIND OF RAGE.

Even to a mind absolutely disciplined to perfect neutrality, the thought occurs that the London patriots who are now expressing their detestation of their national enemy by destroying the shops of German tradesman might be more profitably employed if their rage should lead them to enlist and face German soldiers on the continent of Europe.—New York Sun.

MASTERLY INACTIVITY.

In announcing the award Mr. Mackay said that the judges had decided that the affirmative had the best side of the argument. In awarding the prize for the best debater Mr. Mackay said that the judges had awarded this to J. Hilton Marr of the negative side, as the one who had showed the most thorough preparation of the subject and the greatest ease in his delivery.

Some of the debaters spoke without notes while others read from their notes, and it was evident that those who spoke without notes made the best impression.

Before the debate opened and during the respite before the rebuttal when the debaters were given six minutes in which to prepare themselves there was piano music.

AVIATOR FLIES TO PROVIDENCE

Makes Return Trip in 39 Minutes

Harry N. Jones, the aviator who has been doing numerous stunts from the Squantum Aviation field, planned to race the Merchants Limited train Wednesday between Boston and Providence. On account of his late start from Squantum he could not carry out this program. He flew to Providence, however, and arrived just as the train was pulling out of the station.

Jones left the aviation field at 5.12 P. M. and the Merchants Limited left the South Station at 5 P. M. o'clock, so that he had a handicap at the very start. Jones did not carry a passenger on this trip but instead carried a tank of gasoline for ballast. This however was not connected with his motor so that he had but ten gallons of the fluid available.

Leaving the aviation field at Squantum Jones arose to a height of 200 feet and started toward Hyde Park. Here he arose to about 4000 feet and started for Providence, flying over the station as the express train pulled out. He then started toward Rocky Point, after first circulating about the dome of the state house. His gasoline gave out, however, and instead of landing at Crescent park to replenish his supply as intended he made a landing at the Cranston race track. With a fresh supply of gasoline he started at 7.05 P. M. to return to Squantum where he landed at 7.45 P. M. without incident. On Sunday he plans to fly to Rhode Island again, and will land at Narragansett polo grounds.

FISH IS GOOD AND PLENTIFUL

Weekly Market Review Shows Little Change

There is little in the way of news that can be said this week in regard to the local market conditions. Prices of meats and fish remain practically the same as a week ago. Fish is plentiful and generally good, for the reason that the receipts this week have been large. The larger sizes of cod are a little scarce and a shrinkage of bluefish has served to boost the price of that variety about two cents a pound over last week.

There has been a little let up in the incoming supply of mackerel and in some cases a little better price is being asked. However it is still comparatively cheap, the larger variety selling at the rate of about 6 cents a pound. Salmon continues to be reasonable in price, although it was a little higher Wednesday on account of the increased demand for the holiday. All other kinds of ground fish, however, are plentiful and cheap, except cod. There are only a few shad in the markets at the present time but as the demand is limited the prices are reasonable.

The markets are well supplied with meats of all kinds and the prices vary but little from what have prevailed during the past few weeks. Lamb chops and veal steaks continue to occupy the top shelf as to price, and on account of the top notch price the demand is small and probably will continue so until they get somewhere within reason.

There has been a slight advance in the price of lobsters, due to the falling off in receipts and in the increased demand from the summer resorts. Practically no shipments of lobsters are now being received from Nova Scotia, and the supply placed in lobster cars earlier in the season is being drawn upon for present supply. Some catches are being made on the South Shore, but all of the native lobsters in the market are of large size. This year the deputies have been particularly active along the South Shore with the result that chicken lobsters, so called, are a rarity.

As for vegetables the markets abound with a plentiful supply of all kinds and prices are reasonable. Native vegetables of almost every variety can now be found in the markets and they are very appetizing. Now that something like summer weather has arrived local gardens which have not been doing very well are picking up and with the recent rains to refresh them they are now in the best of condition, and it will not be many weeks before the table will be supplied with vegetables raised in the back yard garden.

HAVE PRETTY HOME WEDDING

Miss Bessie Brooks Marries T. M. Hinkley

An extremely pretty home weeding took place Wednesday afternoon when Miss Bessie Mae Brooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred J. Brooks of 778 Hancock street became the bride of Thomas Malcolm Hinkley of New York City, son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Hinkley of Wollaston. Both the young people are well known and very popular in the younger set of Quincy and Wollaston. Both are graduates of Quincy High school.

The ceremony was performed at 2.30 in the afternoon by the Rev. Dr. George W. Cutter of the Church of the Unity of Neponset. The house was beautifully decorated with palms and orange blossoms, and the large bay window was banked with ferns making an effective background for the bride and her attendants.

Miss Brooks made a lovely bride. Her gown was of white embroidered voile with pearl trimmings and chantilly lace, and she carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley.

The maid of honor, her sister Miss Daisy Brooks, wore an attractive gown of white embroidered crepe, and carried a large bouquet of pink sweet peas. The best man was Harry W. Hinkley, a brother of the groom, and the ushers were A. Roy Welton of Norfolk Downs, and W. Harry Brooks of Quincy.

To the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Eleanor Whittemore of Quincy, a close friend of the bride, the bridal suite entered the room where the ceremony was to be performed. The bride entered on the arm of her father who gave her away.

After the ceremony, a reception was held attended by the immediate families and intimate friends of the bride and groom. They were assisted in receiving by their parents.

The groom's present to his bride was a lavailler set with diamonds and pearls. His gifts to his best man and ushers were gold handled pocket knives. The bride give her maid of honor a gold friendship pin.

The young couple left after the reception for a three weeks' trip to New York and Atlantic City. They will be at home after September first at 543 Adams avenue, Elizabeth, New Jersey.

The groom's father is well known. He is president of the Citizens' Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Boston. The bride's father is a naval architect, formrly asseociated with Charles H. Cramp & Sons Shipbuilding Co., of Philadilphia, Pa.

The couple received many beautiful gifts including a chest of silver from Mr. Hinkley's associates in the Westchester Fire Iisurance Co. of New York, where he is assistant manager of the Sprinkler Risk Department.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part; "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

COURT SITS ON HOLIDAY

Charles Anderson who escaped the police last fall by jumping from the swiftly moving patrol auto at Quincy Point and who when captured was brought to court on three charges of assault and battery was given a hearing on a continued charge before Judge Avery on the holiday morning. As in the other two cases he was found not guilty.

Mrs. Ellen Anderson, the complainant, alleged Anderson assaulted a man named Lillia at her home the night on which he was arrested and escaped. Lillia, she said, was now on a farm in Maine, unable to appear but had been in court when the continuance was granted.

Several witnesses were introduced. His honor ruled that the government had failed to present a case and he discharged the defendant.

The court had a holiday aspect as far as spectators were concerned, none being present. All of the other wheels of the mills of justice revolved however, from the probation and clerk's office to the attendance of the court officers.

The best man was John Ward of Quincy, a nephew of the groom's, and the maid of honor was Miss Abigail Guerin of Brookline, a sister of the bride. There were no other attendants.

The bride was becomingly gowned in an embroidered white voile trimmed with pale blue, and her maid of honor in a pretty cream colored gown of the same material.

After the ceremony, a reception was held at the new home of the couple on Woodberry road, Quincy Point. The reception was from eight until ten. MACHINE GUN COMPANY CAMPS IN DOWNPOUR

Makes First Tour of Duty Under Unfavorable Conditions

The Machine Gun Co., 6th Regiment M. V. M., made its first tour of duty on the open on the holiday. The rain descended and the floods came, making conditions as bad as any organization ever experienced at this season of the year The difficulties they faced can be readily imagined and although they were all new men, requirements were fulfilled

The company, commanded by Sergeant Charles Starbird, instructor, left the Alpha hall armory at 9.30 and trolleyed to Bicknell's corner, North Weymouth. In the field a short distance away they pitched the new regulation shelter tents.

Just about as soon as camp was made it commenced to rain and it rained steadily for over an hour, during which brushwood was gathered and individual fires were started Under ordinary conditions the fires would have been started in 15 minutes but over an hour was required.

The men cooked their own meals with the downpour attempting to dislodge them from their position. The rations prepared consisted of two slices of bacon, potatoes and onion and coffee. The mess equipment of the company was not carried, the men providing their own utensils. Hardtack was distributed.

The mess was a new one to several of the boys but it proved to be table and was enjoyed. The regulation trenches were dug and the men later policed the grounds, placed all of the refuse in the latrine and covered the trenches making them appear as though they never existed.

The company commander directed a short drill in squad movements and the study of a problem in sending a message. Instructions in making and breaking a bivouac camp were fully given during the day, including an explanation of the proper method of making up beds so as to prevent suffering under poor weather conditions.

On the return the company made a tout march from the camp to the armory and covered the distance in one hour incuding a stop of seven minutes

The discipline throughout the day was excellent, none of the men flinching. All were highly satisfied with their experience and were highly complimented by Sergeant Starbird when they were relieved.

DEATHS DUE TO INCOMPETENCE

Lusitania's Crew Failed to Aid In Lowering Boats

COUNTERMANDING OF ORDERS

Witnesses Say They Were Compelled to Leave Boats After Entering Them—Captain Did Not Think Ship In Danger—Carson Thinks Submarines Hit Both Sides of Liner

London, June 18.—Charges that incompetency of the Lusitania's crew was partly responsible for the heavy loss of life when the liner was torpedoed, were made by survivors who testified at the official inquiry.

A passenger named Baker swore that the steamer lacked competent men to aid in lowering the boats and that several passengers undertook the task.

"I was helping to put one boat over," said Baker, "when Staff Captain Anderson megaphoned from the bridge: 'Stop lowering that boat. There is no danger. The ship isn't going to sink.'"

Other evidence showed that Anderson countermanded the orders Captain Turner had given previously to get the women and children into the boats. A number of witnesses testified that they got ito the boats and had to leave them later on orders from Anderson.

Before the testimony of passenger survivors was taken Turner, who was in command of the Lusitania at the time she went down, was recalled to the dock. He admitted that for fully ten minutes he did not realize that the Lusitania was sinking, but he denied he had ordered women and children to leave the boats.

Mrs. Rossiter, a survivor, flatly contradicted Turner. She said she heard the captain order the passengers to leave the boats.

Turner was asked why the collapsible boats had not been freed from their chocks on entering the danger zone. He replied he feared the boats would slide about when the ship listed and sweep passengers into the sea. The captain admitted further that some boats were strapped on the top of others.

Attorney General Carson expressed his conviction that a second submarine was laying in wait on the port side of the Lusitania. He made this statement in reply to an argument put forward by Baron Mersey, who said he thought a mistake had been made by Seaman O'Neill, one of the witnesses, before the court, who testified he had seen the wash of a torpedo passing the stern of the Lusitania from the port to the starboard side, immediately after the liner had been hit on the starboard side.

O'Neill was formerly in the navy. He is positive that he recognized the wash of a torpedo, although he did not see the submarine which fired it from the port side.

This testimony of O'Neill's was corroborated by another seaman witness, who testified also that he saw the wash of two torpedoes from the starboard side. These came forward in parallel lines until they almost reached the ship, when they parted at a slight angle, first one and then the other striking the Lusitania.

Chief Steward Jones declared he had not seen lifebelts on the upper decks of the Lusitania after the liner left New York.

Chief Carpenter Robertson said the condition of the lifeboats was good when the Lusitania left New York. In reply to the statement that a certain lifeboat leaked so badly that all but two of the occupants were drowned, Robertson said it was possible for the hot sun to have warped the boat's sides.

D. A. Thomas, known as the "British coal king," who was on the Lusitania, was of the opinion that some members of the crew did not obey the captain's order to attend first to the rescue of women and children, but attempted to save themselves first.

SPORTING COMMENT

SPORTING COMMENT

Rep. Kenneth Nash of Weymouth is out of politics for the summer. He is playing base ball with the Montreal team. On his return he will re-enter the political arena, not as an assistant for the seat of Senator Langelier as was anticipated, but as a candidate for reelection.

Many of the fans got their base ball returns on the holiday from the Ledger bulletins, an added feature, made possible through a news combination with the United Press.

Rain put a stop to the holiday games. Managers Higgins of the Fore River and Manager Nicolls of the Makarias will arrange another game.

PARAAGON PARK.

No summer sea-side resort in New England can equal Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, for unusual enjoyment. The Palm Garden features, the Cabaret and Dansant, have become the one topic of conversation with all seekers of sea-shore recreation. This season's innovation, the Broadway Musical Revue, which forms the cabaret entertainment, promises to become by far the most popular feature of the year. Twenty-five beautiful girls, well trained and handsomely gowned, present this pot-pourri of singing and dancing specialties. In the park patrons find numerous features and free attractions including exhibitions by Albers 8 trained polar bears whose astounding feats culminate in the entire number shooting the chutes from a height of ninety feet into the lagoon; hourly band concerts by Mace Gay's military band; concert by 20 pretty girls outside the Palm Garden from 6.30 to 9; fireworks displays Wednesday and Saturday nights and the Italian illumination Sunday nights.

THE POPS.

No conductor of the Pops at Symphony hall Boston in recent years has had such a complete and instantaneous success as Ernst Schmidt, who began his work in this important post the 14th. The coming week will be his second and last week as conductor. He has made some very interesting programmes. Monday night, June 21, he will devote the second part of the programme to Wagner playing some unusual things, the Overture to "Rienzi," the Procession of Women to the Cathedral from the Second Act of "Lohengrin," the magnificent Grail Scene from "Parsifal", and Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene from "Die Walkure." Tuesday night will be a general programme. Wednesday, June 23rd, will be "Norwegian Night." Scandinavian music will rule and the Norwegian Singing Society will be heard in selections. Thursday night, June 24th, brings a Tschaikowsky programme one of the most popular events of the Pop season. This will include the Marche Slave, the Nutcracker Suite, the Song without Words and the "1812" Overture.

The last college night of the season is "Dartmouth night" June 25, and a big crowd of Dartmouth Alumni will be present. Mr. Schmidt will make his last appearance of the season Saturday, June 26, with a very popular programme. For the last week of the Pops Mr. Clement Lenom will be conductor. "Request Night" is set for Wednesday, June 30th.

The piano pupils of Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook, Wednesday evening, gave a recital at their teacher's home on Holbrook street. Miss Holbrook was assisted by Raymond Cassidy of Wollaston road, Bellevue park.

SHE WAS.

The two oldest inhabitants were very ignorant, neither of them being able even to tell the time of day. A friend of Uncle Ben's gave him a watch, of which he was very proud One day, before the crowd at the corner store, old Pete, being slightly jealous of such wealth and wishing to embarrass his rival, said, "Say, Ben, what time have ye got?"

The other old fellow drew out his watch and turned its face toward his inquisitor. "There she be!" he exclaimed.

Pete was almost at a loss, but he made a magnificent effort and retorted. "Blame if she ain't!"—Everybody's.

G. A. R. CONDUCT FUNERAL SERVICE

Soldier's Burial For Edward Richardson

Edward Richardson, one of the best known veterans of the Civil War and a prominent member of Paul Revere Post, G. A. R., whose death on Tuesday followed a long illness was given a soldier's burial on the holiday afternoon.

The services were held at his late home, 45 Gay street, and were attended by comrades of the post, delegations from the Women's Relief corps, Col. Abner Packard camp, Sons of Veterans, Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans, and many friends. The casket was draped with a large American flag.

Among those present were five aged men who served with him in the 23rd Mass. Infantry during the war and Andrew Page, who was for many years associated with him when he was head baker for the late William T. Hodges.

The veterans were comrades Evans, Deleno, Clark, Lake and Ellis of Co K. 23rd. Mass. Infantry, the first being his tent mate during the war.

Rev. Merrill C. Ward, pastor of the Universalist church officiated at the services. Mrs. Frank J. Moore was the soloist. The rit al of the Grand Army was conducted by Commander Mark E. Hanson of the post and the members.

The post escorted the funeral procession from the home, down Gay street to Water street and up Quincy avenue, as far as Elm street, where the ranks divided and the procession passed between them. A firing squad of veterans accompanied the remains to Mt. Wollaston cemetery and fired three volleys over the grave.

The floral remembrances were many and beautiful and were from the patriotic organizations and Rural lodge of Masons, with which the deceased was affiliated.

Mr. Richardson was a resident of Quincy since the war. He was a baker by trade and an accomplished violinist. His four sons, Charles E., Chester G., Arthur A. and Wilbur D., who survive him are all musicians. His widow Cylinda Richardson is past president of the Woman's Relief Corp and a Rebekah.

MILTON HIGH GRADUATION

Hundreds of parents and friends attended the graduation exercises of the Milton High school, Wednesday evening in the town hall. The class was one of the largest in the history of the school, including forty-three four year pupils and four three year. This was the first year that diplomas have ever been awarded to three year pupils.

The hall was exquisitely decorated with purple and white, the class colors and the windows were bordered with green decorations: This work was in charge of Miss Walley, instructor in art, and was especially well done.

The exercises opened with the grand march of the graduates, led by J. Randall Pratt, class marshal. This was very impressive and the serious thoughts of the dignified "grads" were shown by their firm step. "Gloria in Excelsis" from "Twelfth Mass" was rendered by the Glee club and Senior class, Miss Harriett Whittier director.

"Universal Peace" was fittingly selected for the topic of the evening and essays on various phases of this topic were presented by different members of the class. Miss Alice W. Damon gave the address of welcome in a most fitting manner and explained the idea of choosing "Peace" for the subject of the exercises.

This was followed by an essay on the "Ethical Argument for Peace," by Miss Josephine Rice. Parker B. Field Jr., presented the "Economic Argument for Peace," with many interesting figures. "The Host of Peace" from "Aida" was then given by the Glee club and class. Miss Rachel Farrington dramatically rendered the reading, entitled: "Peace." In an argumentative style Miss Bena G. Erhard presented an essay on "Who Makes the Wars?" The essays ended with the one on "A Substitute for War" by Kenneth D. Johnson. Milton Tucker, vice president of the class presented the class gift to the school The gift this year was the third picture in the series of the "Evolution of the Book," entitled: "Hieroglyphics."

The diplomas were awarded by Reginald L. Robbins, chairman of the school committee, who in his words of advice to the graduates, told them to have confidence but not to forget humility. The program concluded with the singing of Kipling's "Recessional" by the same chorus.

SUFFRAGISTS OPEN SHOP

A Suffrage Shop has just been opened at 1621 Hancock street near School, in one of the new stores owned by Mrs. Helen B. Jenness, Through the kindness of Mrs. Jenness the use of the store is given until it shall be let. The shop is easily identified by the yellow "Votes for Women" signs and the suffrage literature in its windows.

Members of the local league are to be found there daily, turning the leaves of the "Silent Speech to Voters" and giving out literature. On sale inside are suffrage publications and suffrage goods. Large posters bearing arguments for equal suffrage adorn the walls and passers-by are invited to come in and read.

The shop keepers are undecided whether to hail or deplore the operations on the street in front of the store. On the one hand they attract the eyes of pedestrians from a distance so that they pass by with averted heads. On the other hand the street cars have been forced to stop here and whole cars full of people have given their undivided attention to the voiceless speech.

ENJOY THEIR ANNUAL PICNIC

First Presbyterian C. E. Go To Glen Echo Park

Nearly 75 members of the Christian Endeavor society of the First Presbyterian church, accompanied by Rev. Clarence E. Campbell, pastor, went on the annual picnic at Glen Echo park, Stoughton, on the holiday. The day was not so enjoyable as it could have been because of a shower of rain which put a stop to the sports.

The party left at eight o'clock and made the trip in a special car. Shortly after the arrival a ball game was started between the Clark class and the Seneca Social club. Jacobson and Emery were the battery for the former and Copeland and Michael for the latter. Rain broke up the game in the third inning with the score 1 to 0 in favor of the Clarks.

During the rain the picnicers ate their luncheon in the car. In the afternoon it cleared and they played games, bowled and boated. They reached home at nine o'clock.

TEACHERS LOSE TO Q. H. S. 2nd

Score Is 8 to 7 When Curtain Falls

The Schoolmasters club lost to Quincy High second at Merrymount Park Wednesday afternoon by a score of 8 to 7. The result was in doubt until Mulien hit and sent Percy Jenkins over with the winning run in the seventh and last inning.

The game had many spectacular features. Some of the teachers have not been on the diamond for some years but stood a 90 per cent test.

The star of the game was Andrew Johnson, principal of the Montclair and Gridley Bryant schools which played in the finals for the city championship, won by the latter. He brought over the first run in the third inning through good base running. He reached on a hit, stole second and third and then succeeded in stealing home, sliding under Barron.

In the fifth inning he walloped the ball to the fence and while Baker chased it across the street, he completed the circuit, driving in Thompson ahead of him.

The feature catch was made by Elijah Barrows of the vocational school and a former councilman from Ward Two, who made a whale of a stab in centre. Rheinhalter at second and Barron behind the bat, Baker in left and Venna in right made pretty catches.

The game had a humorous feature also. Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director of the school, went in at centre when Barrows succeeded Johnson at third in the sixth inning and although he was ready for action, coat off and a borrowed cap set at right angles, he didn't even get a chance to bat and didn't get his hands on the ball because all of the batters ignored him. Principal Sampson of the Quincy school played three innings and was succeeded by Thompson of High school.

The appearance of Harry Jones in his biplane over Quincy bay furnished the inspiration to the masters. Their attempts to shell him with batted balls sent over four runs in the sixth.

French squelched run getting in the second by fanning two men after three runs were scored. He reserved most of his strength however.

Mansur split the question at short. He and Johnson ran down Jenkins between the bases and after catching Rheinhalter off he chased him to third, forced Mecagni and followed him, giving up the chase by throwing him out at home. He wrecked a beautiful showing however by a wild throw and two errors.

Marshall came across at second and Woods, who quietly admitted that he hadn't played for some few years, did well at third, considering the time he was out of the game. DiSenso, the regular High school catcher, was behind the bat for the masters. The summary:

OFF FOR YAQUI LAND

Marines Under Admiral Howard Will Protect American Colonists

San Diego, Cal., June 18.—With three companies, totalling 300 men of the United States marine corps, aboard, the flagship Colorado, Admiral Howard commanding, sailed from San Diego for the Lower California coast.

Governor Maytorena of the state of Sonora advised the United States it would be unnecessary to land any of Howard's forces to rescue or protect the American colonists, as he would furnish troops for the purpose. Howard's orders will remain unchanged, however.

American colonists in the Yaqui valley will determine for themselves if they wish to leave the region of Indian depredations. Instructions of Howard are to give refugees asylum if they ask for it, to land forces for rescue if necessary, but not to take any territory.

Howard is under orders to dispatch his force twenty miles inland, if necessary, to protect Americans menaced by the Indians, who had threatened to annihilate all foreigners. State department advices said that the Indians had declared war on Germany, Mexico and the United States.

Washington, June 18.—President Wilson will announce his selection of a successor to former Secretary of State Bryan upon his return, shortly after July 4, from his vacation trip to Cornish, N. H.

HOODLUMS HOLD UP PARADE AT BOSTON

Governor and Mayor Narrowly Escape Injury From Missiles

Boston, June 18.—A beer bottle and other missiles were thrown from the roof of a four-story tenement house at Governor Walsh, Mayor Curley and other city and state officials as their carriages were on Bunker Hill street, in the parade that commemorated the 140th anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill.

The bottle fell harmlessly a few feet from the governor's carriage. A brick crashed into the pavement between horses of Troop C (cavalry) that were riding directly behind. Pebbles and sand rained down upon the riders and also struck occupants of another carriage.

The fear that an attempt had been made to kill Walsh caused the entire parade line to stop. The cavalry escort surrounded the house where the hoodlums were quartered. Policemen dashed into the building and a spectacular chase followed.

John Dooley, 17; William Healey, 21, and John D. Broderich, 24, were arrested in connection with the affair.

Both Walsh and Curley declared they did not believe that it was a personal attack upon them. Neither was injured, and out of the shower of missiles nothing but a few pebbles struck them.

A NEW YORK MYSTERY

Police Think Murder and Suicide Is a Love Tragedy

New York, June 18.—Carman Cornelius, a well-to-do merchant, summoned neighbors to his apartment in East New York with the announcement that a burglar had shot and killed his wife.

Those who returned with Cornelius to his suite found his young wife, Barbara, dead in bed with three bullet holes in her head. Nearby on the floor was the body of a young man who had been shot through the temple. The intruder, whom neither the police nor Cornelius could identify, still clutched a pistol.

Police investigation veered to the theory that the young woman was killed by a former sweetheart, or at least by a man who knew her.

AEROPLANE DROPS FIVE HUNDRED FEET

Aviator Warneford and American Passenger Are Killed

Paris, June 18.—Lieutenant Reginald A. J. Warneford, the Canadian aviator who gained fame recently by blowing to pieces a Zeppelin over Belgium, was killed by the fall of an aeroplane at Buc, France.

Warneford was piloting the machine, which had as a passenger Henry B. Needham, the American writer, who also was killed.

Warneford and Needham fell from a height of 500 feet. The accident resulted from an explosion in mid-air, which caused Warneford to lose control, the machine crashing to earth.

Needham had been in Europe about four months acting as correspondent of magazines and a New York newspaper.

Warneford, a young Canadian, suddenly acquired renown by destroying a Zeppelin over Belgium on June 7, this being the first time on record that a Zeppelin had been wrecked by an aviator in an aeroplane. The twenty-eight men in the Zeppelin's crew were killed.

For this feat Warneford was decorated with the Victoria Cross and the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

DORR COMPANY HOLDS OUTING

Has All Day Jubilee at Adams Shore

Thursday, the Sevententh, was not an ideal day for an outing, yet the employees of the Arthur E. Dorr Co. Inc., of Boston, to the number of upwards of 200 held their outing in Quincy at the home of J. S. Rogers, treasurer of the company, on Mallard road, Adams Shore. The party left Boston in the early morning in the big automobiles of the company, arriving at the cottage before the storm set in. They were welcomed on their arrival by Mrs. Rogers, chairman of the reception committee.

The house and grounds were prettily decorated for the occasion by a committee headed by W. J. Price. The party was greeted on its arrival by music by the Italian band which was present all day A series of out of door sports had been planned, but rain prevented these being held until late in the afternoon. Nothing daunted however the party made the most of the bad weather and had a merry time until noon when dinner was served on the broad piazza of the house.

When the weather cleared all adjourned to the lawns where the sports were held. The several events were hotly contested, especially the two ball games. The first of these games was between the office clerks and men of the wholesale beef department which resulted in a victory for the office clerks by a score of 6 to 2.

The second game was between the poultry and shipping departments, the former winning by a score of 4 to 2. Both games were umpired by Mr. Dorr.

One of the most amusing events was the greased pig race, which created no end of fun. The little porker, well greased, was released and the next minute he was running about the grounds with the crowd in pursuit. The race was a short one, however, for Rodney Connolly, a Quincy boy, soon captured him.

The other field sports resulted as follows:

Suit case race won by Miss Winnie Joyce.

Obstacle race won by Miss Gertrude Dean of Quincy.

Married woman's race, won by Mrs. J. S. Rogers.

Single woman's race won by Miss Parker.

Married men's race won by Harry Gray.

Single's men's race won by Edward Griffin.

Three-legged race won by George Gay and John Higgins

Potato race won by Arthur Sullivan.

Relay race won by Messrs. McCabe, Hayes, Duggan and Russo.

It was late in the afternoon before the field events were finished and then a lunch was served. During the evening there was a band concert and fireworks.

During the morning there were vocal selections by Arthur Gillespie, a 12 year old Chelsea boy.

Among the special guests of the outing were, W. A. Davis of the W. A. Bacon Co., Arthur L. Race, proprieter of the Mascoma house, Manchester, Mass, George Stacy of Boston, Louis Aaron, Chicago representative of the Arthur E. Dorr Co. Inc.

The chairman of the committees in charge were: general committee, J. S. Rogers; reception committee, Mrs. J. S. George; decorating committee, W. J. Price; transportation committee, John Higgins; entertainment committee, Miss Gertrude Dean; athletic committee, George Day; music committee, P. F. Murphy.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berea McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the supervising ranger of Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Nash, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

In the heat of the fire, in the charm of the girl's presence, the young man forgot the discomforts of the night, and, as they sat at breakfast and the sun rising over the high summits flooded them with warmth and good cheer and the frost melted like magic from the tent, the experience had all the satisfying elements of a picnic. It seemed that nothing remained to do. But McFarlane said, "Well, now you youngsters wash up and pack while I reconnoiter the stock." And with his saddle and bridle on his shoulder he went away down the trail.

Under Berrie's direction Wayland worked busily putting the camp equipment in proper parcels, taking no special thought of time till the tent was down and folded, the panniers filled and closed and the fire carefully covered. Then the girl said: "I hope the horses haven't been stampeded. There are bears in this valley, and horses are afraid of bears. Father ought to have been back before this. I hope they haven't quit us."

"Shall I go and see?"

"No, he'll bring 'em if they're in the land of the living. He picketed his saddle horse, so he's not afoot. Nobody can teach him anything about trailing horses, and, besides, you might get lost. You'd better keep close to camp."

Thereupon Wayland put aside all responsibility. "Let's see if we can catch some more fish," he urged.

To this she agreed, and together they went again to the outlet of the lake, where the trout could be seen darting to and fro on the clear, dark flood, and there cast their flies till they had secured ten good sized fish.

"We'll stop now," declared the girl. "I don't believe in being wasteful."

Once more at the camp they prepared the fish for the pan.

As they were unpacking the panniers and getting out the dishes for their meal thunder broke from the high crags above the lake, and the girl called out:

"Quick! It's going to rain! We must reset the tent and get things under cover."

Once more he was put to shame by the decision, the skill and the strength with which she went about re-establishing the camp. She led, he followed in every action. In ten minutes the canvas was up, the beds rolled, the panniers protected, the food stored safely. But they were none too soon, for the thick gray veil of rain which had clothed the loftiest crags for half an hour swung out over the water, leaden gray under its folds, and with a roar which began in the tall pines, a roar which deepened, hushed only when the thunder crashed resoundingly from crag to crest, the tempest fell upon the camp and the world of sun and odorous pine vanished almost instantly, and a dark, threatening and forbidding world took its place.

But the young people, huddled close together beneath the tent, would have enjoyed the change had it not been for the thought of the supervisor. "I hope he took his slicker," the girl said between the tearing, ripping flashes of the lightning. "It's raining hard up there."

"How quickly it came. Who would have thought it could rain like this after so beautiful a morning?"

"It storms when it storms in the mountains," she responded with the sententious air of her father. "You never can tell what the sky is going to do up here. It is probably snowing on the high divide. Looks now as though those canyuses pulled out some time in the night and have hit the trail for home. That's the trouble with stall fed stock. They'll quit you any time they feel cold and hungry. Here comes the hail!" she shouted as a sharper, more spiteful roar sounded far away and approaching. "Now keep from under!"

"What will your father do?" he called.

"Don't worry about him. He's at home any place there's a tree. He's probably under a balsam somewhere, waiting for this ice to spill out. The only point is, they may get over the divide, and if they do it will be slippery coming back."

For the first time the thought that the supervisor might not be able to return entered Wayland's mind, but he said nothing of his fear.

The hail soon changed to snow, great, clinging, drowsy, soft, slow moving flakes, and with their coming the roar died away and the forest became as silent as a grave of bronze. Nothing moved save the thick falling, feathery, frozen vapor, and the world was again very beautiful and very mysterious.

"We must keep the fire going," warned the girl. "It will be hard to start after this soaking."

He threw upon the fire all of the wood which lay near, and Berrie, taking the ax, went to the big fir and began to chop off the dry branches which hung beneath, working almost as effectively as a man. Wayland insisted on taking a turn with the tool, but his efforts were so awkward that she laughed and took it away again. "You'll have to take lessons in swinging an ax," she said. "That's part of the job."

Gradually the storm lightened, the snow changed back into rain and finally to mist, but up on the heights the clouds still rolled wildly, and through their openings the white drifts bleakly shone.

"It's all in the trip," said Berrie. "You have to take the weather as it comes on the trail." As the storm lessened she resumed the business of cooking the midday meal, and at 2 o'clock they were able to eat in comparative comfort, though the unmelted snow still covered the trees, and the water dripped from the branches.

"You'll have to take lessons in swinging an ax," she said. "That's part of the job."

"Isn't it beautiful!" exclaimed Wayland, with glowing, boyish face. "The landscape is like a Christmas card."

"It wouldn't be so beautiful if you had to wallow through ten miles of it," she sagely responded. "Daddy will be wet to the skin, for I found he didn't take his slicker. However, the sun may be out before night. That's the way the thing goes in the hills."

To the youth, though the peaks were storm hid, the afternoon was joyous. Berrie was a sweet companion. Under her supervision he practiced at chopping wood and took a hand at cooking.

He had to admit that she was better able to care for herself in the wilderness than most men, even western men, and, though he had not yet witnessed a display of her skill with a rifle, he was ready to believe that she could shoot as well as her sire. Nevertheless he liked her better when engaged in purely feminine duties, and he led the talk back to subjects concerning which her speech was less blunt and manlike.

He liked her when she was joking, for delicious little curves of laughter played about her lips. She became very amusing as she told of her "visits east" and of her embarrassments in the homes of city friends. "I just have to own up that about all the schooling I've got is from the magazines. Sometimes I wish I had pulled out for town when I was about fourteen; but, you see, I didn't feel like leaving mother, and she didn't feel like letting me go, and so I just got what I could at Bear Tooth." She sprang up. "There's a patch of blue sky. Let's go see if we can't get a grouse." Together they strolled along the edge of the willows. "The grouse come down to feed about this time," she said. "We'll put up a covey soon."

Within a quarter of a mile they found their birds, and she killed four with five shots. "This is all we need," she said, "and I don't believe in killing for the sake of killing. Rangers should set good examples in way of game preservation. They are deputy game wardens in most states, and good ones too."

Over Half Million Shells Fired In Flanders Fight

FRENCH DRIVE GERMANS BACK

Gain Ground Used by Enemy as Base of Defense—Paris Reports Progress in the Vosges—Eastern Battle Line Extends About Seven Hundred Miles—Italian Forces Rapidly Drawing Nearer Trieste—Three Turkish Transports Sunk by British—Austrian Plunger Torpedoes and Sinks an Italian Submarine

London, June 18.—French troops have won a notable victory over the Germans. The Berlin official report admits that the French have made gains along a 600-metre front in the neighborhood of Souchez, but claims that fighting in the estern area has resulted in the Germans' favor.

It is admitted by both Berlin and Paris that the losses have been unusually heavy on both sides. But even if the French have paid high, they have taken control of the park of the Chateau de Carlend, the moats of which, filled with water, have for weeks served as the centre of the German defense of the Souchez district.

This position has been strengthened by the capture by the French of the Souchez cemetery and a gain of ground on the slopes south of Souchez, known on the military maps as Hill 119.

On the line between Souchez and Neuville the fighting has been furious. The Germans arrayed an army of 200,000 men on this short section of the front, with heavy reserves in the rear, and drove forward against the French in a desperate effort to regain the ground lost there during the last few weeks.

French Resist Attacks

Repeated attacks were hurled back by the French forces, who, striking quickly while the Germans were in confusion, pressed forward, making important gains on three sides of Souchez and advancing in three directions from Neuville. The French batteries, during the fierce battle of the last twenty-four hours, have fired nearly 300,000 shells, while the Germans have used probably no fewer.

The death toll in the face of such artillery work has of necessity been very large. The French war office admits that the French losses have been serious. It asserts, however, that the German casualties have been even greater.

In the Vosges, Altenhof, a suburb of Metzeral on the Fecht river, has been captured, Metzeral itself has been set on fire by the Germans and is burning. Steinbruck, a little to the north of Metzeral, has fallen into French hands after a furious assault.

Long Battle Line In East

It is fairly certain that there is fighting along the entire 700 miles of the eastern battle line. From the Niemen, as it goes into East Prussia, to the Serbian line at the border of Bukowina, 3,550,000 Germans and Austrians have assumed the offensive against the Russian armies.

There are reports of spirited actions at Augustowo, Kalvaria, Grodno, around Ossowiec, along the Namulew and Marew line, north of Pizasnysz, on the Vistula, south of that line on the Bzura river, and then in Galicia, where the heaviest fighting of all is to be found in the general advance from three directions towards Lemberg, with the idea of clearing the entire country of Russians.

One official dispatch from Berlin says the Russians have abandoned their positions to the north of Sienawa on the San river, in Galacia, and have been retreating towards Tarnowgorod in Russian Poland.

The official statement of the Russian general staff tells of the fighting and speaks of successes at certain points, but says very little of the general situation.

Colonel Repington, the military expert of the London Times, declares that upon the result of the struggle in Galicia depends the character of the campaign in other theatres of the war for months to come.

Italians Close to Objective

Italian outposts have arrived in sight of Trieste, according to a message from Udine.

Fierce fighting in the Monte Nero region north of Tolmino, on the Isonzo front, is reported in an official report from General Cadorna, the chief of staff, issued by the war department. The Alpine troops in this region are using mounts in paths unknown to the enemy and falling unawares on the strongly fortified Austrian trenches. Almost all of this region is now in the hands of Italians.

Italian troops have occupied Mori, on the railroad from Rovereto to Arco and Riva, important towns at the head of Lake Garda. As there is only one railroad in this section, the fall of Arco and Riva before the Italians invading Trentino from the western side is believed to be only a question of a few days.

The crossing of the Isonzo, and especially the occupation of the town of Monfalcone by the Italians, has had a tremendous effect on the defenses of Goritza and Trieste.

Besides utilizing the waters of the Isonzo for irrigation the Austrians depended on the river for the 2800 horsepower electric energy used in lighting Trieste and nearby cities, and also to furnish electric power for military purposes, especially for the working of the guns in the Goritza batteries.

Turkish Transports Sunk

A telegram from Athens says news has been received there from Mudros that a British submarine torpedoed and sank three Turkish transports loaded with troops, in the Dardanelles above Nagara. The greater part of the troops and crews are said to have been drowned.

Mudros is a port on the island of Lemnos, off the entrance to the Dardanelles straits.

It is officially announced that the Italian submarine Medusa has been torpedoed and sunk by an Austrian submarine, says a dispatch from Rome.

The Medusa was a vessel of 211 tons and was built in 1911. She had a speed of thirteen knots above water and eight knots submerged. Her ordinary complement was fourteen men.

EXPERT TO VISIT AMERICA

Britisher to Discuss Whole Question of Contracts For Munitions

David Lloyd George, minister of munitions, is arranging to send a business man to America to discuss the whole question of American and Canadian contracts for war munitions. George made an announcement to this effect in the house of commons in reply to criticism that Canadian manufacturers were required to deal with the imperial government through the house of J. P. Morgan & Co.

Ronald McNeill, Unionist, who raised the question, intimated that some Canadian firms refused to transact business through the agency in the United States and he asked whether George intended to adhere to a condition "which is resented by manufacturers of British nationality and which hampers and limits the supply of munitions of war."

DENIAL OF GERMAN HOAX

Bernstorff Will Make Personal Explanation to State Department

An emphatic official denial of the report that the German ambassador had violated the courtesy of the United States state department by sending Dr. Alfred Meyer of the supply department of the German army to Germany under a safe conduct secured for Dr. Meyer-Gerhard, special envoy from the German ambassador to the German foreign office, was wired to the state department by Counsellor von Helmhausen of the German embassy, now located at Cedarhurst, L. I.

Ambassador von Bernstorff personally telegraphed to the state department that he would call upon Secretary of State Lansing at once. It is assumed he will deny the charges made against him in the press.

MAIL TAMPERED WITH

American Letters Opened and Censored by British Officials

Formal notice that United States mail pouches destined for Sweden had been broken open in England and their contents tampered with, letters being opened and censored, was submitted to the American state department by W. A. F. Ekengren, the Swedish minister, with a request for appropriate action.

Two specific cases were mentioned, one involving mails sent on the American steamer New York, when she left on May 29, and the other pouches carried by the British steamer Adriatic, which sailed on May 27.

Unofficially it was stated in allied diplomatic circles that there had been instances of interference with official mail in this country.

TAUNTON ASYLUM REPORT BLAMES QUINCY POLICE

Censure Local Authorities For Treatment of W. A. Coffin

The Board of Trustees of the Taunton Insane Asylum, in its report to the State Board of Insanity says that the death of William A. Coffin, a veteran fireman of this city, within 87 hours of admission to the hospital is frankly a puzzle. The autopsy showed that his death was the result of violence. The report states:

"Proof that the patient did not receive his injuries at the hospital is hard to obtain because of certain lapses in the record. Yet, it cannot be held that the hospital must show where the injuries were received in order to clear itself. The examination was not as complete as it is now wished —— and that is much regretted."

The report of great length and very complete censures the Quincy police for allowing an insane man to be placed in a cell where he could injure himself, without having a guard watch put over him.

"A system," states the report, "which allows an insane man of restless and climbing tendencies to remain in a cell from 5 A. M. to 4.20 P. M. with likelihood of falls and a certainty that he fell once seems uncalled for. Had this patient been kept in a room bare of bunks and seat, with a mattress on the floor a different story might have been told."

Coffin is known to have fallen at the police station and it was said he was uninjured. "However," says the report, "much of the mystery of the case would have been cleared if committing doctors were required to make and report a more detailed physical examination."

Since the case happened new arrangements for the examination of patients upon admission have been made and this work will now be done in a special room, fully equipped, rather than in the wards.

THIS WILL STOP THOSE JOY RIDES

The Seventeenth was paint up day with the city. All of the city automobiles were sent to the city stables where a painter was busy all day painting the name of the department to which the car was attached and the words, City of Quincy, on each side of the body of the car. The letters are of good size so that he who runs may read and there will be no mistaking the fact that the automobile belongs to the city.

After the game boats were engaged and the remainder of the afternoon was spent in rowing about the pond, in taking pictures of groups of the picnicers, etc. A hike was also taken to the top of the Blue Hills by a number of the young people. It was late when the homeward trip was started and City square was not reached until 11 o'clock.

SQUANTUM ENJOYS MINISTREL SHOW

Every Number Was a Hit At Joyous Revelry of Merry Mirth

SQUANTUM SINGERS STAR

The annual minstrel show of the Squantum Improvement Association was held Wednesday and Thursday evenings at Richards Memorial hall. It was a tremendous success in every way.

At eight-fifteen the curtain went up. The circle of eighteen colored gentlemen in white ducks and gay ties with the end men impersonating different races were Russell Rich, Italian; John Jepson, Swede; Elmer Harper, tramp; William Spargo, Jew; James Allen, Irish, and Eddie Carlson, farmer. J. H. Sumner was interlocutor. Charles Bostwick directed and Ethel Jones Bostwick was the accompanist.

After the opening chorus which was finely rendered, James Allen sang, "Broadway Tipperary" and received a great hand. Russell Rich sang "Fatima Brown" and responded to an encore. John Jepson made the hit of the show when he sang "On the 5.15" and when repeatedly called back he got off some local hits to the same tune.

E. W. Kirby, one of Squantum's popular singers, sang "Love's Sorrow" in a full rich voice that won the audience. Mr. Kirby had to sing the second time before the audience would allow him to sit down. "Wa'al I Swan'" by Edward Carlson was well done. Elmer Harper who seemed to have a grudge against the Ford cars sung "Little Old Ford" and later sprung some clever jokes about the "flivver."

When William Spargo sung "Wedding Jubilee" in the Yiddish dialect he immediately made good and was called to the platform to sing again. His make-up was a scream.

The chorus "Stars and Stripes" closed the first half of the performance.

Mr. Sumner announced that some of the talent engaged for the olio was unable to appear both nights thus necessitating a change in the program.

George Jones, a dramatic reader of note gave "The Uncle" and responded with "The Lobster and the Dog."

William Hill a clever tenor singer sung "I hear you calling me" and "There'll never be one like you."

A burlesque on the sextette of "Lucia" was a scream. Tim O'Hoolihan, James Allen; Cyrus Wanterbottom, Edward Carlson; Abe Einstein, William Spargo; Yon Yonson, John Jepson James Sumner and James Foster composed the sextette and what they did'nt do to "Lucia."

The chorus singers were: F. H. Bond, C. H. Singleton, Roger Mason, H. F. Anderson, J. H. Foster, E. W. Kirby, L. W. Gregson, W. J. Whitley, Joseph Gregory, Chauncey Paul, Joseph Uppling.

The ends were Tim O'Hooligan, James Allen; Cyrus Winterbottom, Edward Carlson; Antonio Gabooch, Russell Rich; Dusty Rhodes, Elmer Harper; Abe Einstein, William Spargo; and Yon Yonson, John Jepson, Jr.

On Thursday night the olio included D. W. MacNiven, in a monologue, and specialty by W. F. Kent of New York, a brother-in-law of Mr. Sumner.

The general committee were John R. Nelson, John Holmes, W. C. Spargo, J. H. Sumner, W. J. Whitley, Herbert A. Smith, Frank Anderson, Charles Bostwick was chairman, and director. The proceeds will be used, as in previous years to buy oil for spraying stagnant pools to exterminate mosquitoes.

BRIDEGROOM IS CAPTURED

Friends Rescue G. F. Angell, However

But for the prompt and efficient work of a rescuing party headed by the fathers of the bride and groom Wednesday evening, the Ledger composing room force might be minus one of its efficient workers in the person of George Frederick Angell of Malden. It was a bold attempt of some of his friends to separate him from his bride of but a few minutes. His friends did succeed in getting him some distance from the home of his bride, but here he was rescued by the allies who had given chase in a speedy automobile.

His bride was Miss Agnes Claire Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Smith of Saugus, and the ceremony took place at the Blessed Sacrement church of that town at 8 o'clock Wednesday, Rev. T. J. Tough, officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father.

Miss Clara McClure of Atlantic was the maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Miss Marion Angell of Malden, a sister of the groom and Miss Marion Manning of Saugus. The flower girls were Miss Margaret Griffin and Miss Ethel Shortall.

William J. Angell of Malden, a brother of the groom, was the best man and the ushers were Frank Angell of Malden, S. J. Smith of Saugus, Albert Smith of South Boston, and Edward L. Cox of Saugus. Miss Annie Garra presided at the organ and played the wedding march.

A reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride, the bridal party being assisted in receiving by the Dreadnought club, of which the bride is a past president, the receiving party standing beneath a large American flag and a bower of white roses.

The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond bracelet and to the best man a travelling bag. The bride's gifts to the bridesmaids were pendants.

It was during the latter part of the reception that the bride and groom stood on the stairway preparatory to taking their departure when the groom was kidnapped. He was taken to the street and hustled into a train and thence to East Saugus. In the meantime the fathers of the bride and groom had secured a fast automobile, some allies, and had speeded to the rescue.

Mr. and Mrs. Angell will make their home at 285 Whitwell street, Quincy, where they will be at home after July 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Angell were the recipients of many gifts which included a dining room set from the parents of the bride, an art square rug from the mother of the groom and a chest of silver from an uncle.

HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS HAVE ANNUAL RECEPTION

Large Number Attend Big Social Event at Music Hall

Over 400 people attended the annual senior reception held by the graduating class of Quincy High school in Music hall Friday evening. One hundred and thirty were members of the class while the rest were invited guests, parents, post graduates and pupils at the school. The party was one of the most enjoyable of the season.

Superintendent of Schools and Mrs. A. L. Barbour and Headmaster and Mrs. E. L. Collins were the patrons and patronesses of the affair. They received in a corner, heavily banked with potted plants and palms, around which were twined streamers of green and gold, the class colors.

The decorations were simple but effective and consisted of streamers of class colors which draped the walls between the windows, the front of the balcony and the large chandelier in the centre of the hall. Relieving the streamers were garlands of flowers, from which hung the loose ends of prettily bowed ribbons. A large American flag, illuminated with a string of paper lanterns, hung across the stage while over the front of the platform was a banner bearing the class motto in Latin, "Yield Not To Temptation." The Roman numerals of '15 were suspended from the streamers in various parts of the hall.

The special guests of the evening were the teachers at the school, nearly all of whom were present. They were tendered a warm reception by the "grads."

Mr. and Mrs. Barbour and Mr. and Mrs. Collins received until nine o'clock and as each guest was presented they passed the dance order of the evening to them. The order called for but three varieties of dancing, waltzes, fox trots and one steps.

A few minutes after nine o'clock the grand march was formed, headed by Miss Florence Crowell, a post graduate of the school, and Donald Crocker, president of the class. In the line were over 150 couples. After the forming of the circle the dancing was on. "Cut ins" were allowed after the first encore and all took advantage of the privilege.

The different classes represented were roundly cheered during the evening. The cheering was started now and then by four or five boys and by the time the yell was repeated all of the boys of the class had joined the happy party. The roundest cheer was that given the graduating class between the "special" dedicated to them. The classes of 1916, '11 and '10 came in for their share.

When the festivities commenced at nine o'clock fully 400 people were in the hall, the younger folks on the floor, while the older ones thronged the balcony Formalities were soon set aside and all entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion

The music of the evening was furnished by Winthrop's orchestra of Somerville and the frappe was served during the evening by Merline of Norfolk Downs from a prettily decorated booth

The evening was in charge of the reception committee—Reginald Gay, Miss Louise Churchil, vice president of the class, Miss Marion Wilson, Miss Margaret Park, Robert Davis and Lincoln Crosscup. Assisting them were the class officers Donald Crocker, president, Miss Dorothy Brown, secretary and Frederick Roache, treasurer.

The party continued until midnight.

AWARD $200 AS DAMAGES

Plaintiff Says Saville Street is Public Way

The status of Saville street, which has long agitated the minds of depressionists, elevationists and grade crossing abolitionists gnerally, came near being submitted to a jury at Dedham Friday. An agreement between counsel that it didn't make any difference whether Saville street was a public or a private way finally saved the jury the trouble of deciding the question.

The question arose Thursday afternoon in the trial of the case of Annie Alexander against the New Haven road to recover damages for being struck on the head by a gate at the Saville street crossing on September 25, 1913. Mrs. A. J. LaCroix, who was a witness to the accident, was asked by John D. Mackay, attorney for the plaintiff, whether there was much travel over the railroad tracks at the crossing, and the witness answered, "Yes, quite a lot; it is a public way."

Lawyer Wentworth of the firm of Choate, Hall and Stewart, who appeared for the road, asked that the last part of the answer be stricken out

"You don't deny that it is a public way; do you?" asked Mr. Mackay.

"Yes, we do deny it and we claim it is not a public way," replied Mr. Wentworth.

After a few questions were asked Mrs. LaCroix as to the character and volume of travel over the crossing, court adjourned for the day. Friday morning Lawyer Mackay asked the Judge to suspend trial of the case until Monday morning to give him an opportunity to get the Highway Commissioners to court and prove whether or not Saville street had been declared by them to be a public way. Counsel for the defence objected to a suspension. Finally, after a conference in the judge's room it was agreed that the jury might be informed that the legal status of Saville street did not make any difference so far as the questions of negligence and due care were concerned. With that understanding the trial proceeded.

The jury decided in favor of the plaintiff and assessed the damages at two hundred dollars. Mrs. Alexander claimed that the gate came down on her head without warning, while the man who tended the gate at that time testified that she bumped her head against the gate and just disarranged her hat. There was considerable conflict as to which side of the head the plaintiff was struck on and also as to the extent of the injury.

LEARY STOPS RUNAWAY HORSE

Arthur Leary, the genial caretaker of the Furnace Brook parkway, proved himself the man of the hour Friday afternoon when he stopped the runaway horse attached to a Boston baker's team as it was coming down Common street toward Adams. Adams street at this point is usually lined with autos and had the horse gotten away from Mr. Leary a serious accident might have occurred. He was dragged about twenty feet but regained his footing and brought the horse to a standstill.

OBSERVES HER 9th BIRTHDAY

Doris Crapon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Crapon, celebrated her ninth birthday anniversary Friday by entertaining a number of her young girl friends at her home, 10 Alleyne terrace. The afternoon was passed in a pleasant manner with games, etc., not forgetting the cutting of a birthday cake when refreshments were served. Miss Doris received a number of birthday remembrances from her friends.

SEVENTH ANNUAL JUNE FESTIVAL

Gaily Decorated Lawn Resembles Amusement Park

The seventh annual June Festival held by the Wollaston Unitarian church opened auspiciously Friday evening on the spacious grounds of Charles T. Baker, Safford street, Wollaston.

As in previous years nothing was left undone to appeal to the visitor. Gaily decked with bunting and brilliantly illuminated with hundreds of electric lights the scene was an attractive one.

Here and there on the smooth cut lawns under low hanging trees were tables, presided over by pretty young women, where a variety of things might be purchased.

The main attraction was the "gay light way," so called, where about every activity associated with the summer amusement park was in active operation. Accompanied by the amusing cries of the barkers, the booths attracted large crowds.

Here were the knockdown dolls, the hoopla, the daffy darts, spot the spot, lucky toss, crockery shower, peanut grab, fish pond and dozens of other coin catchers.

Professor Green's hot dogs were sizzling on the gridiron and refreshment booths, the candy table and ice cream parlor completed the list. At stated intervals the Quincy National band rendered pleasing selections.

This afternoon there will be special events for the children and a special department devoted to the sale of homemade food.

BETHANY BRIDES GUESTS OF HONOR

The membership committee of the Bethany Woman's union held a most enjoyable garden party Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. A. L. Melcher on Bigelow street, with the recent Bethany brides as their guests. The day was ideal, and the abundance of roses in the garden made a beautiful setting for the party.

The brides invited were Mrs. Chester Pepper, Mrs. Charles Hart, Mrs. William Ross, Mrs. Charles Brown, Mrs. M. F. Gronberg, Mrs. F. Muirhead, Mrs. Richard Wetherell and Mrs. Robert Robinson. Ices and cake were served.

N. E. O. P. HOLD FLAG NIGHT

Patriotic Societies Attend Exercises

Large delegations from the patriotic societies of the city attended the annual Flag Night of Quincy lodge, New England Order of Protection, in Electa hall Friday evening and extended a royal welcome to Alfred N. Knowles of Arlington, past department commander of the G. A. R.

Mr. Knowles talked for over an hour, during which he carefully avoided all reference to the European and Mexican situations. His talk was mainly in a reminiscent strain, enlivened with anecdotes of his boyhood, before the war, and how the young men flocked to the defense of a flag for one nation in '61.

The flag drill given by the staff of the John R. Hawes Women's Relief Corps of E. Boston provoked a stirring patriotic demonstration. All stood as the visitors, dressed in white and carrying silk flags, entered the hall, and remained standing during the drill. The intricate maneuvers were splendidly given.

Patriotic Instructor Mrs. Marie A. Rodgers closed the drill by presenting a large silk banner to the lodge, the acceptance being made by James M. Ellison, warden of the organization and chairman of the evening.

The musical entertainment consisted of orchestra selections, a song, "Somewhere Goodbye" by Mrs. E. Stanton; a reading, "On the Rappahanock", by Mrs. Isabel V. Sawin, violin solos by Miss Cecelia Arenberg.

Remarks were made by Lawrence B. W. Connell of Boston and Edward B. Lawrence, members of the supreme credential committee of the order.

The exercises closed about 10.30 with the singing of "America," by those present, after which dancing was enjoyed.

The organizations represented were Paul Revere post, G. A. R., the Women's Relief Corps, Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans and other patriotic organizations of the city.

EXPLANATION OF WILLIAMS ROW

That the dispute which lead to a request for police protection on his walk home by Nicholas Williams, business agent of the local branch of the Granite Cutters Union at the meeting Wednesday night was William's fault is the assertion of some of those who attended.

Arthur Ness, vice president of the local branch and an impartial witness, gives the following explanation of the events leading up to the affair. He says that there was a discussion regarding the time of some meeting. An Italian, a member of the union, said Williams announced the time for the opening of the meeting as nine o'clock. Williams sprang to his feet and declared that his announcement had given the right hour, 6.30 P. M. Mr. Ness says that Williams declared the man who made the accusation was a liar.

The Italian replied that Williams himself was a liar. Williams, according to Mr. Ness, thereupon took off his coat and declared he was willing to back up what he said. Further trouble was prevented by other members. According to Mr. Ness the Italian said something about settling it in the street. Mr. Ness said this was the only sentence which could possibly be construed into a threat.

VISITING HERE.

TWO KILLED WHEN JONES AIRSHIP FALLS TO EARTH

Aviator Jones At Hospital But Not Fatally Injured

Harry Jones, pilot of the biplane which met with a mishap in midair in Squantum Friday evening and dropped to earth, carrying two passengers to almost instant death and injuring himself, rests comfortably at the Quincy City Hospital.

This morning he was practically conscious but has no clear recollection of the affair, neither does he know that George H. Hersey, Jr., of Squantum and William Ely, of Providence, R. I., are both dead. This information will not be communicated to him until he is pronounced out of danger by the attending physicians.

Jones is confined to the private ward where he was taken after an examination in the operating room in the hospital. He is under the constant care of nurses. Most of the night he was semi-conscious and quite an improvement was noted this morning. No bones are broken but he suffers from multiple bruises and lacerations. Unless internal injuries develop he should be able to leave the institution within a short time.

Jones was carefree and happy Friday as he entertained Ely at dinner at the home of Mrs. Herman Berghaus on Bellevue road, where he has roomed since coming to Squantum two months ago, and both talked over coming events. Ely was an enthusiastic listener to the story of his flight

EXPLAINS WORKING OF SUBMARINE AND TORPEDO

Wollaston Yacht Club Hold Very Successful Smoker

At the smoker held by the Wollaston Yacht club, Friday evening, a committee was appointed to confer with a similar committee of the Squantum Yacht club with the question of consolidation in view.

While the committee was given no powers the step is far in advance of any yet made and matters look more hopeful than ever for the happy joining of the two clubs—a matter which has been boosted, off and on, for many years.

The committee as appointed consists of Commodore Frank F. Taylor, Vice Commodore Quincy A. Lothrop, Ex-Commodore Edward A. Bean, Ex-Commodore F. E. Dawes, Ex-Commodore J. A. Fenno and A T. Barstow.

The action came at the conclusion of a liveiy debate in which several participated. At the meeting the by-laws were amended to provide for an "X" on the ex-commodores' caps to replace the third star now worn.

A petition to the State Board of Health was prepared asking relief from the disagreeable and unsanitary stench that arises from the mouth of Sachem brook at low tide.

The feature of the evening was an interesting and detailed description of "Submarines" by Eric H. Ewertz of Wollaston, superintendent of marine construction for the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation.

Besides going into the history and improvements of the craft the speaker made an interesting comparison of the equipment of the larger powers and went thoroughly into submarine construction with the additional help of a large chart.

There are 40 submarines used for coast defence in the United States, while there are 70 in England. Germany had 30 at the beginning of the war but with others built and some destroyed the number is doubtful now. The French have a great number of boats, over 100, but very few are servicable now. Russia has about a dozen and other countries varying numbers.

The operation of the submarine proved interesting. The trimming ship by water ballast, the operation of the periscope and control levers, the system of ventilation and the running of the craft by oil engines or electric motors was described.

The crew of over a score has every comfort of home, sleeping quarters, improved methods of cooking and refrigeration being provided.

The firing of the deadly torpedo was minutely described. Once released the delicate destructive instrument, over 16 feet long, goes forward under its own propulsion.

It can be accurately adjusted and af its forward end has a charge of 200 pounds of gun cotton. A more deadly device in the shape of an 8 inch gun loaded with an 8 inch fused shell has now been invented.

This will penetrate deeply into a ship and at the proper time the shell is exploded with great destruction.

The large number of safety devices signalling apparatus and other means of protection came in for their share of attention and the lecture closed with a rising vote of thanks and three cheers for Superintendent Ewertz.

Vocal solos by Ex-Commodore F. E. Dawes, accompanied by Charles E. Decker entitled "Hark, the Bugle" and "The Lads of the Red, White and Blue" were enjoyed. The evening was enlivened with music by the club orchestra and a buffet lunch was served.

NAMBY PAMBY JUSTICE.

Such hoodlumism as evidenced itself Thursday during the parade in Charlestown, when the carriage in which Governor Walsh and Mayor Curley were riding was bombarded with bottles thrown from a roof by idiotic boys, should be curbed with a firm hand. It is as easy for the courts to err on the side of over leniency as it is for them to err on the side of over harshness. The development of the probation system is a notable achievement and has resulted in incalculable good but it may be carried too far.

No court can afford to acquire a reputation for over leniency for this means an outbreak of crime in the community which the court serves. If a hearing in court becomes nothing more than an investigation by the probation officer the court will soon lose its dignity. Frequently the police are blamed for failure to check lawlessness but often the courts are to blame. Officials of police departments often use much time and labor working up a conviction of some person who has committed some minor offense which is becoming all too common. They hope by the conviction, followed by a stiff sentence, to make an examble which will be felt.

They secure the conviction. The defendant is adjudged guilty and then the judge imposes sentence. Often the sentence is stiff enough but its effect is sometimes nullified by the little "rider" which says that the sentence is suspended and the culprit is placed on probation. Usually this is justified but not always. In making final disposition of the cases which come before them judges should closely examine the particular case and should each time reflect what will be the probable effect upon others if the case is placed on probation. In their eagerness to help the individual, in itself a worthy thing, they should not lose sight of the welfare of the community.

WHY NOT QUINCY GRANITE?

Here is a chance for some Quincy Granite firm. The United States government is in the market, according to the report, for 14,000 good tombstones, and bids are invited to be sent to the quartermaster's department at once for Boston is short just 14,000 headstones.

The government has no immediate use for these headstones but it always carries a supply on hand for emergencies. In most of the quartermasters' departments there is a good supply but not in the New England department.

When a soldier dies he may be buried where he pleases and the government is pledged to supply him with a gravestone, so that it is necessary to have a supply on hand at all times.

There has been a great deal of smoke but little fire in that fire department investigation. It may be hoped that the investigation will be thorough and if there is anything wrong that it will be pointed out clearly and emphatically so that steps toward securing a remedy may be taken.

Sunday is close at hand. Will those municipal joy riders feel quite so happy in using up city money for their private pleasure with the words "City of Quincy" and the name of the department painted on the city's automobiles. It seems as if his honor had devised a pretty effective way of stopping the practice.

There was no flinching upon the part of the members of the local Machine Gun Company Thursday and the militiamen carried out their tour of duty despite the downpour. The Machine Gun Company any day is likely to become something more than a social and ornamental organization and it is pleasant to note that the members realize this.

Almost any time during the day City square with all the autos lined up looks as busy as the main street of a fashionable resort on Cape Cod at the height of the season, and that is saying a great deal. It was only a few years ago that some of our merchants were complaining that Hancock street was too wide for business. The Cape has one advantage, however, in its beautiful elm and shade trees.

SITUATION IN BELGIUM

Blgium still calls for aid, still places its dependence upon the world's charity. The Commission for Relief in Belgium has bought and carried into that country food to the value of $65,000,000. All people who have been able to pay for their food have been obliged to do so, and the money thus collected has been used to buy more supplies. In this way the capital supplied by the Belgian people has been used over and over again. Even so, there are according to the Commission, 1,700,000 people in Belgium who are absolutely destitute—practically one-fourth o the population. They cannot pay a cent for the food required to sav them from starvation. Charity mus come to their aid; hence the appea of the Commission to the people of the United States who have al ready given so much, to give more —New Bedford Standard.

Only 5% PLUS for the Best "Non-Skid"

PRACTICALLY all Non-Skid Tires that make serious claims to non-skid efficiency cost you 10% to 30% more than Plain Tread Tires of same brand and material.

Goodrich Safety Tread Tires cost you only 5% more than our plain tread tires.

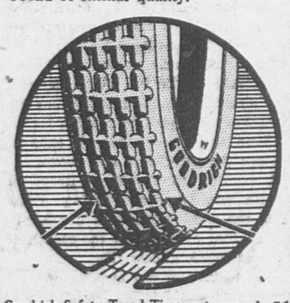

Here's how and Why!

* * *

FORTY-FIVE years of Rubber working (in what is now the World's largest Rubber Factory) has taught us a few Kinks and Short-cuts that are not common to the Trade.

One of these now comes to the help of your Pocket-book.

Through the simple process of Thinking Hard (and being Candid with ourselves) we have found a Short-Cut to make the best Safety Tread ever put on a Tire cost us only about 5% more than it costs to make the Plain-Tread of similar quality.

Goodrich Safety Tread Tires cost you only 5% more than our own or any other plain-tread tires.

Note the following table of comparative prices on non-skid tires. Columns headed "A," "B," "C" and "D" represent four highly advertised tires:

Size	Goodrich Safety Tread	OTHER MAKES "A"	"B"	"C"	"D"
30 x 3	$9.45	$10.55	$10.95	$16.35	$18.10
30 x 3½	12.20	13.35	14.20	21.70	23.60
32 x 3½	14.00	15.40	16.30	22.85	25.30
34 x 4	20.35	22.30	23.80	31.15	33.55
37 x 5	33.90	39.80	41.80	49.85	52.05

By testing out these Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires on a large number of Taxicabs (where they could be competitively observed and carefully checked up at the end of each day's use) and by comparing their actual performance with that of our own, and other Plain-Treads, of much higher price, we have had this fact forced upon us—

Viz:

—That there is SURPRISINGLY more Mileage, in Goodrich Safety Tread Tires, than in our own, or any other, make of Plain-Tread Tires.

So MUCH more Mileage, for only 5% more Cost looked so good to us that we decided to give Car Owners the benefit.

Here's what we now offer you!

The best Non-Skid Safety Tread ever put on the market, and it costs you only 5% more than our best plain tread tire.

HOME BUILDING CONTINUES ACTIVE

Several Projects Are Under Way Which Have Not Yet Come to A Head

PERMITS FOR THIS WEEK

Home building continues active in Quincy if the reports of the Building Inspector can be taken as an indication, although this week does not show as many dwelling permits as a week ago. There are several propositions under way which have not come to a head yet.

Frequent mention has been made of the business block opposite the Wollaston depot. A permit for the building has already been issued and work is begun excavating for the foundation but is held up temporarily waiting for the action of the City Council. At a recent meeting of the Council a public hearing was held on the proposition to change the grade of Beale street near Greenwood avenue. If the grade is changed as contemplated it will mean the new block will have to be set higher and it will not be necessary to excavate so deep for the foundation.

The changing of the grade of Beale street at this point is an important matter. It is well known that at the present time the grade of approach to the bridge over the railroad track is very steep, and when the four railroad tracks are put in the bridge will have to be widened. This means, unless the grade of the street is changed, that the grade at the aproach to the bridge will be much higher than at present, almost a prohibitive grade.

The plans for changing the grade on which a hearing was held show that it is proposed to fill the street several feet between the bridge toward Hancock street which would be much easier approach and a general improvement all around. If the contractors on the new block go ahead with their work and the city changes the grade it means heavy damage for some one, probably the city.

A similar condition existed at the corner of Hancock and School streets. The contractor of the block had commenced to excavate for the foundation of the building on the present line of the street. A conference was held with the Webb Realty Co., and as a result an agreement was reached that the city establish a new building line on School street and that the street be widened at this point immediately. An agreement was also reached as to what damages should be paid for land taken and for work already done on the foundation.

If the agreement is carried through it is probable that action will be taken by the City Council at an early date. While no one has a right to find the city it is believed in this case where the agreement was entered into after a conference, with the Mayor, City Solicitor, City Engineer, Commissioner of Public Works, and the chairmen of the street and finance committees of the City Council, it will be carried out.

To get back to new buildings the inspector reports this week that permits have been issued as follows:

Charles Morton, hen house, Bennington street.

William Cash, alter dwelling, Howard avenue.

Chester E. Blockley, dwelling Washington street.

E. H. Sears, garage, Kemper street.

Matilda Finish, dwelling, Charles street.

Mrs. Minnie E. Lowe, dwelling Washington street.

O. H. Dugan, dwelling, Hancock street.

Elizabeth Fisher, shop, Farrington street.

Rosa Fleishman, barn, Farnum street.

Daniel J. Holmes, dwelling, Kemper street.

Mrs. Charles H. Dahlberg, dwelling Quincy street.

Joseph Rutcher, garage, Palmer street.

N. H. Lewis, hen house, Prospect street.

Carl W. A. Linder, dwelling, Buckley street.

Rev. Welles M. Partridge, of Prospect avenue who has been officiating at St. John's church, Portsmouth, N. H., for two months, has been requested by Bishop Parker to remain as rector until the middle of September.

SURPRISE PARTY.

Members of the Chicatawbut Camp Fire and other friends gave a surprise party, Tuesday evening to Miss Alice Brooks. Games were played the first part of the evening and ghost stories were told.

While the lights were low Miss Alice Charlesworth presented the book and bouquet of pink roses and carnations to Miss Brooks and some very appropriate verses composed by Miss Elsie Turner.

Games were begun again and the ghost game particularly caused much laughter and excitement.

Refreshments were served by Florence Smith and Helen Peterson. At half past ten the party started homeward after spending a very pleasant evening. The party consisted of Misses Alice Brooks, Elsie Turner, Maude Thayer, Alice Charlesworth, Florence Smith, Lucille Snow, Katherine Finn, Esther Murphy, Francis Horton, Claire Manning, Marion Brown, Ebba Holteen, Dorothy Hammond, Margaret Warddell, Elsie Peterson and Helen Peterson.

The girls held their business meeting Wednesday afternoon at the High school. Plans were made for next year and officers were elected as follows: Florence Smith, president; Alice Charlesworth, secretary; and Francis Horton, treasurer. New members voted into the camp fire are Katherine Finn, Lucille Snow and Marion Brown

GUILD ENJOYS OUTING.

The St. Margaret's guild of Christ church held its outing, in spite of the inclement weather in Canton. Houghton's Pond was the goal, but on leaving the car, the girls were caught in the storm. They took refuge in the old Russell estate on Randolph avenue. After lunching on the spacious veranda games were played in the living room.

When the day cleared, races were held in the yard. The sack race was won by Marion Weber; three-legged race by Ruth Dahl and Edith Mullin; egg races by Lena Allen and Edith Mullin, with Ruth Dahl a close second. "Tag," "Blind-Man's-Bluff" and "Three- deep" enlivened the party.

Later in the day they adjourned to Houghton's Pond, secured boats and spent a pleasant time on the water.

The games were in charge of Bertha Wallace, president, and Lydia Djerf.

Tired but happy they arrived home late in the evening.

MISS CURRAN GRADUATES.

Miss Mae Curan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Curran of Weymouth and sister of Mrs. T. J. Sullivan of 69 Main street, was graduated this morning from the Charlesgate Hospital at Cambridge as a trained nurse. She enrolled there three years ago, and has been given special mention frequently during her course.

Miss Curran, has a large circle of friends in this city. In the fall she will enter Tufts Medical school for a course in medicine.

BUSY SESSION DUE MONDAY

Monday night's meeting of the City Council promises to be a busy one. To be sure there are no public hearings to take up the time of the Council but there are many important matters on the calendar aside from what matters may be reported by the finance committee.

In the calendar are all of the orders for rebuilding streets, amounting to $33,000. There is no loan attached to any of these orders the money being provided by a loan order which is pending before the finance committee. If this order is reported, as it doubtless will be, and passed, then the street rebuilding orders will go through without any question. If, however, the loan order fails to pass it will be useless to pass the rebuilding orders for the work can not be carried out. It will be a simple matter to pass these orders for but twelve votes are required. The loan order however is a different matter for sixteen votes will be required to pass it.

There are several other important matters which the finance committee is expected to report upon, namely the temporary loan order for $100,000 and the order to purchase land and erect permanent quarters for the Grand Army. Both of these orders if reported are sure to cause debate, so that it is fair to presume that the session will be a busy one.

There is some question whether the special committee which have been investigating the fire department will be able to report, and it is among the probabilities that the committee will ask for further time.

GIRLS CHOIR HAS ELECTION

The girls' vested evening choir of Bethany church held its last business meeting of the season Friday evening at the church. It was also the occasion of the choir saying good-bye to Mrs. F. J. Moore, for several years the leader of the choir. At the business session the following officers were elected:

President, Miss Marjorie Welch.
Vice President, Miss Esther Beckford.
Secretary, Miss Helen Mitchell.
Treasurer, Miss Alice Parker.

After the business session Mrs. Moore was presented with a silver creamer, sugar bowl and tray, by the choir as a slight token of appreciation for her work as leader. The presentation speech was made by Miss Helen Mitchell, past president of the choir.

Mrs. Moore was much surprised and affected by the unexpected gift. She said that she should always consider the girls as her choir and would always remember the many pleasant hours spent with them. If at any time they needed her help they had only to call upon her.

This afternoon the choir is holding its annual outing with Miss Florence Sabean at Adams shore.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

HAS HAD VERY LONG SERVICE

George H. Dunham one of the conductors on the Quincy division of the Bay Street Railway enjoys the distinction of being the oldest conductor of the division and wears on his cap the number 3201 which means that he is No. 1. George is a Vermont boy, having been born in Putney, Vt., Nov. 10, 1871. His first work in the street railway line was as a tow boy on horse cars on State street, Springfield in 1883. Later he went to work as a conductor on the horse cars at Holyoke, going from there to Boston as a conductor on the Consolidated lines.

He then returned to Holyoke and later to Springfield where he was employed as a horse car driver. From Springfield he found employment with the West End Street Railway in Boston, then with the East Middlesex company at Malden and from there came to Quincy. This was in 1888 and he has been here ever since. At that time there were four horse cars being run in Quincy. He has followed the growth of the street car business in Quincy from the small five seated horse cars to the large double truck air brake style of cars now in use.

He has been particularly fortunate and during all of his 27 years in street car service has never had an accident which amounted to anything. George is also imbued with an inventive type of mind and has devised several patents but lack of funds has prevented him from putting them on the market. He is married and resides on Grant street. He is the father of ten children, seven of whom are now living.

PLAN GRAND CONCERT.

On Thursday evening, the men of St. Paul's church will give a grand concert and entertainment. The 24th of June is celebrated as a national holiday in Sweden. It is called "Midsummer's Day." The custom has followed the Swedish people to America, and in many parts of this great country the Swedish people will celebrate. The Swedish Methodist people of Quincy are making preparations to celebrate the day in a fitting manner. The concert and entertainment will be held in the church and the men will furnish the program. There will be speeches, readings, music, singing and refreshments. Rev. K. Selin of Brockton will deliver a very interesting lecture, the topic being: "Man Comared With Woman."

SPORTING COMMENT

The first greased pig event in Quincy in years was run off at the outing of the Arthur E. Dorr and Sons Co., Inc., of Boston, at Adams shore, Thursday. The shoat had only a burglar's chance and found it difficult to work more than half way through the lines. "Roddie" Connolly of West Quincy released the animal and started the fun.

Field, track and aquatic events, in addition to the annual races of the Town River Yacht club, will make up part of the July 4th program during the Quincy Point celebration. Base ball games will be the introductory to them.

Inglehart, a Watertown, N. Y. boy who pitched for Munson Academy this spring, is visiting his left fielder, Bennie Johnson at Adams shore. Both boys went through the season in good style.

Quincy was well represented at Williston Academy this year, as in former years. Harold Chapman, considered one of the best of the prep school catchers, was behind the bat and Bob Findley did the box work.

"Porky" Flynn and "Wes" Ganzel left Friday for Granville, N. Y., where they will play base ball this summer. The team is not connected with organized base ball but is a very fast semi-pro combination.

Patsy Duggan, injured while playing with the Fitchburg team of the New England league, is still at his home and may not report for another week.

The fans expect to see the Old Timers and No. Quincy Catholic club play again this season. The Thursday game closed abruptly after the disputing of an umpire's decision.

James McLaughlin of West Quincy, the best junior jumper of the B. A. A., is preparing for the tryouts in the Harvard Stadium. He ought to qualify with flying colors.

BRIEFS

Lieut. Albert Jones, of the regular army, returned Friday to the Canal Zone where he is stationed, after a brief visit.

Lieut. George M. Downes of the Machine Gun Co. was at the school for officers at Southbridge, over the holidays.

Paul Kribbs, custodian of the property of the Quincy Real Estate and Trust Co., left today for Elizabeth, N. Y., for two weeks.

Edward Dow, who has been ill at his father's home in Lynn for several months, has returned to his room at the Quincy Y. M. C. A.

St. Chrysostom's branch of the Girls Friendly society is holding a dancing party in the assembly room of the parish house Saturday evening.

Miss Marquerite S. Lyons is in charge of the city clerks' office at City Hall during the absence of Emery L. Crane in New York.

STATE FEDERATION.

The program for the annual meeting of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's clubs to be held at Marion, June 23 to 25 promises to be most instructive and interesting. One enthusiastic club woman has said, "The large meetings of the Federation are mainly devoted to the inspirational element in the education of club women. The numbers in attendance make it necessary to limit discussion, and the speakers are usually chosen with an eye to their ability to create interest in and to arouse enthusiasm for the subject they present. These send a call to the spirit in their listeners. The value of the conference is that it helps make actual the ideals, trains one to fine issues."

Aside from the regular routine business and the annual reports there will be interesting discussions on settlement work, hospital relief, art, literature, music, civil service reform, conservation, industrial and social conditions, education, home economics and public health.

There will be special addresses on The Fight Against Cancer, Unemployment, Insurance and Prison Reform.

The Quincy Women's club will be represented by its president Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham and Mrs George L. Badger, Mrs. William F. Cummings and Mrs. W. Ward Whitcher. The Wollaston club by its president Mrs. William E. Rowe and Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes, Mrs. Ama K. Lee and Mrs. Charles Commins Many club members are also planning to attend.

It may be interesting to recall that the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's clubs began its existence April 1893 when representatives of twenty clubs met to organize. A steady growth throughout the years gives this year a total of more than 64,000 members and nearly 300 clubs. The department work has expanded wonderfully. Grace M. Burt writes: "The growth of the Federation has been gradual and steady showing that the management has been wise and the resulting power certain and far-reaching."

Y. M. C. A. CAMP.

The Braintree Y. M. C. A. opens its camp for boys on July 6th. The camp is situated a short walk from Manomet Beach, ten miles south of Plymouth, where beautiful surf bathing is enjoyed. Within a radius of one mile from the camp are three fresh water ponds, and the situation is certainly an ideal one for camp life for boys.

This camp was built by subscriptions of the citizens of Braintree and is for the use of Braintree and Weymouth boys. The management is of the best and a full camp equipment is at hand. A camp cook looks after the call of the inner man and there are several leaders to see that the boys keep within reasonable bounds. One of these leaders this year is a wireless telegraph operator, and all of the leaders are athletes of note so that the interests of the boys in both study and athletics are greatly encouraged.

If your boys cannot swim send them to Manomet and they will when they return. Parents may feel assured that their boys will be well taken care of.

Charles R. Hill, of Liberty street, East Braintree, is the executive in charge of the camp and he will be glad to answer all inquiries in regard thereto.

HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATION.

The graduating exercises of the class of 1915, Braintree High school were held in the Town hall Wednesday evening before a large and very appreciative assemblage. The various numbers made up a program of unusual excellence, the applause being frequent and hearty.

The stage, transformed into a bower of beauty by the lavish use of flowers, potted plants and the national colors held seats for the graduates who marched to their places to the music of the "Prince Imperial" march played by the school orchestra.

The second number was the song, Angels' Serenade" beautifully rendered by a girls' chorus with a violin obligato by members of the orchestra. The salutatory with essay "The future of the American Girl" was very well given by Miss Marguerite A. Chell. The subject matter gave evidence of careful thought and preparation while the young lady's ease of manner and clear enunciation were charming.

A pleasing innovation was the cello solo "Lied ohne Wortes" well played by Alfred A. Ellsworth.

The essay on "A new slogan for the United States—Conservation" was handled by George Whitmarsh in a way that showed him to be a born orator and a student of ability.

Another novelty, warmly received by the audience was a reading from Mark Twain—"Tom Sawyer's love affair"—rendered by Florence G. Hogan There was no trace of the amateur about the performance and Miss Hogan deserves hearty congratulations for her work. There seems to be a bright future before her in this line of endeavor She was entirely at ease while her clever acting and spirited delivery of the lines visualized the scene clearly to the mind's eye. The next number was a song—"The old folk's medley" by the chorus, sung in a most delightful way.

The class of 1915, continuing the good work of previous classes, raised sufficient money to pay off the remaining indebtedness on the new piano purchased for the school and the chattel mortgage on the instrument was burned in the presence of the audience by George T. Dalton amid loud and long applause. Mr. Dalton explained the circumstances in detail and everybody showed keen interest and pleasure as the legal paper, the last bar to complete ownership, vanished in smoke.

Miss Mabel F. Campbell in a graceful speech, unveiled and presented to the school in behalf of her classmates a bronze bust of Abraham Lincoln. In a brief but heartfelt response, the gift was accepted for the school by Kenneth Thayer of the junior class

Alfred W. Hough handled his essay The road to efficiency" in a scholarly way which betokened plenty of research and thought. The valedictory was delivered by him in a most dignified and impressive manner. The song "Forget-me-not," especially appropos and very tuneful was rendered by a mixed chorus. Robert J. Reardon, the class president presented the class to Dr. Benjamin Hawes, chairman of the school committee and then read the names of the graduates, each one receiving a diploma from Mr. Hawes.

The "French" medals for excellence in scholarship were awarded to Marguerite A. Chell, George Whitmarsh and Alfred W. Hough. The prize offered by the Philergians for the best essay on "Civil Service Reform" was won by Alfred A. Ellsworth.

The exercises were the most unique and interesting held here in many years and show excellent work on the part of superintendent, teachers and pupils in the setting of such a high standard of scholarship. Praise is due Miss Georgiana Taylor, instructor in music for her able drilling and conducting of the chorus and Alfred W. Hough for his good work as pianist and accompanist.

AMUSEMENTS

BOSTON THEATRE.

Mexico and Mexicans will play an important role in the headline feature at the Boston Theatre next week, in the great multiple reel production of "Fighting Bob," which heads the list of attractions announced for New England's greatest motion picture palace the week of June 21st. Another big feature will be the first two-reel release of "Work," the new Charlie Chaplin comedy production, which will be shown for the first time at the Boston Theatre. "Fighting Bob" is described as a mile of film with a separate and distinct thrill every inch. It is in five great parts, with two hundred and seven scenes. Orrin Johnson plays "Bob," and the principal female role is in the hands of Olive Ryndham. Billie Reeves will also appear in another new comedy, and sweet and dainty Mary Pickford will of course be seen in one of her delightful romances. The daily prom concerts by Caroline B. Nichols and her famous Boston Fadettes Women's Orchestra. The show is continuous from ten to ten-thirty. It requires three and one-half hours to sit through the entire performance, and there are no repeats.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

The management of the Lonergan Players at the Majestic Theatre has been most fortunate in securing for the coming week of the star stock season as the visiting star, Edmund Breese, who, it will be remembered, scored such an immense hit at this theatre last summer when he played a two weeks' engagement, appearing in "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Master Mind."

In "The Spendthrift," the drama in which Mr. Breese will be seen next week, New England theatregoers will find a play written from present day life—that is, a true story. This drama derives home the horror of present day extravagance; the woman from which the play derives its name is a handsome girlish creature with a gift for spending money, making friends, and at the same time constantly fearing what they will think of her. The big truth she drives home is wild extravagance and the wreck it makes of a man's life. But the subtler picture she makes, and the truer one, is in the mirror she holds up to a whining soul that is selfish and dense and does not understand; the soul that weeps and wails when the man that works for it begs it to listen to the hard facts of his bankruptcy; that gropes when he talks of his troubles; that plays anything but the rules of the game; that accuses him of not loving it any more as he lowers his voice into serious things; that calls him a coward when he has the courage to begin all over again.

B. F. KEITH'S.

Douglas Fairbanks, the famous star of "A Gentleman From Mississippi," "The Cub," and "A Gentleman of Leisure," and one of the most popular of the younger American actors on the legitimate stage, will be the headliner at B. F. Keith's Theatre the week of June 21. Mr. Fairbanks will appear in a bright one-act comedy from the pen of John Stokes, called "A Regular Business Man." This is the story of a young college boy, who reproached by his father for his wildness in pranks, enters his father's office to become "a regular business man." He succeeds in one day in trimming the old man in the stock market, getting himself made a member of the firm, and ends by marrying the stenographer, all in eight hours' time. Mr. Fairbanks plays the breezy youth just out of college, and Patrica Collinge, of "Everywoman" fame, is the stenographer. Ernest R. Ball, composer of "Love Me and the World is Mine," "Mother MaCree," "A Little Bit of Heaven," and scores of other baliads, including "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," will appear in a new pianologue introducing his very latest song compostions. Other features will include the Nine White Hussars, the famous singing band; Richards and Kyle; Balzar Sisters; Farber Girls; Pinifax and Panlo; Prince Lai Mon Kim, the Chinese tenor; and the Cycling Brunettes.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"Years of Discretion" is the unusual comedy selected by the Craig Players for their bill next week. It is the tale of a woman in her early forties who determines to become young again and by the use of cosmetics, tight corsets and beautiful gowns, captures a millionaire. The woman is a Brookline widow with a son in college. Tiring of her uneventful life and wishing to arouse in men the admiration they once accorded her, she determines to go to New York and put herself in the hands of the beauty doctors. She emerges beautiful and attractive. Men fall at her feet. Finally a millionaire proposes and she accepts him. He too is trying to retain his vanishing youth. Presently, however, the widow wearies of the farce. Her high-heeled boots pinch her feet. Her maid will not allow her to eat her fill for fear of the fatal fat to follow. Her false hair weighs down her head. She confesses her age to her fiance and he sighs with relief and produces a skull cap and spectacles which he has feared to use before. They settle down to a comfortable old age.

Doris Olsson, William Carleton, Theodore Friebus, Donald Meek, James Seeley, Betty Barnicoat and Mabel Colcord will all have prominent parts. The audiences are enthusiastic over the new policy of the movies. Their pictures are taken every day as they leave the theatre, and thrown on the screen each performance the following week.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berea McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the supervising ranger of Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Nesh, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

The night rose formidably from the valley while they ate their supper, but Berrie remained tranquil. "Those horses probably went clean back to the ranch. If they did, daddy can't possibly get back before 8 o'clock, and he may not get back till tomorrow."

Norcross, with his city training, was acutely conscious of the delicacy of the situation. In his sister's circle a girl left alone in this way with a man would have been very seriously embarrassed, but it was evident that Berrie took it all joyously, innocently. Their being together was something which had happened in the natural course of weather, a condition for which they were in no way responsible. Therefore she permitted herself to be frankly happy in the charm of their enforced intimacy.

She had never known a youth of his quality. He was so considerate, so refined, so quick of understanding and so swift to serve. He filled her mind to the exclusion of unimportant matters like the snow, which was beginning again. Indeed, her only anxiety concerned his health, and as he toiled amid the falling flakes, intent upon heaping up wood enough to last out the night, she became solicitous.

"You will be soaked," she warningly cried. "Don't stay out any more. Come to the fire. I'll bring in the wood."

Something primeval, some strength he did not know he possessed sustained him, and he toiled on. "Suppose this snow keeps falling?" he retorted. "The supervisor will not be able to get back tonight—perhaps not for a couple of nights. We will need a lot of fuel."

He did not voice the fear of the storm which filled his thought, but the girl understood it. "It won't be very cold," she calmly replied. "It never is during these early blizzards, and, besides, all we need to do is to drop down the trail ten miles, and we'll be entirely out of it."

"I'll feel safer with plenty of wood," he argued, but soon found it necessary to rest from his labors. Coming in to camp, he seated himself beside her on a roll of blankets, and so together they tended the fire and watched the darkness roll over the lake till the shining crystals seemed to drop from a measureless black arch, soundless and oppressive.

"What time is it now?" she asked abruptly.

He looked at his watch. "Half after 8."

"If father isn't on this side of the divide now he won't try to cross. If he's coming down the slope he'll be here in an hour, although that trail is a tolerably tough proposition this minute. A patch of dead timber on a dark night is sure a nuisance even to a good man. He may not make it."

"Couldn't I rig up a torch and go to meet him?"

She put her hand on his arm. "You stay right here!" she commanded. "You couldn't follow that trail five minutes."

"You have a very poor opinion of my skill."

"No, I haven't; but I know how hard it is to keep direction on a night like this, and I don't want you wandering around in the timber. Father can take care of himself. He's probably sitting under a big tree smoking his pipe before his fire—or else he's at home. He knows we're all right, and we are. We have wood and grub and plenty of blankets and a roof over us. You can make your bed under this fly," she said, looking up at the canvas. "It beats the old balsam as a roof. You mustn't sleep cold again."

"I think I'd better sit up and keep the fire going," he replied heroically. "There's a big log out there that I'm going to bring in to roll up on the windward side."

"It'll be cold and wet early in the morning, and I don't like to hunt kindling in the snow," she said. "I always get everything ready the night before. I wish you had a better bed. It seems selfish of me to have the tent while you are cold."

CHAPTER VIII.

The Walk In the Rain.

ONE by one, under her supervision, he made preparations for morning. He cut some shavings from a dead, dry branch of fir and put them under the fly and brought a bucket of water from the creek, and then together they dragged up the dead tree.

Had the young man been other than he was, the girl's purity, candor and self reliance would have conquered him, and when she withdrew to the little tent and let fall the frail barrier between them she was as safe from intrusion as if she had taken refuge behind gates of triple brass. Nothing in all his life had moved him so deeply as her solicitude, her sweet trust in his honor, and he sat long in profound meditation. Any man would be rich in the ownership of her love he admitted. That he possessed her pity and her friendship he knew, and he began to wonder if he had made a deeper appeal to her than this.

"Can it be that I am really a man to her," he thought, "I who am only a poor weakling whom the rain and snow can appall?"

Then he thought of the effect of this night upon her life. What would Clifford Belden do now? To what deeps would his rage descend if he should come to know of it?

Berrie was serene. Twice she spoke from her couch to say: "You'd better go to bed. Daddy can't get here till tomorrow now."

"I'll stay up awhile yet. My boots aren't entirely dried out."

After a silence she said: "You must not get chilled. Bring your bed into the tent. There is room for you."

"Oh, no, that isn't necessary. I'm standing it very well."

"You'll be sick!" she urged, in a voice of alarm. "Please drag your bed inside the door. What would I do if you should have pneumonia tomorrow? You must not take any risk of a fever."

The thought of a sheltered spot, of something to break the remorseless wind, overcame his scruples, and he drew his bed inside the tent and rearranged it there.

"You're half frozen," she said. "Your teeth are chattering."

"I'll be all right in a few moments," he said. "Please go to sleep. I shall be snug as a bug in a moment."

She watched his shadowy motions from her bed, and when at last he had nestled into his blankets she said, "If you don't lose your chill I'll heat a rock and put it at your feet."

He was ready to cry out in shame of his weakness, but he lay silent till he could command his voice, then he said: "That would drive me from the country in disgrace. Think of what the fellows down below will say when they know of my cold feet!"

"They won't hear of it, and, besides, it is better to carry a hot water bag than to be laid up with a fever."

Her anxiety lessened as his voice resumed its pleasant tenor flow. "Dear girl," he said, "no one could have been sweeter—more like a guardian angel to me. Don't place me under any greater obligation. Go to sleep. I am better—much better now."

She did not speak for a few moments, then in a voice that conveyed to him a knowledge that his words of endearment had deeply moved her she softly said, "Good night."

He heard her sigh drowsily thereafter once or twice, and then she slept, and her slumber redoubled in him his sense of guardianship, of responsibility. Lying there in the shelter of her tent, the whole situation seemed simple, innocent and poetic. But looked at from the standpoint of Clifford Belden it held an accusation.

"It cannot be helped," he said. "The only thing we can do is to conceal the fact that we spent the night beneath this tent alone."

In the belief that the way would clear with the dawn, he, too, fell asleep, while the fire sputtered and smudged in the fitful mountain wind.

The second dawn came slowly, as though crippled by the storm and walled back by the clouds.

With a dull ache in his bones, Wayland crept out to the fire and set to work fanning the coals with his hat, as he had seen the supervisor do. He worked desperately till one of the embers began to angrily sparkle and to smoke. Then, slipping away out of earshot, he broke an armful of dry fir branches to heap above the wet, charred logs. Soon these twigs broke into flame, and Berrie, awakened by the crackle of the pine branches, called out, "Is it daylight?"

"Yes, but it's very dark daylight. Don't leave your warm bed for the dampness and cold out here. Stay where you are. I'll get breakfast."

"How are you this morning? Did you sleep?"

"Fine!"

"I'm afraid you had a bad night," she insisted, in a tone which indicated her knowledge of his suffering.

"Camp life has its disadvantages," he admitted, as he put the coffee pot on the fire. "But I'm feeling better now. I never fried a bird in my life, but I'm going to try it this morning. I have some water heating for your bath." He put the soap, towel and basin of hot water just inside the tent flap. "Here it is. I'm going to bathe in the lake. I must show my hardihood."

ENJOYING THE TRIP.

A card has been received from Miss Alice G. White, librarian of the Thomas Crane Public Library, at present on the Pacific coast, where she went to attend the session of the American Library association. Writing from Portland, Ore., Miss White says: "Fine weather all the way across the continent in special train, the longest that has been taken over the Tennessee pass (10,242 feet high) by one huge engine. We have been entertained along the route at Denver, Salt Lake City, Riverside, Cal., and nowhere more handsomely than here where we have been given an auto ride over the city, visiting the fine library, presided over by a woman, where afternoon tea was served us. We have seen both expositions, San Diego and San Francisco, and had a six days session at Berkeley, Cal. On to Tacoma, Seattle, and home, via the Canadian Rockies."

QUINCY AND BOSTON REACH AGREEMENT

Latter To Pay $9,157.55 For Squantum Back Taxes

It was announced by Mayor Campbell this morning that the controversy over the payment of taxes on the land of the City of Boston at Squantum which has been in dispute for several years had been settled. This matter has been before the city officials for a long time and during the past year tax sales on the property have been held every six days, being adjourned from time to time. The matter was taken up by City Solicitor Walter S. Pinkham early in the year and after mapping out what he conceived the proper course to pursue he laid the matter before Mayor Campbell and the plan was carried out.

Mayor Campbell and Mayor Curley of Boston, under authority of Chapter 280 of the acts of this year's Legislature, have signed an agreement settling the dispute between the cities of Quincy and Boston relative to the taxes assessed on that part of Squantum which is owned by the city of Boston.

The agreement provides that the city of Boston shall within thirty days pay the city of Quincy the sum of $9,157.55 in settlement of the taxes assessed for the years 1890, 1891, 1893, 1894, 1895, for the years 1898 to 1914 both inclusive. This figure is the full amount of the principal of the taxes for all these years. The tract of land which has been assessed by the city of Quincy comprises Squantum Head and contains about 15 acres.

This was taken by the city of Boston in 1889, under the authority of the Legislature of that year, in connection with the Boston Out-fall sewer.

The city of Boston has always claimed that this property was not taxable as it was used for public purposes. The city of Quincy, on the other hand, has claimed that a small part only was actually used for public property by the city of Boston and that at least the remainder which was not so used was assessable.

In order to settle this dispute this year's Legislature authorized the Mayors of the two cities to agree upon an amount to be paid by the city of Boston, which amount might be less than the amount claimed by the city of Quincy with interest, and upon the payment of said amount the remainder was to be abated by the city of Quincy. The law departments of the two cities arranged the settlement on the following basis; the city of Boston pays the principal, the city of Quincy waives its interest, and it is to be determined just what part of the land is necessary for the city of Boston to hold for public purposes and just what part is not necessary, and that portion of the premises not necessary for public purposes is to be assessable in the future. Thus this agreement which the Mayors have now signed settles for all time the dispute which has been pending for the last twenty-five years.

TWO KILLED

to Providence and return on Wednesday evening and mentioned the morning he rode with Jones as a passenger to Boston, over the State House and return. Ely was assured that beyond any question the flight on Friday afternoon would be the last one needed for him a qualify as an air pilot.

When both men left the home of Mrs. Berghaus they went directly to the aviation field where they were joined by Hersey, who has been associated with Jones during the construction of various parts of the machine. A study of weather conditions resulted in the preparing of the machine for a flight. All three took seats in the framework and floated around Quincy Bay, making a successful landing.

A short interval and another getaway brought them again into the air. Circling Quincy Bay they passed over the pumping station at Moon Island and there workmen first noticed the engine was skipping. The turn to the field was made successfully and the machine flew evenly until over the barn on the Crabtree estate.

At a height of about 100 feet the left wing apparently buckled and the plane commenced to drop. Why, will perhaps not be known until Jones recovers and tells his own story, but Mrs. John Holmes, Mrs. William Whittley and Mrs. Herman Berghaus, all residents of Squantum, say an explosion preceded the capsizing of the machine.

The drop to earth was witnessed by many and all ran to the spot. The three men were in the debris, Ely and Hersey under the wing, and Jones on top tightly clasping two wires.

The first to arrive were H. G. Pope, caretaker of the Crabtree estate, and John Lavelle, employed on the estate and Charles Lantry, the latter being near by in the field.

Mrs. John Jepson saw the biplane fall from her home and realizing that an accident had taken place telephoned the police. Sergt. Larkin who was in charge of the station sent the auto ambulance to the scene, and those who saw the machine on its way say that it was going at a record breaking speed. Acting Chief McKay was also notified and made a quick run to Squantum.

When Lavelle reached the wreck he found Hersey on the bottom with the other two men on top of him. Jones, unconscious, was clutching some of the wires of the machine, as if he had braced himself for the shock, and it was with difficulty that his hold was broken.

Dr. W. L. Rapley of 9 Oak Hill square, Brighton, who was motoring along the boulevard at the time and saw the machine when it fell, turned about and made for Squantum. When he arrived he found that Hersey was dead and that Ely was seriously injured. Jones was just regaining consciousness.

Officer Hollingshead, who was on duty at Squantum, sent in a call for physicians and Dr. Daniel A. Bruce of Atlantic, City Physician Fred A. Bartlett of Norfolk Downs, and Dr. W. E. Kernan of Neponset responded. By this time the police ambulance had arrived, and Ely and Jones were placed aboard and started for the City Hospital. Jones was conscious and declared that he was not seriously hurt and implored the physicians not to mind about him but to look after the others. He refused to lie on the stretcher and insisted on sitting up on the seat and he was supported in his ride to the Hospital by the officers.

Dr. George M. Sheahan, house physician at the City Hospital, had been notified and quickly responded and was ready to receive the injured men when they arrived. He pronounced Ely as dead, the latter having died on the way to the Hospital. The upper part of his body was crushed, especially the left side, and his skull was fractured.

Jones was placed on the operating table and found to have a lacerated scalp wound and a slight concussion of the brain. An examination however failed to show any fractured bones.

The machine was built by Jones himself and was considered as safe as any machine used by aviators today. No trouble is known to have developed in any of the numerous flights made and the trip to Saugus and back a short time ago with three passengers was as successful as the Providence trip this week. The aerials are said to have been working poorly but on being repaired pig iron, as heavy as three men, was carried on a brief circuit on the field, before the final flight.

This morning the wrecked plane was taken back to the hangar on the field by Mr. Berghaus. Last evening it was the mecca for sightseers and many took flashlight pictures of it. This morning about 100 autos carried other sightseers to the field.

Mr. and Mrs. Hersey, parents of the boy who died on the field ten minutes after the fall, when seen at the home this morning were deeply grieved. They said their son had made eight or nine flights and hoped to become an aviator.

The boy was born in Medford, June 14, 1894, and graduated from the Lewis Grammar school at Roxbury. He also attended the Boston High school of commerce. It is likely his funeral will take place Monday morning with services at the Church of the Sacred Heart at Atlantic.

Mr. Pope, one of the first to arrive on the scene, said that some of the struts of the machine were broken and as there were pieces of broken stays on the ground he thinks they must have been broken when the men were thrown against them.

Medical Examiner Dr. F. E. Jones thought that when the machine turned over that Hersey and Ely struck on their heads and that the shock to Jones had been somewhat softened by falling on top of them. There was quite a hole in the ground near where the wreck lay and it was said that this was made by the engine of the biplane before it overturned.

Mrs. Wiliam Ely of Providence, mother of one of the victims, arrived in Quincy later in the evening, having come over the road in an automobile. She was accompanied by an uncle of the young man. Both fully identified him and arrangements were made to have the body taken to Providence today.

William Ely Jr. was 19 years of age and had just completed his freshman year at Brown University. He is the only son of Capt and Mrs. William D. Ely. He prepared for college at St. Paul's Concord, N. H. He has been interested in automobiles and aeroplanes for several years and has made numerous flights, both in this country and in Hudson, England, where he spent several weeks in 1912. In college he was a member of the Upsilon Fraternity.

Eleven days' service as physician at $100 a day is one of the items contained in a suit filed by Dr. Daniel B. Reardon of Quincy, against the executors of the will of the late John Cashman of Quincy. The papers have been filed in the office of the clerk of the Norfolk Superior Court at Dedham.

SERVICES AT HOME.

Observance of Death of R. R. Freeman, Jr.

A service in memory of Richard R. Freeman, Jr., of Wollaston, one of those lost on the steamship Lusitania when she was torpedoed and sunk off the Irish coast, was held Sunday afternoon at the home of his parents on Grand View avenue, Wollaston.

Mr. Freeman was a son of ex-Councilman Richard R. Freeman, a well known Boston ship broker and was on his way to Siberia, where he had accepted an important position as a mining engineer. The last seen of him was on the deck of the Lusitania, after she had been struck by the torpedo, and his body has never been recovered.

The services were impressive and were attended by many of the young man's friends as well as by many friends of the family. They were conducted by Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson of the First Parish church, who read selections from the scriptures and selections from poems, closing with prayer.

FRANK BRUCE BADLY HURT

He Probably Can Never Run Again

Frank Bruce, the local runner, is at the Quincy City Hospital, with a fracture of the spine. If he recovers he will probably be unable ever to run again.

The injury was sustained in a fall Saturday afternoon. He was painting a house on Canal street and in walking along a staging held to a gutter. The gutter broke and he fell about 12 feet.

Dr. Sydney C. Hardwick who treated him said he believed the spine was fractured and him to the hospital in the police ambulance. A further examination at the institution by Dr. George M. Sheahan confirmed the diagnosis.

Bruce is well known in running circles about Boston. Although he ran marathons and ten mile events he was at his best in the three mile jaunts. He wore the colors of the Italian-American A. C. and several years ago went to Italy and earned a place on the team which represented that country at the Olympics at Stockholm.

EXAMINE SCHOOL PLANS.

The preliminary plans for the proposed school houses in Wards Two and Six were examined by the committee on public buildings and the Mayor at City Hall Saturday afternoon. The chairman of the School Committee and the superintendent of schools were expected but were detained on business.

The discussion was purely informal as the plans are to be sent at once to the School Committee for its consideration, at which time it is hoped that the selection of the plans best suited to the needs of these fast growing communities will be promptly accepted.

Rev. Vincent Ravi of Cambridge occupied the pulpit at both the morning and evening service at the Bethany church Sunday. At the morning service his topic was "The Divine Shepherd, Guide and Host" and at the evening service "The Promise of American Life."

He said he would receive any well informed visitor who wants to discuss Mexican affairs.

SPEAKS OF MRS. DANA'S SUICIDE

Messiah Service at Wollaston Congregational

A full congregation listened to the "Messiah" service which was given Sunday morning at the Wollaston Congregational church. The organ selections, hymns and the choir parts were the production of Handel. A chorus rendered "And the Glory of the Lord." Miss Gladys Hayward sang "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion." Miss Blanche A. Greenaway gave the solo "He was Despised" and Charles H. Everett "The People that walked in Darkness."

Dr. Sneath explained the theme of the oratorio, "Messiah" and then spoke upon the thought in the third part, viz our immortality and its assurance through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. He referred to the suicidal death of Mrs. Jessie H. Dana and the loss of comfort which can come to us through the acceptance of the atheistic theory. He also spoke feelingly upon the loss of the young man, Richard Freeman, upon the Lusitania, and emphasized the comfort that comes to sorrowing souls of the larger life of blessedness and service beyond the present life. "His servants shall serve Him still."

Miss Alice G. Burnham, a graduate of the Moody institute in Chicago, who will go to India as a missionary, addressed the Intermediate and Senior societies of Christian Endeavor at their regular services.

On Thursday evening at the midweek service the character of John the Baptist will be studied, it being St. John's Day.

On next Sunday the Sunday school will hold its closing session and celebrate Festival Sunday.

Richard Fletcher, Frederick Richardson and Lucy Murray, children of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Murray, were baptized at the Sunday morning service of the church.

PRAISES SCHWAB.

Rev. A. L. Hudson Preaches at First Church.

"Modern Efficiency and Moral Ideas" was the subject of the morning sermon by Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson of the First Parish church, his text being taken from the Sermon on the Mount.

As an illustration of efficiency he spoke of the German army in the present war, saying, that it was the high state of efficiency which enabled it to carry on the war as it is now doing in face of great odds. Comparing England with Germany he spoke of the unrest in England where the workmen were preparing to strike, while in Germany every man, woman and child of thinking age was united for the fatherland.

He also spoke of efficiency in our own country, stating that Charles M. Schwab was naturally one of the most efficient citizens of the country, that he only required to walk through a factory, to point out where its efficiency might be increased. It was, however, he pointed out not only necessary for the welfare of the country that its citizens should be efficient in a business line but should be efficient morally as well. The word "efficiency" he characterized as a catch word that was much in use at the present time.

PURPURA—MURPHY.

Joseph J. Purpura of 56 Sumner street and Rosina V. Murphy of Hancock street were married June 16, by Fr. John J. Casey of St. John's parish, according to a return filed today.

The bride was dressed in white chiffon over white satin. Her maid of honor wore pink crepe de chine and the bridesmaid was also dressed in pink crepe de chine.

The Wedding march was played by Miss W. M. Peterson, organist of the church, as the bridal party entered.

The decorations at the church consisted of palms, green leaves and daisies.

FIRST MASS IN NEW QUINCY POINT CHURCH

Eight Hundred Attend Services At St. Joseph's

The hopes of the Catholics of Quincy Point were realized Sunday when more than 800 of them attended the first mass in the new St. Joseph's church at Washington and Pray streets. The mass was at nine o'clock and the edifice was crowded to the doors. On the floor of the auditorium were seated 695 people while another hundred thronged the balcony.

Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor of St. John's parish, of which the new church is a mission station, was celebrant of the mass. John Costello and John Mitchell of Quincy Point were the altar boys who served the first mass.

The altar was banked with flowers, the offering of the members of the Sanctuary club.

Father Owens congratulated the people on the realization of their hopes and anticipations and said he was certain that the faith that had prompted the people of the Point to attend St. John's church at so great inconvenience to themselves would be much in evidence in the upbuilding of the church.

He said the name St. Joseph's was suggested by himself during a conference with Cardinal O'Connell on the feast day of St. Joseph and because St. Joseph was patron saint of the whole church.

He thanked the men of the parish for their work on the grounds and for the women who had worked in the interest of the church, particularly the members of the Sanctuary club. He said he hoped for a continuance of this co-operation and said the priests of St. John's parish willingly would do their part toward the same end.

The pastor, impressed with the large attendance, said that next Sunday there would be two masses, 7.30 and 9 o'clock.

The church was started by the late Fr. John J. Coan, last July, and he hoped to celebrate the first mass in it on Christmas Day. It is a frame building with a concrete exterior and adds much to the beauty of the surroundings. It is of mission architecture and was designed by Edward Graham of Boston.

The entire length of the church is 116 feet and the auditorium is 82 feet long and 48 feet wide, accommodating approximately 700 people. The gable roof is overtopped by a tower 60 feet in height to the peak and 70 feet to the top of the cross.

The side walls are 14 feet in height and the distance to the top of the roof in the auditorium is 45 feet.

Three entrances open directly into the vestibule, on the right of which is the sexton's office and on the left the steps to the choir gallery.

The church has three aisles, one in the centre and two along the sides, and along the latter, near the front of the church there are two confessionals, set in recesses.

The sanctuary railing extending the entire breadth of the church encloses the main altar and two side altars

The church sets on concrete piers and the only excavating necessary was under the sanctuary where there are rooms for the articles of devotion, vestments and other material of religious nature.

The boiler sets under the extreme northerly side of the church and on each side are the coal bins and fuel boxes, and outside the church are granolithic walks

The census figures of the Catholic population of Quincy Point are not available at present, but it is estimated that they are close to one third the total of St. John's parish.

CONFIRMS CLASS AT ST. MARY'S

Bishop Joseph G. Anderson confirmed a class of 270 at St. Mary's church Sunday afternoon. The class was made up of 142 men and boys and 128 women and girls, among whom were about twenty-five adults. The bishop was assisted by the pastor, Rev. Thomas R. McCoy, and by Rev. Dr. Francis X. Dolan pastor of St. Gregory's church, Milton. The church was thronged with relatives and friends of those who were being confirmed.

It was a pretty sight to see the little girls all dressed in white dresses and wearing white veils approach the altar to receive the sacrament. After administering Confirmation Bishop Anderson spoke a few words to the children, impressing on their mind the meaning of the sacrament which they had just received. He warned them never to be ashamed of their faith and to be ready at all times to defend it. After the sermon the exercises were closed with Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament by Rev. Fr. Mooney. The music was by the regular choir under the direction of Joseph Morrissette. Mrs. Mary McKay was organist.

LARGE NUMBER ATTEND PICNIC

Wollaston Baptist Children at Glen Echo

The annual Sunday school picnic of the Wollaston Baptist church was held Saturday at Glen Echo park. Three special cars were required to take the party from Wollaston in the morning and in addition to this quite a few went to the park in private automobiles so that there were about 225 in the party.

Box lunches were carried and as the day was a pleasant one all had a good time. There were some sports in the afternoon the chief of which was a game of ball between two teams of youngsters. It was a spirited game and some close decisions were made by the umpire Frank Burgess. The game resulted for a victory for the team captained by Howard Walther by a score of 10 to 7.

BETHANY GIRLS ENJOY PICNIC

The Girls' Vested choir of Bethany church to the number of thirty held a picnic Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Florence Sabean, at Adams Shore, and a grand time they had. Immediately on their arrival at the home of Miss Sabean bathing suits were brought into use. Returning from the water there were some field sports which included sack races, three-legged races, etc.

At 5 o'clock preparations were made for supper and a little later the young ladies were seated about the fire of a huge clambake, Indian style and it is hardly necessary to say that with appetites sharpened to a keen edge by the dip in the ocean and the field sports, full justice was done to the good things contained in the bake

Supper over an adjournment was made to the home of Miss Sabean where teams were chosen for a game of ball which closed the afternoon's outing. This was a crowning feature and some of the plays were brilliant in the extreme. The teams were captained by Misses Ethel Avery and Frances Ward. The team of Miss Avery won by a score of 13 to 3.

The three-legged race was won by Mildred Diack and Edith Avery.

DUTY OF CITIZENS.

According to a prediction which appeared in the Ledger the other day and which was based upon apparently authoritative information the city's tax rate will be even larger this year than in previous years. This results from a variety of causes into which we do not intend to inquire at this time. It may be hoped that the valuation will be more accurate and just than that produced by the late lamented Board of Assessors.

Doubtless there will be many who will feel that the valuation set upon their property is excessive and that the tax rate itself is excessive. As to the valuation one fact should be borne in mind which is not always remembered. The practice has grown up throughout the country of under valuation of the real property of cities and towns. Now the assessors take oath that they will assess property at its full and actual value. There should not be over-valuation, of course, but neither should there be under-valuation.

There is no great difficulty in arriving at an accurate estimate of real property. There is, of course, great difficulty in accurately estimating the value of the personal property of the citizens. As we have pointed out more than once in this column it is wholly unfair and absurd to tax personal property at the same rate as real property.

A revision of the state constitution is needed. Until one is secured there will be tax dodging, comparatively easy so far as personal property is concerned, or else an exodus by the honest or "spotted" personal property holders to Orleans and other towns where few tax rates are in effect. In other words, Quincy in common with other cities, is not able to impose a tax upon as much property as it should. This is one reason why the tax rate has to be high here and in other municipalities. Over such a cause city administrations have little control.

Over other causes contributory to the high tax rates city administrations do have control. There is no one so ignorant as not to know that there is a deplorable waste in the conduct of the affairs of every city in the commonwealth, Quincy among them. For this no one mayor nor no one city council can be held wholly responsible. It is the natural outgrowth of conditions upon which we have commented many times in this column.

The first half year of the present city administration is drawing to a close. It is an appropriate time for citizens to consider wherein it has failed and wherein it has succeeded. Six months is not a sufficiently long time to permit of much improvement by any administration, however efficient and sincere its members may be. It is a sufficiently long time, however, to incur the obligation to show some improvement. It is the duty of the citizens intelligently to study the question and, with due allowance for the things over which city officials have no control, to judge whether or not reasonable improvement has been made.

Having reached his decision it is the duty of each citizen to endeavor to put his opinion into action so that the improvement made in the first half of the year, if improvement there has been, may be greatly exceeded in the months to come. He who fails to do this has no just cause for complaint of the way the city is run, for, in reality, he, with his fellow voters, is running the city. It is easy to forget that a city government is no better and no worse than its electorate.

No more "sales" of the City of Boston property at Squantum, for which Quincy has for years attempted to collect back taxes. Mayors Curley and Campbell have conferred with real results.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, assails the "peace at any price" slogan and thereby points Mr. Bryan a lesson in intelligent patriottsm.

Holbrook is on the map again. They have a silver fox farm up there now.

The Sunday school picnics are now becoming formidable rivals of the June brides.

Why is it that persons otherwise endowed with some elements of intelligence feel that the funniest thing on earth is an oath or two on the theatrical stage?

Report hath it that Quincy's tax rate will be even higher this year. Does this mean a general exodus to Orleans after the example of our genial ex-Mayor.

It may be well to note in passing that the Dardanelles have not yet been forced.

TREES IN THE STREETS.

A notable object lesson as to the civilizing value of shade trees in a city street may be obtained from the corner of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, Boston. Looking outward from that point, Huntington avenue shows two lines of young trees beautiful in their fresh leafage; looking inward, the avenue's broad stretch is bare of vegetation. The contrast is marked. A street ordinarily unprepossessing may be made attractive and even beautiful by trees.

A handsome street may be made much handsomer also. Beacon street, from the Public Garden outward, is a conspicuous instance. It has always been a stately avenue, but its looks have been greatly enhanced by the rows of horse-chestnuts planted there a few years ago under the direction of the Metropolitan Improvement League. The systematic movement on the part of the Beacon street abutters which made this work possible deserves imitation on other residential streets. Not long ago the city forester instituted a policy of annually planting trees along main thoroughfares so far as possible. A comparatively small appropriation made an excellent showing. The policy deserves to be permanent. The Huntington avenue plantations are one of its fruits.

Attractiveness in environment is a tangible asset. A significant instance is a street in one of our Greater Boston suburbs. It was laid out and built upon as a whole. The promoter had the good taste and enterprise to plant the street handsomely with trees and shrubbery. Not only were the houses sold promptly at good prices, but they easily command rents something like 30 per cent. higher than the same class of houses in neighboring treeless streets.

The appearance of a tree-planted street may be of more value than the shade. In the latter respect discretion should be observed. If a comparatively narrow street is planted with trees of lofty habit, the exclusion of sunlight and air from the houses may be harmful. For such streets trees low in growth and spaced nearer together are more desirable. Plantations of this character may also be kept within bounds by judicious trimming.—Boston Herald.

THE DEMOCRATS.

What our country has gone through during the past two years, and what it is going through today, and what it will go through for the next two years is the result of Bryan Democrats consorting with Bryanized Republicans. The passing of Bryan is not important, so far as American interests are concerned at home or abroad, for the President has, and is bound to have his own way, but his passing may be important as to the effect upon the future of democracy as the American people understand its meaning. They most certainly understand its blighting effect upon the business interests of our country.—Belmont Courier.

FEAR GERMANY'S GUNS.

Some of the summer residents along the shore are worried about what might happen if America and Germany decided that they did not really and truly love each other. They fear lest some of the German warships might come close enough to the beach to drop a few shells along the water front. We know of a few places between Hingham and Pemberton which might be blown off the map without causing any great loss.—Hull Beacon.

George R. Williams, supt. city work, 32 Chestnut street, Quincy says: "In my work I have considerable heavy lifting and I also get on and off the wagon a great deal. My back and kidneys were affected and I suffered from severe pains in my back. I have taken Doan's Kidney Pills off and on for two years and they have always fixed me up in good shape. I keep them in the house and am glad to recommend them."

UP-TO-DATE CIRCUS.

The Jones Bros. Big Three Ring Wild Animal Circus will show here July 2nd. That the rushing, hurrying American public demand a great deal for their money is made evident from the fact that a circus must present novelties and unusual feature acts never before attempted in the old days.

Ever foremost in orignality and progression, the Jones Bros. offer this season their big new, giant three fold circus combined in one, giving the largest, most comprehensive exhibition of trained wild animal acts and European attractions never before presented in this country. No expense has been spared and as a result it can be truly said that nothing so stupendous, so prodigally lavish and thrilling, has ever been attempted under canvas.

Grandeur, sublimity and magnificence embrace a constellation of star performers to which the entire world has contributed. All the greatest equestrians, high school and posing horses, bareback riders, high jumpers, leapers, aerial, acrobatic and gymnastic artists of the continent have been corralled under one management. Every act is reproduced with striking realism and prolonged applause is bestowed in recognition of a program of extraordinary merit.

Audacious and daring, the Jones Bros. have arranged many novel surprises for their arena department. A posing act of living models representing the various arts is an exquisite creation that has aroused unprecedented enthusiasm. Graceful dancing girls are another feature.

That the parade is a strong factor with such an enterprise is demonstrated by the remarkable showing of caprisoned horses, vans of open cages containing fierce looking wild beasts, herds of elephants and camels that follow the cages, handsome girls atop of glittering wagons, brass bands, chariots drawn by Arabian steeds and happy laughing clowns.

FOR MILTON HOSPITAL.

By the death of Mrs. Ellen M. Wadsworth, widow of Captain Edwin D. Wadsworth, Milton comes into a legacy estimated at about $68,000. This sum represents the estate left by Captain Wadsworth when he died about fourteen years ago, with such accumulations as have been made while Mrs. Wadsworth lived. When Captain Wadsworth died he provided that, upon the death of his widow and of his children, should there be no direct heir remaining, the money should go to the town for hospital purposes.

Mr. and Mrs. Wadsworth had a son Dexter E. Wadsworth a well-known business man in Quincy and a daughter Miss Annie Wadsworth, but the mother survived both and, as they had no children, the estate upon her death went to the town. It includes about $38,000 worth of real estate, a large part of this being the sightly Wadsworth place on Highland street in Milton, and about $30,000 in personal property. The estate is in the hands of Herbert B. Tucker of Milton as trustee and, as soon as it has been settled, it will be turned over to the town.

The personal effects of Mrs. Wadsworth will be divided among her relatives, while the Wadsworth place will remain as it is for the present. Whether the town will find it desirable to use the money for hospital purposes is a question, but apparently even if it does not make this use of the money, it will still retain the bequest as no other disposal of the property was indicated by Captain Wadsworth in his will.

Milton already has a hospital which was provided through the generosity of the late Mary A. Cunningham, who left the town her entire fortune, estimated at between $500,000 and $750,000. This money, in the hands of trustees, is being used to support Cunningham Park and Gymnasium and also the Milton hospital, which occupies the old Cunningham mansion in Cunningham Park.

ATTENDANCE AT HIGHEST POINT

Hall Place M. E. Children's Day

Sunday was observed as Children's Day in the Hall Place M. E. church. At the morning service the pastor baptized the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Miller of Dorchester and also the small son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cuylo of West Quincy.

The pastor took for the subject of his sermon, those words of Vanderbilt's at the sinking of the Lusitania, "Come and let's save the kiddies." Music was furnished by a male quartette.

It was a banner day in the Sunday school. Some time ago an effort was made to increase the attendance of the Sunday school and a high water mark was set. Teachers, officers and scholars worked faithfully but always with the same result, while the attendance was gradually increasing, it failed to reach the high water mark Sunday June 13, the attendance fell just one short of the aim.

But, on Sunday, June 20, joy reigned supreme in the heart of the faithful superintendent, Alexander D. Steward, for the high water mark was not only reached but passed beyond the expectations of all. The mark will probably be raised at the next Board meeting and the work will go on as before. On Sunday, June 27th, the first year in the "Cross and Crown Pin" system will end and twenty persons will receive a gold pin for perfect attendance for 52 consecutive Sundays. Sunday, June 27th, will be promotion day in the Sunday school and it will be necessary to form some new classes.

The Epworth league devotional service was omitted at 6 P. M.

At seven o'clock the entire Sunday school marched into the church and took their places and gave a most pleasing and entertaining concert in honor of Children's Day. Each class wore some distinctive decoration, and had some part in the program.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers of all kinds and colors, the work of the young women At the close of the service the flow were sent to the sick and shut-in members of the community by the third vice president of the Epworth league.

The Sunday school are indebted the faithful and conscientious labors of Mrs. F. L. Badger and Mrs. Charles Wentzel for the success of the concert

The regular business meeting of the Epworth league will be held this evening in the vestry followed by a reception to High school graduates of the league.

Prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7.30.

He then read the names of the graduates and as their names were read they went to the altar and received their diplomas.

After awarding the diplomas Father McCoy anounced the prize winners for the year. The prizes were given for excellence in recitation throughout the year, attendance, conduct and upon the final examination. The first prize, a gold medal, was awarded to Matthew J. McNamara; second prize, a silver medal, to Miss Alice M. Simpson; third prize, a book, to Edward J. Lamb, the fourth prize was a tie between Jerome A. Reinhalter and Arthur J. Father McCoy then spoke a few words to the graduates congratulating them on the completion of their studies and warning them that although they had received their diplomas there was still a lot about their religion they could learn.

Those who received diplomas were: Misses Alice M. Simpson, Margaret C. McDougal, Margaret E. Byron, Julia G. Daley, Lillian Martel, Mary C. Burkhard, Matthew J. McNamara, Edward J. Lamb, Jerome A. Reinhalter, James E. Knight, Arthur J. DeCoste, Edward McPherson, Patrick J. O'Leary, Francis J. Creedon, James P. Mullarkey, Patrick J. Carney, Albert Desmond, George L. McKenna, John J. Bennett, Thomas F. McDonald, Edmund McLaughlin, Daniel E. Bryan, Roger Saville, Arthur J. Buckley and Martin Golden.

QUINCY BOYS HONORED.

Donald Crane Makes Phi Beta Kappa.

Donald Crane of Keene, N. H., son of City Clerk and Mrs. Emery L. Crane of this city received the final crown to his work at Colgate University last week when he was elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa. This organization, branches of which exist at practically all of the important colleges of the country, is open only to scholars of the very highest standing and election to membership is considered a distinguished honor.

Mr. Crane was graduated with his class Friday, although he had fulfilled the requirements for the degree at Midyear's. During the last half year he has been employed at the Cheshire National bank of Keene, N. H., a position which he accepted temporarily but in which he has been induced to continue by the bank for at least the summer.

He is today attending the Class Day exercises and on Tuesday will participate in the festivities of Commencement. Another Quincy boy who has made notable success at Colgate is John Nolan, son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Nolan of 58 Adams street. Mr. Nolan also graduates this month. He was elected pipe orator by his class. He has been for some time president of the Masque and Triangle club, a dramatic club which presented "The Merchant of Venice" before a large audience of under-grads, old grads, and seniors. He attained great success as cheer leader. He will enter the employ of a business firm in New York city.

Hinkies	7	10	413
Commons	4	12	250

Hersey of Waumbeck street.

Mrs. Tryon plans to include Third Hill in the collection

JONES IS CONSCIOUS.

But does Not Know His Passengers Are Dead.

The condition of Harry W. Jones, the aviator who has been at the Quincy City Hospital since the accident at Squantum Friday evening when his two passengers George H. Hersey, Jr., and William Ely were killed, remains about the same. Although conscious he has no recollection of what took place, although he frequently inquires if the other boys are all right. Fearing that it may act as a set back if he is informed of their death he has not been told. At the City Hospital this noon it was said that he was resting comfortably and unless new complications set in the chances are good for his recovery.

R. S. PATTEE ENGAGED.

Mrs. Winslow B. Lincoln of Worcester announced the engagement of her daughter, Penelope Winslow Lincoln, to Richard Saltonstall Pattee of this city, at an engagement party at her home Sunday. Mr. Pattee is the son of Mrs. W. G. A. Pattee of School street. He is a graduate of Harvard, 1911, and graduates this month from the Harvard Law school. No date has been set for the wedding.

COUNCIL MEETS TONIGHT.

A regular meeting of the City Council will be held this evening and many citizens will doubtless attend in hope that something may drop in connection with the investigation of the Fire Department. The committee however has given no hint as to whether it will report or not or what will be the nature of the report if made.

CRISP FABRICS.

Glass towelling Checks—Tussores, Shantung and Pongee Costumes In Fashionable Favor—Patches.

The smartest New York fashions, that one sees these days, come into town from the suburban colonies, at Tuxedo, Cedarhurst, the Jersey Coast resorts, or up Westchester way where a lot of well known people locate as soon as buds and blossoms make their summer homes enticing. This year especially are all these places full to overflowing, since no one has the slightest inclination to risk a trip across the ocean with the deadly submarine in wait.

JUNE WEDDINGS.

June is, par excellence, the brides' month and lovely indeed have been most of the recent celebrations, in the various out-of-town settings. Brides' gowns grow more and more filmy and fascinating. Though there is usually an underdress of satin, and a court train of this stately fabric, it is so subdued by dainty tulle and cobwebby lace, that it ceases to be obtrusive and unbecoming, as only an old-time satin gown of this type could be.

McCall Design

VEIL ARRANGEMENTS

Another trend one notices is the fact that it has become popular to show the coiffure more than formerly in the adjustment of the veil. Advantage is taken of the liking for filet head bands to hold the veil from the back of the head in decidedly picturesque fashion. The filet bands also make for style and ornament, as they are often set with pearls or diamonds or may be the simplest of ribbon bands if one prefers.

THE SILK SUIT.

For the silk suit that is often the choice for the going-away gown, and quite generally worn by guests who arrive by train or motor, taffetas hold the leading place, but a whole host of other silk weaves are used with the smartest effect. Tussores, Shantung and the rest of the Oriental weaves make cool, pretty costumes that are given style and made becoming by a touch of black or vivid color in their trimmings and accessories, and as such silks range from 60 cents to several dollars a yard, every purse can find its requirements in these popular fabrics. Where the natural color is not liked these silks come in all the fashionable hues, in gray blues, brilliant pinks, and in oyster whites, that turn out ravishing toilets, that stand considerable wear and endure cleaning successfully.

EFFECTIVENESS.

Good dressing goes a long way toward creating a pleasing impression. Clever selection rather than lavish spending, with careful attention to details. Everyone has seen some otherwise faultless costume marred by the wrong hat, shoes or gloves, or some lovely sleeveless evening gown with filmy draperies worn by a woman who failed to realize how conspicuous her badly cared for arms would appear in such a dress.

Massage and the use of a reliable depilatory powder, would have quite transformed her appearance at little cost of trouble or time. In fact the best depilatory removes surplus hairs in a very few minutes without injury to the skin. X Bazin powder has been used by the select few for more than half a century, but anyone that asks for it can find it.

THE VOGUE OF WHITE.

All signs show that American women will cling to the white dress. that is almost universally becoming, and suited to our spells of torrid weather. So far white serge has not seemed likely to attain its usual lead, but white silks of all sorts except the too glossy satins, white corduroy and its aristocratic cousin Golfine, and white gabardines and piques are all in the running for cool looking serviceable outfits.

MODISH PATCHWORK.

The vogue for applique work that displays itself in all sorts of patched adornments for articles that come in the catagory of fancy work, is extended to dress trimming as well, and is responsible for very effective, easily made garnitures that transform a ready made frock or blouse with a touch of individual distinction that lifts it to a different plane.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this: First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

The Microscopic Search

Give the toll operator some clue to the supposed whereabouts of the salesman, touring automobile party, possible customer or client you want to talk to, and she will try to connect you.

The toll operator does some extraordinarily clever work in following up these clues. Tell her the name of the person you want, where he is likely to be or where normally he ought to be and there's more than an even chance she will put you in communication with him—and quickly, too.

There will be no charge for a particular party toll call if you are not connected to the person whose name you have given to the toll operator.

Fore Rivers Beat University Press Team

The Fore River team beat the University Press of Cambridge in a Manufacturer's league game at Merrymount park, Saturday afternoon, 3 to 2. The winning run was made by Gillis, who drew a wild throw in stealing third in the fifth inning and romped home.

Ryan, the visiting left fielder suffered a strained ankle in sliding into third base and the game was held up quite a few minutes while he recovered from the shock. It appeared to the spectators that he had been seriously injured but he was able to resume play.

Cheissong who was touted by the sporting writers a few years ago as a national find was at first for the visitors. He didn't get a hit and made one error.

Flanagan, the Press second baseman, gave his team mates heart failure through three errors, two of them poor throws. The fast backing up of Billings, the catcher, prevented extra bases on the throws.

Three hits in a row gave Shipyard boys two runs as an opener. Two hits sent over one for the University in the second inning and a hit and a wild throw gave them the second one in the third.

Knight fanned nine, passed one and allowed eight hits. Young Wade fanned seven, passed two and allowed five hits.

A double play by the visitors in the fourth was something of a gift. Galvin flied out to right and Stevens, who was on first, thinking there were two out legged it for second and was half way to third when he was thrown out at first. Fore River infielders contributed two doubles.

Cain's attempt to steal home didn't materialize. With two out, and Murphy at the bat with two strikes, he sprinted. Wade made a quick return to Billings who just tagged him off the plate. The summary:

LOSES RACE BY MISCALCULATION

The "Almira," fitted with a new rudder, of the barn door pattern, a new sail with a single reef tucked in and with Dr. H. Almon Jones at the stick, showed the other boats in Class D her heels over the entire course at the annual open race of the Savin Hill Yacht club Saturday afternoon.

There was a corking southwest breeze and not until the very finish was the Almira headed. Following close in her wake was the "Dartwell" with ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore doing his best to wrest the lead from the Almira. Dr. Jones figured that he had all the glory he desired and according to his reckoning, as he was a sure winner, he let up a little and allowed the "Dartwell" to get the gun. Dr. Jones had figured out the time allowance in his own mind and according to his idea the Dartwell although getting the gun was beaten by 12 seconds Something evidently went wrong for the judges in figuring out the summary gave the race to the "Dartwell" by five seconds.

In Class S the "Zoe" and "Wawenock," the former of the Squantum and the latter of the Wollaston club, had the class to themselves. The "Zoe" won, the "Wawenock" having met with a mishap by having her mainsail blown into shreds by a series of strong winds

In Class A the "Eleanor" of the Squantum club finished fourth and the "Areyto," also of the Squantum club, at the end of the fleet of seven.

In Class I the "Louise" of the Quincy club won the race the "Acanthus" finishing in fifth position and the "Dorchen," which was disabled, last

Ex-Commodore Frank E. Dawes of the Wollaston club sailed his "Wanderer IV" in Class H but third position was all that he was able to secure. The summary of Class D, all of which were Quincy Yacht club boats, was as follows:

Localites Lose Game By Close Score

The strong Samecs of Dorchester played the North Quincy Catholic club at Atlantic Saturday and won 3 to 2. The game was the first in which the North Quincys failed to hit the ball freely, only two hits being registered off Anderson.

A misunderstanding as to who would take a throw at first, after two were out, gave the visitors the winning runs. There was a good attendance. The summary:

SQUANTUM YACHT CLUB HAS RACES

The second race under the auspices of the Squantum Yacht club for the Hayes cup was held Sunday afternoon off the the clubhouse in a light shifting breeze, which gave the yachts wind from all quarters of the compass. The air was so light however that it was little more than a drifting match for a greater part of the time.

The "Arcanthus" was the first to finish. She also finished in first position a week ago, in the first race for the cup, but her ownership of the cup is in doubt owing to a protest which was entered by the "Dorothy" whose owner claimed that the Arcanthus fouled her at the start. The summary:

The St. John's base ball team beat the Pilgrims of Cambridge in a 10 inning game at the Ward Three playground Saturday by a score of 6 to 5. A pretty hit by Fay sent in E. Dorley with the winning run.

Five three base hits featured the game, three of them being made by St. Johns players.

HIGH PRICES KILLED Beware of Cheap Prices
The General says:
When we entered the field the price of good roofing was too high. With our big mills, enormous output and modern selling methods we can sell the best roofing at a reasonable price. This has been done to such a great extent that high prices have been killed. Now you get the highest quality at a reasonable price when you buy

Certain-teed
Roofing

But there is another great danger. Unknown goods with unknown brands and unknown qualities are being offered at prices that are too cheap for safety. It's a long, long chance you take when you buy these cheap goods. Avoid extremes of cheap prices as well as high prices. Know that the company whose name appears on the goods has the ability to make a good quality roofing at a reasonable price, and that it is guaranteed by them to be the best roofing possible to make; that the company does not sell anything at a higher price, and that the price at which it is offered to you is a reasonable but not a cheap price.

Certain-teed Roofing is guaranteed 5, 10 or 15 years, according to whether the thickness is 1, 2 or 3 ply respectively, and remember this guarantee is backed by the largest mills in the roofing and building paper industry.

Ask your dealer for these goods, and be sure they bear our label. The price will be reasonable.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berea McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the supervising ranger of Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Nash, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

When he returned he found the girl full dressed, alert and glowing, but she greeted him with a touch of shyness and self consciousness new to her, and her eyes veiled themselves before his glance.

"Now, where do you suppose the supervisor is?" he asked.

"I hope he's at home," she replied quite seriously. "I'd hate to think of him camped in the high country without bedding or tent."

"Oughtn't I to take a turn up the trail and see? I feel guilty, somehow. I must do something."

"You can't help matters any by hoofing about in the mud. No, we'll just hold the fort till he comes. That's what he'll expect us to do."

He submitted once more to the force of her argument, and they ate breakfast in such intimacy and good cheer that the night's discomforts and anxieties counted for little.

"We have to camp here again tonight," she explained demurely.

"Worse things could happen than that," he gallantly answered. "I wouldn't mind a month of it, only I shouldn't want it to rain or snow all the time."

"Poor boy! You did suffer, didn't you? I was afraid you would. Did you sleep at all?" she asked tenderly.

"Oh, yes, after I came inside; but, of course, I was more or less restless expecting your father to ride up."

"That's funny. I never feel that way. I slept like a log after I knew you were comfortable. You must have a better bed and more blankets. It's always cold up here."

The sunlight was short lived. The clouds settled over the peaks, and ragged wisps of gray vapor dropped down the timbered slopes of the prodigious amphitheater in which the lake lay. Again Berrie made everything snug while her young woodsman toiled at bringing logs for the fire.

At last fully provided for, they sat contentedly side by side under the awning and watched the falling rain as it splashed and sizzled on the sturdy fire. "It's a little like being shipwrecked on a desert island, isn't it?" he said. "As if our boats had drifted away."

At noon she again prepared an elaborate meal. She served potatoes and grouse, hot biscuit with sugar sirup and canned peaches and coffee done to just the right color and aroma. He declared it wonderful, and they ate with repeated wishes that the supervisor might turn up in time to share their feast, but he did not. Then Berrie said firmly: "Now you must take a snooze. You look tired."

He was in truth not only drowsy, but lame and tired. Therefore he yielded to her suggestion.

She covered him with blankets and put him away like a child. "Now you have a good sleep," she said tenderly. "I'll call you when daddy comes."

When he woke the ground was again covered with snow, and the girl was feeding the fire with wood which her own hands had supplied.

Hearing him stir, she turned and fixed her eyes upon him with clear, soft gaze. "How do you feel by now?" she asked.

"Quite made over," he replied, rising alertly.

His cheer, however, was only pretense. He was greatly worried. "Something has happened to your father," he said. "His horse has thrown him, or he has slipped and fallen." His peace and exultation were gone. "How far is it down to the ranger station?"

"About twelve miles."

"Don't you think we'd better close camp and go down there? It is now 3 o'clock. We can walk it in five hours."

She shook her head. "No, I think we'd better stay right here. It's a long, hard walk, and the trail is muddy."

"But, dear girl," he began desperately, "it won't do for us to camp here alone in this way another night. What will Cliff say?"

She flamed red, then whitened. "I don't care what Cliff thinks. I'm done with him, and no one that I really care about would blame us." She was fully aware of his anxiety now. "It isn't our fault."

"It will be my fault if I keep you here longer!" he answered. "We must reach a telephone and send word out. Something may have happened to your father."

"I'm not worried a bit about him. It may be that there's been a big snowfall up above us, or else a windstorm. The trail may be blocked, but don't worry. He may have to go round by Lost Lake pass." She pondered a moment. "I reckon you're right. We'd better pack up and rack down the trail to the ranger's cabin—not on my account, but on yours. I'm afraid you've taken cold."

"I'm all right, except I'm very lame, but I am anxious to go on. By the way, is this ranger Settle married?"

"No; his station is one of the lonesomest cabins on the forest. No woman will stay there."

This made Wayland ponder. "Nevertheless," he decided, "we'll go. After all, the man is a forest officer, and you are the supervisor's daughter."

She made no further protest, but busied herself closing the panniers and putting away the camp utensils. She seemed to recognize that his judgment was sound.

It was after 3 when they left the tent and started down the trail, carrying nothing but a few toilet articles.

He stopped at the edge of the clearing. "Should we have left a note for the supervisor?"

The trees were dripping, the willows heavy with water, and the mud ankle deep in places, but she pushed on steadily, and he, following in her tracks, could only marvel at her strength and sturdy self reliance. The swing of her shoulders, the poise of her head and the lithe movement of her waist made his own body seem a poor thing.

For two hours they zigzagged down a narrow canyon heavily timbered with fir and spruce, a dark, stern avenue, crossed by roaring streams and filled with frequent boggy meadows, whereon the water lay midleg deep.

"We'll get out of this very soon," she called cheerily.

By degrees the gorge widened, grew more open, more genial. Aspen thickets of pale gold flashed upon their eyes like sunlight, and grassy bunches afforded firmer footing, but on the slopes their feet slipped and slid painfully. Still Berea kept her stride. "We must get to the middle fork before dark," she stopped to explain, "for I don't know the trail down there, and there's a lot of down timber just above the station. Now that we're cut loose from our camp I feel nervous. As long as I have a tent I am all right, but now we are in the open I worry. How are you standing it?" She studied him with keen and anxious glance, her hand upon his arm.

"Fine as a fiddle," he replied, assuming a spirit he did not possess,

She Found Herself Confronted by an Endless Maze of Blackened Tree Trunks.

"but you are marvelous. I thought cowgirls couldn't walk."

"I can do anything when I have to," she replied. "We've got three hours more of it." And she warningly exclaimed, "Look back there!"

They had reached a point from which the range could be seen, and, behold, it was covered deep with a seamless robe of new snow.

"That's why dad didn't get back last night. He's probably wallowing along up there this minute." And she set off again with resolute stride. Wayland's pale face and labored breath alarmed her. She was filled with love and pity, but she pressed forward desperately.

MACKENSEN AT LEMBERG GATES

Teutons Will Soon Recapture Capital of Galicia

DEFENDERS IN FULL FLIGHT

Seven Weeks' Drive Is Telling Upon Harried Russian Forces, Which Have Been Driven Back More Than 150 Miles—Italians Display Remarkable Valor and Win Important Victory Over Austrians—French Are Forging Ahead In Valley of River Fecht—British Losses In Dardanelles Reported to Be Very Heavy

London, June 21.—With the great Germany army under General Mackensen at the very gates of Lemberg, and the Russians retreating north and west from the city, the recapture of the Galician capital by the Teutonic forces seems a matter of a few hours.

Late dispatches reaching London held out little hope for the city, and it is stated that some of the Russian forces and civilian officers of the government that Russia had set up in the place have already fled.

The roar of the great German guns at Janow, eleven miles to the north west, is borne faintly into the city, and with the Russian defending armies in flight toward Zolkew and Rawa Ruska, it is felt that the place will soon become Austrian territory once more, after having been in Russia's possession for more than half a year.

The fall of the city will be the culminating point of a tremendous seven weeks' drive across Galicia, during which the great German army, equipped with the most powerful concentration of heavy field artillery known in the history of war, has persistently hurled the Russians back more than 150 miles.

Expect to Crush Russians

So successful has been the issue of this campaign that it is probable Berlin feels more confident of a final crushing of Russian resistance in the east than at any moment since the war began.

This feeling is reflected in private dispatches coming into London from German sources, which hint that the sequel to the capture of Lemberg will be a quick and overwhelming concentration of German forces along the Franco-Belgian front that will either break irresistibly through the British and French lines now so impotently dabbling in petty trenche warfare, or else induce a prolongation of the strife that will pile up even more fearful losses than those already experienced.

The immediate investment of Lemberg was brought about by a decisive defeat administered to the Russians, who for several days had been attempting to make a stand before the capital. After the capture of the pivotal position at Grodek, announced Saturday, there was nothing left for the czar's wearied troops but a retreat northward.

Another attempt was made to turn upon their pursuers in the vicinity of Janow, which is only a few miles north of the railroad connecting Lemberg and Przemysl.

Quick Defeat of Russians

It was here that the advancing German forces under Field Marshal von Arz inflicted upon their foes one of quickest and most effective defeats of the campaign. Although details of the affair are confined to an official statement from Berlin, their general correctness seems to be confirmed by silence from Petrograd.

Along a front twenty-four miles long, extending north of Janow, the battle lasted from morning until afternoon, the Germans hurling their great masses of infantry against the strongly-intrenched lines of the Russians, and using their terrible artillery with fatal effect.

One after another the trenches were taken by storm, and when evening came the Russians were in retreat, having been thrown back behind a high road to Zolkew, north of Lemberg, and to Rawa Ruska.

The advance of the Teutons toward Rawa Ruska is taken by London military critics as initiating a great turning movement north of Lemberg, which would cut off the Russian forces now in eastern Galicia from the Polish frontier.

The German army staff claims in its different bulletins that this defeat has already weakened the Russian communications and that the czar's troops still between Grodek and the Dneister marshes are being hard pressed and may have to surrender.

Victory For Italian Troops

The first important engagement of the Italo-Austrian war has been fought on the banks of the Isonzo river near Plava, and has resulted in a brilliant victory for King Victor Emmanuel's forces.

An official statement coming from Rome gives details of the battle, in which the Italians fought with extraordinary bravery in face of almost insuperable obstacles.

Barbed wire entanglements, hidden batteries, natural defenses, were powerless to hold back the invaders, who swept the Austrians out of position after position and finally forced them to precipitate flight.

Reports from a reliable source in Vienna are to the effect that Emperor Francis Joseph is indignant at the defeat of his army on the Italian frontier. In spite of many reinforcements sent to the Austrians from Bosnia and Herzegovina, strategical and strongly fortified positions which had been considered impregnable have been lost.

The Austrians have shown themselves apparently unable to guard against surprise attacks and the Italian advance has gone on unchecked, while the Austrian losses have been tremendous.

It is reported that the emperor has relieved General Dankl and General Rohr of their commands on the Tyrolean front and has threatened the commander-in-chief, Archduke Eugene, with the same fate if he allows Goritz to fall into the hands of the enemy.

French Plan to Invest Munster

With Metzeral in their possession, the French armies operating on both banks of the Fecht river, in Alsace, are forging ahead with Munster as their next objective. The advance guards are within a short distance of that place now, and several German ammunition depots have been blown up by French gunners.

The marked success of the French troops along the Fecht is regarded as highly important, and the Germans are making desperate attempts to check this drive on the Rhenish provinces. Colmar, one of the most important places in this district, lies but twelve miles ahead of the French armies.

Heavy guns are planted on the heights at Metzeral, and once they are in action the German trenches around Munster will be made untenable. One of the wings of the army that invested Metzeral is now pressing down one bank of the Fecht.

The Dardanelles Conflict

Berlin reports that the correspondent of The Associated Press in the Dardanelles has transmitted the following:

"British losses at Avi Burnu thus far are estimated at 10,000 to 15,000. The Turkish losses are somewhat lower, although the Turks now are constantly on the offensive and they make bayonet attacks almost every night.

Field Marshal von Sanders, the German commander, is highly optimistic regarding the outcome of the operations. He declared that not only are the British unable to make progress but they are losing ground daily.

"With the British fleet unable to assist in the land operations because of the submarine menace, the British hold on Avi Burnu apparently is not as secure as it was."

BRYAN WHACKS AT OUR EX-PRESIDENTS

Thinks They Are on Wrong Track In Regard to Peace

New York, June 21.—Several labor leaders admit that their peace meeting held in Carnegie hall, at which William J. Bryan was the principal speaker, fell far short of their expectations. There were scarcely 1900 persons in the audience, although admission was free, and the majority of the throng were Socialists.

Bryan devoted most of his speech to attacks on Theodore Roosevelt and William H. Taft. He assailed Roosevelt as a swashbuckler seeking a place to satisfy his craving for bloodshed, while Taft was charged with being the leader in an unconstitutional peace movement.

Joseph Cannon of the Western Federation of Miners made bitter attacks on the press and on high-financiers, his words meeting the hearty approval of the Socialist element of the audience.

ADMIRAL ISHERWOOD DEAD

New York, June 21.—A veteran of two wars and the first chief of the bureau of steam engineering in the United States navy, Benjamin Isherwood, 92, U. S. N., retired, died of general debility at his home in this city.

Isherwood was a recognized authority on all steam engineering and he entered the navy in 1844, serving through the Mexican and Civil wars, and later continued his work at the Asiatic station and at the Mare island navy yard, where he made many experiments. He was born in New York in 1822.

Plunges Knife Into Own Heart

Medford, Mass., June 21.—Dr. J. E. Cleaves, 61, went to the woodshed in the rear of his house and plunged a surgeon's knife into his heart. The knife he used was one with which he had performed countless operations and one which he prized highly.

Fall Kills Hotel Man

Newburyport, Mass., June 21.—James E. Fowle, 34, proprietor of the Wolfe Tavern, a former member of the city government and the house of representatives, died of cerebral hemorrhages following a fall down stairs.

TIMOTHY REED DIES AT HIS HOME HERE

Had Served as Trustee of City Hospital For Many Years

Timothy Reed, long a resident of Quincy and for twenty-five years a member of the Board of Trustees of the City Hospital of Quincy, of which he served as secretary, passed away at his home 284 Adams street Saturday evening after an illness of some duration. Mr. Reed was in his 74th year and had been engaged in the leather business in Boston for many years. At one time he was a member of the firm of Reed & Dewson. Of late however he has not been engaged in business for himself, although he has been connected with a Boston leather house.

Mr. Reed was a quiet, unassuming man, little given to social affairs, and was seldom seen at any public event. He was deeply interested in the work of the City Hospital and during all the years he served as secretary of the Board of Trustees he seldom, if ever, missed a meeting.

Mrs. Reed died a year ago. His daughter, Miss Jane Reed married Dr. F. Ramon Burke and she has also passed away. He leaves three sisters, two of whom reside in Quincy, Mrs. Franklin Faxon and Mrs. Dewson.

FIREMEN HAVE HARD FIGHT

Loss of $500 at Squantum Fire

The alarm from Box 81 at 9.45 this morning called the department to what gave promise of being a bad fire at Squantum. The fire was in the attic of the old Guild homestead. It is a two and a half story house now owned and occupied by J. H. Loughan. The only one at home at the time was Mr. Loughan's mother, a woman 80 years of age.

The fire was discovered by George C. Stenzel a grocery clerk who was passing the house at the time, and he gave the alarm The house is situated on Bellevue road and as there was a strong breeze blowing it required quick work on the part of the fire department to prevent a bad fire. The fire evidently started from a defective chimney and the firemen confined it to the attic with a loss estimated at $500.

There were few people in Squantum at the time as a good part of the residents were attending the funeral of George H. Hersey, Jr., at the Sacred Heart church Atlantic. Mrs. Loughan however, was assisted from the house to the home of a neighbor.

GOVERNOR COMMUTES LEO FRANK'S SENTENCE

Execution Thereby Deferred For Time Being

(By United Press)

Atlanta, Ga., June 21—Leo M. Frank began a term of life imprisonment today at the Georgia State Prison at Milledgeville and workmen in the Atlanta county jail were taking down the scaffold on which he was to be hanged between 10 A M. and 3.20 P. M. Tuesday

By so narrow a margin did he escape the noose. It was not until breakfast this morning that more than a mere handful of Atlantans knew that Gov. Slaton had granted commutation of the sentence of a man a Georgia jury convicted of the murder of 14 year old Mary Phagin, a worker in the pencil factory of which Frank was superintendent.

Frank passed through the gates of the prison at 4.30 A. M. today, just as the sun was rising. The trip from Macon, where the sheriff told the reporter that Frank's sentence had been commuted "for the time being," was without incident.

GERMANY ACCUSES ALLIES.

Says They Have Abused Use of American Flag.

(By United Press.)

Washington, June 21—Serious charges of abuse by the Allies of the American flag have been made by Germany to the State Department, it became known today. They covered at least half a dozen instances in the past two months. It was taken under consideration by the department and the embassy at London was called on for a report. Thus far it was said no reply has been made to any of the complaints.

It was learned on high authority that in addition to these complaints cases were cited where other neutral flags have been flown by the British merchantmen sent out thus disguised to comb the seas for German submarines. It was expected here that the charges would figure prominently Germany's reply to America's latest note.

In this connection, made official by the Berlin government, the fact that Germany's submarine U-29 and its crew who lost their lives when their boat was attacked by a British vessel flying the Swedish flag, has already been taken cognizance of by the State Department. Inasmuch as the U-29's entire crew was said to have perished when their craft was rammed officials admitted today they were puzzled to understand how the German government got its information. The story was that Germany would say that while such methods are pursued that it will be impossible for German submarine commanders to observe the ordinary usages of stoppage and search in dealing with suspected merchant vessels.

BRIEFS

CHRIST CHURCH HAS 40TH ANNIVERSARY

Hold Services Commemorating Its Consecration

The 40th anniversary of the consecration of the present Christ church was commemorated at a service Monday evening which was attended by many members of the parish.

A flood of tender recollections were refreshed by Rev. Dr. Reginald H. Howe of Brookline, rector when the consecration took place, who was the speaker of the evening. The building in which the services were held is the fourth since the seed of Episcopalianism was planted here, 241 years ago. The parish is the second oldest in New England, the Trinity parish of Newport, R. I., exceeding it by several years.

BEFORE FIRE IN 1872

Rt. Rev. J. C. Babcock, suffragan bishop of Boston, spoke of the progress of the church in the past 40 years and congratulated the members. He also delivered the benediction.

Rev. William Grainger, present rector, opened the services with prayer in which those present joined. There was also a singing of hymns.

On the chancel was Rev. George Nattress of the Church of the Advent, Boston.

Among those present Peter Williams of Quincy avenue, an 88 year old communicant who was sexton of the church from 1852 to 1872, during which period two churches were destroyed by fire.

Dr. Howe at the close of the service renewed many friendships.

Bishop Babcock brought the greetings of Bishop Lawrence and the laity of the diocese of Massachusetts. He extended his congratulations and said the present typified the progress and prosperity of Christ's work in Christ church, Quincy.

"Forty years," he said, "is a short time no doubt as your rector has said

WOMAN WAS HUMAN TORCH

Husband Extinguishes Flame in Nick of Time

Fighting her way through a roaring fire in the kitchen of her home at Braintree at 4.45 this morning, Mrs. Joseph Trott escaped to the yard. Her husband who heard her screams ran from his farm where he was at work and extinguished the fire in her night dress after most of the garment had been burned off. She was painfully burned but is not in serious condition.

Mrs. Trott and her husband occupy the Amasa Thayer homestead on Washington street, Braintree Highlands. This morning the husband started a fire in the kitchen range and went to his farm nearby where he raises farm produce for the Boston market.

His wife was awakened by the smoke pouring into her room. She rushed down the stairs, through the flames and into the yard where she screamed for help.

Mr. Trott carried her to the home of A. S. Morrow and summoned medical assistance. He then sounded an alarm from box 52. When Chief Tenney and the South Braintree department arrived they found that the hose from the nearest hydrant didn't reach the house and a second alarm was sounded.

The house, an old fashioned structure, was gutted. A barn attached was practically destroyed. They were valued at $7000 and were insured. In the barn was furniture, and farming implements, valued at $1200, not insured. In addition 25 hens and 100 chickens were burned to death.

The firemen had to chop their way through hand hewn timbers and old fashioned carpenter work to get at the fire. Nearly four hours passed before the all out was sounded.

BENJ. HOBART PASSES AWAY

Resident of South Quincy For 86 Years

Benjamin Hobart, a life long resident of South Quincy and one of the oldest citizens of Quincy, passed away this morning at his home, 262 Franklin street, aged 86 years, his death being due largely to advancing age.

Mr. Hobart in his younger days was a boot worker but he has not followed that occupation for many years, his last employment at his trade being for Whitcher & Co. when they occupied a boot manufactory on Union street. Mr. Hobart was a widower, his wife having died some years ago.

He is survived by three children Frank Hobart, Miss Georgianna Hobart and Mrs. Ellen Bates of North Weymouth.

TROOPS GUARD GOV. SLATON

LOWEL MOLLETT.
(By United Press.)

Atlanta, June 22—Gov. Slaton was still in a state of seige today. Three battalions of infantry and the governor's horse guard cover every possible approach to his home. Badly shaken by his experience the executive declared to me at 2 A. M. as the militia commander reported to him that the last straggler had been driven from the neighborhood, that he had called out the militia.

"I did right, I would do it a thousand times again."

It was Leo M. Franks commutation that he referred to. The spleen of his agonizing week of deliberation has told on him. He is frightened and takes no pains to conceal it.

CITY COUNCIL DEFEATS $33,700 LOAN ORDER AT LIVELY SESSION

President Whiton, Opposing Order, Points Out That When Tax is Unbearable One Can Leave City

Passing by a majority vote the nine orders appropriating $33,700 for rebuilding of streets after a lively debate the City Council by a vote of 13 yes and 9 no failed to pass the loan order providing the money for the streets, which had been recalled from the finance committee. An effort was made to suspend Rule 28, as far as it concerned the loan order but this was denied, a three-fourths vote being necessary to suspend this particular rule.

An effort was then made to pass the order, which called out some lively debate on financial matters and when finally put to a vote the order was rejected. A reconsideration was voted however, and the order was laid on the table. It can be taken up at any time, but it will be necessary to secure a three-fourths vote in order to pass the order.

This three-fourths vote is made necessary by a provision in Rule 28 which provides that no money for street rebuilding or construction work shall be passed after July 1.

There was a large attendance of citizens, many evidently coming to see what report the special committee appointed to investigate the fire department would make, but here they were disappointed for the special committee after reporting progress asked for further time, which was granted.

The supplementary budget for $19,800 was passed as was also the order authorizing the city treasurer to borrow $100,000 on a temporary loan. The matter of providing suitable quarters for the Grand Army was also reported favorably.

Under the calendar the nine orders for street rebuilding came up for their final passage. The first of these taken up was that calling for $3,800 for Independence avenue.

Councilman Richards moved that the order be laid on the table until the loan order was reported.

Councilman Smith opposed. Nothing was to be gained by laying on the table. He did not believe it fair to the Mayor that this should be made a budget matter "As the budget is now it is from $50,000 to $60,000 larger than last year. I do not believe the increase in valuation this year will be sufficient to cover this increase."

Councilman Griffin favored the motion. "We are getting near the limit of orders while the loan order is pending. The amount, $33,700, is too large to bond the city for in view of so many important matters that have already been passed and are now pending."

GETTING NEAR LIMIT.

Councilman Beeman favored the motion. "We are getting near the limit of what shall be appropriated."

ALLEGE SPEED OF 38 AN HOUR

"I had 600 pound of steam up in an auto capable of picking up 35 miles in 100 feet," answered William J. Fallon, the Milton auto officer, this morning when M. J. Levine of 100 Sever street, Boston questioned him as to the speed he made on June 17th, "and I followed you for a distance of half a mile, after which I made a complaint charging you with violation of the speed law."

Levine pleaded nolo and in his own defense said he was going 27 miles an hour, but not 38 as stated by the officer. His case was filed on payment of $10 costs.

GERMANY AND MEXICO.

"The murder of 184 American citizens in Mexico evidently does not weigh so heavily with the Administration as the accidental death of a smaller number of Americans on an English warship."—The Fatherland.

The Fatherland is a weekly periodical devoted to the interests of what the publishers call "Fair Play for Germany and Austria." From such a paper, manifestly partisan, no reasonable person would expect impartiality, any more than one expects it from some of the just as rabid pro-Allies sheets. It is well to have a paper intelligently fulfilling the ends which the Fatherland has adopted as its slogan.

The Fatherland is not fulfilling intelligently what might have been a useful mission. Although this paper has pointed out some things which the opposition papers have distorted it has itself in many things fallen into the same sin. The quotation given at the beginning of these remarks is a case in point. The Fatherland's vision is hopelessly distorted.

It is doubtless true that the murder of the 184 American citizens in Mexico does not weigh so heavily as the death of the Americans who went down with the Lusitania. It is right that this should be so.

No one, of course, can view with equanimity the murder of the American citizens in Mexico and we are not by any means over-enthusiastic about the Administration's method of handling the Mexican problem. The enormity of the Lusitania crime lies not so much in the fact that so many Americans perished, terrible though that is, but in the intimation that this is only the beginning of a course by Germany outside the pale of international law and the accepted codes of humanity. The President contends rightly that the principle is the important thing. Americans have a right to pursue their way upon the international highways without interference by the various combatants with whom they have no quarrel and whom they have not injured.

In Mexico the situation is hardly the same. The Americans who remained in Mexico after repeated warnings by our government to leave did so with a full realization of possible consequences. Although the Mexicans are not to be excused for their fiendish conduct it must be remembered that there is not a responsible goverment in Mexico and that the various acts objected to have been committed by outlaw bands. Mexico is in a state of anarchy: Germany is not. Germany has a responsible government and Germany's crime was committed as part of a deliberate governmental policy. The murders in Mexico were committed in spite of such remnants of government as the country possesses. Neither crime is excusable, but the one is less excusable than the other.

After all nature in any form is the best artist, landscape gardener, or beautifier. Her color schemes, her natural rookeries and gardens cannot be matched even by the output of great wealth.

There is someone in Quincy who evidently realizes this, too, because for the jardiniere on his front lawn he has used a block of rough, natural granite. He has hewn out of the top a deep hole wherein he has planted geranium and hanging vines.

Not far from this original flower stand is one of imposing proportions and design. In money it must be worth much, but in beauty it falls far short of its natural neighbors.

Something really notable is being done out in Illinois to stop the liquor evil. The Manufacturer's association has proved to factory owners that liquor drinking in the factories is largely responsible for the many accidents. The owners have forbidden the drinking of even beer and many have provided refrigerators and free ice to encourage men to drink milk. This is proving generally successful, and the healthful milk drinking habit is growing rapidly.

The country should feel mighty proud of her Southern sons, who though they have fought bitterly against her, are now loyally pledging themselves to stand back of her President in these times of stress. At the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans 6,000 old soldiers unanimously so pledged, although they were all in favor of peace.

Not long ago the country was interested in the telephone extending from ocean to ocean. And now for the first time, though we don't see great headlines about it, a telephone has been successfully used by divers under water to communicate with the men above. And incidentally at the same time the world's record in diving was beaten by 32 feet.

One's enjoyment of this beautiful weather is enhanced by the thought that beginning tomorrow prominent business men of the city are to give their clerks a half holiday every Wednesday through the summer. There should be a gain in efficiency through this mid-week relaxation for hard working men which cannot but be advantageous to the customer.

It seems that we are to have a gentlemen Carrie Nation. C. H. Moore, the late Mrs. Nation's brother, will wield the hatchet as energetically as his sister, it is said.

"Bath House John" Starr still shines at the city's public bathing place. A star man for the job.

HIS OWN PRIME MINISTER.

Professor Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard university suggests to the Boston Advertiser that the President is undertaking to carry too much of the public burden. He was the whole thing at Princeton, for which he was criticised, and his habit of thinking out things for himself caused remark in the Governor's office in New Jersey.

Professor Hart says the President can hardly be criticised for failing to establish confidential relations with 435 members of the House and 96 senators; but he seems to hold aloof from the 10 members of his cabinet and from the heads of the important executive bureaus. Professor Hart believes that if the President desires the confidence of his advisors and of the people at large, he will more freely consult the members of his cabinet and the members of Congress.

Powerful, strong and able as President Wilson is, he cannot afford to stand before the country as the only thing. But he has pursued that course so long he can hardly be expected to change it, however beneficial it might prove to be. The country will soon be in position to form an opinion on this point, for his choice of a secretary of state will be the answer.

Will he choose another weak man like Bryan, who will consent to be a rubber stamp for the ideas of the President, or a strong, positive character, who may not be willing to take detailed instructions from the White House? The men who are mentioned as possibilities are in the latter class. Will the President allow one of that stamp to help him bear his burdens? Common sense should help him to solve the problem with wisdom.—Lynn Item.

WILSON'S VIEW POINT.

In forcing an issue with Mr. Bryan and compelling the latter to offer his resignation as Secretary of State, President Wilson has performed a high public service. He has sacrificed personal comfort to patriotic duty. It would have been far more convenient from a party point of view to have kept the cabinet intact. Out of office Mr. Bryan may be expected to oppose Mr. Wilson as energecitally as he has supported him while a member of his political family.

But such a utilitarian compromise necessarily clashed with the President's higher obligation to himself and to the country.

Mr. Bryan never should have been Secretary of State in any cabinet. His great delusion is that the world has got rid forever of the powder cart. With the whole world aflame with war, such an obsession on the part of the head of a department of foreign affairs is a peril to the nation which employs him. A man of Mr. Bryan's type is a misfit in any cabinet in such a crisis.

It is a sign of Mr. Wilson's development as a statesman that he now recognizes the folly of the Bryan appointment.

The next Secretary of State should not be a politician. He should be, first, last and all the time, a diplomat. —Taunton Herald News.

A DISTINCTION.

The election of Mr. Wilson was an accident. The election of Roosevelt would have been a calamity.—The Fatherland.

NIBBLING.

The French nibble at the German army, and the Germans whittle the British fleet; but at the same time both the nibbler and the whittler are merely on the outer fringe of the solid substance.—Barre Time.

Financial Review

While our imports have declined materially, our exports have increased enormously, creating a tabulous excess in the latter of about one billion dollars during the closing fiscal year. Thus far Great Britain has stood the strain far better than any other nation, and while it is possible that sterling may sell at still lower figures, there are as yet no signs of weakness in Britain's ability to finance both herself and her Allies until the end of the war. The exhibition of strength and skill which British finance is making is remarkable, and far exceeds all expectations; nothing like it having ever been witnessed in history.

Thus far the national debt of Great Britain has increased about $4,000,000,000, and has more than doubled in amount since the war began. Mr. Asquith notified his fellow-countrymen the other day that the war, which has been costing about $13,000,000 a day including about $1,000,000,000 advanced to her Allies, will soon cost over $15,000,000, or at the rate of nearly $5,500,000,000 annually. Such waste is staggering. When it is remembered that the war is costing other nations proportionately as much as Great Britain, and more where cities and districts are wiped out, this devastation seems utterly beyond human comprehension. It would seem as if exhaustion alone must quickly end such a terrific cataclysm.

Yet, it would be premature to calculate upon any such result at an early date; for the struggle may last another year unless a military miracle of some sort hastens the end. It must be borne in mind that the resources and population and wealth of the principal belligerents have been enormously augmented since the last great war, and it is doubtful if the per capita cost of this war to the taxpayer is any greater than the Napoleonic war which ended with the battle of Waterloo. In the case of Great Britain, it is calculated that her national income is about $10,000,000,000 annually; so that with her vast investments abroad, valued at $20,000,000,000 and her foreign trade of nearly $7,000,000,000 annually, it is quite evident that thus far Britain's financial resources are far from being seriously strained. This cannot be said of some of the other contestants; and if the war is to be one of exhaustion, which seems quite probable, these are factors which will play an important and perhaps a decisive part.

Commercial conditions at home show limited but steady improvement. Our crops are somewhat backward, but the outlook is satisfactory. The steel industry shows a decided gain and is now estimated to be working at about 80 percent. of capacitl, against 70 percent. a month ago, this largely on account of foreign orders for munitions and railroad equipment. Domestic orders are also coming in rather more freely. Prices are stiffening, and the building trade exhibits symptoms of recovery. Failures are few and collections fairly good. The scarcity of skilled labor is developing in certain lines, and no relief is to be expected from immigration, which is practically suspended for obvious reasons. Railroad earnings show rather discouraging returns Bank clearings for the first half of June were likewise discouraging, inasmuch as they show a materially smaller volume of trade than in the same period last year. Nevertheless, the general situation may be considered reasonably hopeful; especially in view of the worldwide derangements.

HOLD ANNUAL CHILDREN'S DAY

The Sunday morning service at the Wollaston Unitarian church was given over to the religious education department of the parish, which celebrated its annual Children's Sunday. The church decorations were most attractive, the color scheme being green and white with touches of mountain laurel. Several canaries, as usual, lent their voices in praising God.

The service opened with the Processional hymn "Hail the Cross of Jesus," the children marching from the parish house into the church auditorium. After the opening service two infants were baptized and each was given a beautiful white rosebud, a symbol of the unfolding of a beautiful life. The children were John Carlin Miller, born Feb. 5, 1915, in Wollaston, son of Phillip Edward and Mabel Harrington Miller of 176 Marlboro street and Kenneth Edward Burnham, born in Wollaston, Jan. 30, 1915, son of Edward Melcher and Ida Wells Burnham of 30 Park street

A copy of the Bible suitably inscribed was presented by the pastor in behalf of the church to Caroline Sidney Simmons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Simmons, Jr., of 12 Newport terrace in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of her baptism in the church

Mrs. H. C Needham, the Sunday school superintendent, presented gold pins, not as a reward but in recognition of faithful attendance upon the sessions of the Sunday school for one year to Herbert Baker, Bernadine Barker, Arline Holmes, Stanwood Sweetser, Helen Thomas, Geraldine Olive; gold wreaths for perfect attendance for two years to Virginia Bishop, Madeline Child, Dorothy Holmes, Edward Sweetser; gold bars for perfect attendance for four years to Clarence Cath, Earle Cath, Carl G. Horst, Jr., Gretchen Horst, Judith Page.

The appeal from Fred M Rollins, for funds to aid weary and careworn mothers and restore to health sickly and emaciated children resulted in a generous offering which was received by four young misses:—Frances Adams, Frances Brett, Verna Carr, Caroline Sidney Simmons. The pastor's address dealt with golden opportunities, which comes to old and young daily, inviting us to make our common daily life divine. Just before the recessional hymn the entire school joined in reciting "I will be true for there are those who trust me." The decorations were in charge of Frederick H. Bishop, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. William E. Rowe. The minister was assisted in the service by Mrs. H. C. Needham, superintendent of the Sunday school and Mr. Fred M. Rollins, chairman of the executive committee of the Sunday school. Sunday was the last session of the season for the Sunday school. The school reopens Sunday, Sept. 12.

The entertainment committee of the parish are planning a series of good, clean wholesome motion pictures to be shown Wednesday and Saturday evenings at 8 and Saturday afternoon at 2.30 in the Unitarian parish hall. Members and friends of the church and the public are cordially invited.

Rev. Carl G. Horst Sunday afternoon preached the sermon at the annual Memorial service of the Rising Star lodge of Odd Fellows and the Golden Star lodge of Rebekahs of Randolph in the Church of the Unity Randolph.

A Massachusetts state inspector speaking of the Wollaston Unitarian parish hall says "This is one of the safest and best equipped halls I have ever inspected."

Any family in need of kindling wood may have such free of charge by applying to G. Ernest Carr, 311 Safford street Tuesday.

Unitarians this season have an unusually large number of summer meetings to choose good speakers of national reputation will consider live topics at all the various sessions A Country Life Institute will be held at Andover, N. H., in Proctor Academy and the Unitarian church, June 27 and July 3 An institute for Religious Education and Social Service will be held at Meadville, Pa., July 15 to August 13. The Isles of Shoals, summer meetings will be held July 11 to 25. The biennial meeting of the General Conference of Unitarian and other Christian churches is held in San Francisco, August 23 to 27

Next Sunday's service will be the last of the season. The church will be closed as usual during July and August.

A POLICEMAN'S ADVENTURES

Officer Corbett has Three Unusual Accidents.

Three incidents occurred the other morning and all drew the attention of PatrolmanCorbett who did what he could to remedy the situation.

At nine the sun affected bottled temperance drinks in the window of the Currie store and the top of one bottle blew off. The officer dropped the awning.

At day break water poured off the roof of the Kincaide theatre on two occasions in such quantities that he is puzzled as to the cause.

An hour before that a wheel worked off one of the Elm Farm milk wagons and spilled the driver and bottles on the street. The officer found the missing nut. There was no damage.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

CARMEN CALL AWARD HIGHLY UNSATISFACTORY

Express Their Feeling at Meeting Here Monday Night

The carmen have won a raise in pay but the employees call the award unsatisfactory. The Quincy branch, consisting of 400 motormen, conductors and power house men of this city, Braintree and Weymouth, voted their dissatisfaction at a special meeting in Electa hall Monday evening. Two sessions were held, the last commencing at midnight.

Locals throughout the Bay State territory took similar action. Today the state conference board is holding a special session to consider the situation. What the outcome will be is hard to say.

The important point of the award says that the existing graduated scale of conductors and motormen is reduced, after Oct. 1, from eight years to six years. Increase in wages granted so that maximum of 30 cents an hour will be reached at the end of five years of service.

WILLARD A. A. CAPTURE GAME

The Willard A. A. took the Larry Placers in the last inning of a very exciting game played at Spring pasture. The Larry Placers were in the lead 13 to 10 when Steadman the backstop of the Willards, came to bat with three on and knocked a home run, thus winning the game. The batteries were:

Willards, Schatzel and Steadman.
Larry Placers Kegler and Steadman.

FRESH AIR CAMP.

Colonel Adam Gifford of The Salvation Army will officially open the Army's Fresh Air Camp for poor mothers and children situated at Canton, on Saturday. The first contingent of the youngsters and mothers will be sent to the camp the day before its opening, and it is Colonel Gifford's purpose to send 150 of them to open the season with. The children and mothers will stay for two weeks and after they return another batch of tired mothers and children will be sent to take their places. This scheme will be kept up during the hot months of the summer.

This year additional houses have been erected to give more roomy accommodations for the parties. At the end of the season it is the purpose of the Army Officers to take a party of aged and crippled people to the camp for a stay. In addition to the new dormitories this season the Army has a large size concrete swimming pool which is large enough to give the children who can swim an opportunity to enjoy this sport. The water for this purpose is supplied by the town of Canton. The town laid pipes to connect the camp at an expense of $5000. The camp is supported entirely by voluntary contributions which have fallen off this summer, so Colonel Gifford is sending out a letter of appeal to friends and contributors of the Army work asking them to send in their donations, which are much needed.

It is Colonel Gifford's desire that not one mother or child who has already been promised this privilege of going to the camp be disappointed on account of the lack of money. Colonel and Mrs. Gifford will be in charge of the camp, assisted by Adjutant Annie Eastwood, the matron, and Ensign Lena Chaffee, her assistant.

FIRST ANNUAL OUTING.

The South Shore Master Plumbers association, with which the master plumbers of Quincy are affiliated, held its first annual outing Saturday at Abington, where they were the guests of George Gomley. The party, some thirty in number, made the trip by automobile and the outing was one of pleasure for all. During the day there was a series of field sports, including a game of ball between teams made up of members of the association.

At noon the party was served with a most appetizing dinner by Mrs. Gomley and her daughters, the menu including baked beans, coffee and rolls with native strawberries and ice cream as a windup.

IS KILLED BY EXPRESS TRAIN

John C. Campbell, father of George M. Campbell of Quincy, was killed at Wakefield Monday by being struck by a Boston-Haverhill bound express train. Mr. Campbell, who is 83 years of age, had been on an errand and started to cross the tracks near the railroad station.

People standing on the station platform saw the approaching train and shouted a warning, but Mr. Campbell, who was a little hard of hearing, evidently did not hear them or see the on coming train. The engine tossed his body 200 feet and death must have been instantaneous.

Besides his son in Quincy Mr. Campbell left another son who resides in Cambridge and two daughters

VISIT BY PETTENGILL.

Grand Director George P. Pettengill of Holbrook accompanied by Fred Williams, past commander of Dorchester, visited Quincy commandery, Golden Star, in Electa hall Monday evening. Mrs. Mary Cook, commander, read the records of the recent grand session. A social followed.

LIGHTING EFFECTS ARE BEAUTIFUL

Through the courtesy of E. W. Campbell, architect of the new Masonic Temple now nearing completion on Beale street Wollaston for Wollaston Masonic lodge, a number of brethren were given an opportunity this week to witness an exhibition of the working of the electric light effects. Without question it can safely be said that there are few, if any Masonic Temples in this state which have a more elaborate system of lighting effects than will Wollaston lodge.

The lodge room is located on the top floor of the building, the ceiling being dome shaped and the plastering being painted to represent a sky. The lighting is what is known as the indirect lighting, the electric bulbs being concealed behind the mouldings on the sides of the hall in such a manner that their rays are thrown to the ceiling and then reflected to the hall. There are three sets of globes on each side. There is a set showing a yellow light, another a red light and the third a blue light. These are operated by a rheostart, by the manipulation of which it is possible to blend them in such a manner as to produce almost any color desired.

The exhibition shown on the occasion of this visit was that of twilight with the setting of the sun, and the rising of the moon. First the sky assumes a bluish tint and gradually the yellow and red is worked in until all the glory of a beautiful sunset is shown, the effect being most natural and beautiful. Gradually this disappears until the supreme darkness of midnight is reached.

The next exhibition shown was the dawn of a new day. Gradually the darkness of the night disappears and in the horizon the sky can be seen growing lighter and lighter until at last the brightness of day bursts upon the scene and the bright, warm sun appears in all its glory and beauty.

The switchboard where are located the switches and rheostarts which operate the lights, is a mammouth affair set into one side of the building protected by strong metal doors. On the side of stage platform of the public hall on the street floor, there is also another switch board for operating colored lights on the stage.

The temple is now practically completed and it is expected that two weeks more will see everything in readiness to receive the furnishings. Just when it will be dedicated is not as yet known but it will probably be early in the fall.

MINISTERS HAVE GLORIOUS TIME

Monday was a red-letter day for those members of the Ministers' association of Quincy who were able to accept the invitation of Frank Burgess of the Wollaston Yacht club, and enjoy a day's sail with him on his handsome cruising yacht, "The Kathrina."

It was the first trip of this yacht for the season, and a more perfect day could not have been wished for. The start was made a little after nine o'clock with a clear sky and a good strong breeze. This lessed somewhat and became quite light at times; but the auxiliary engine, capable of 9 or 10 miles an hour furnished all necessary speed so that the slackening of the wind was not noticed.

Capt. Burgess cruised around for a while in Quincy bay giving his delighted guests an opportunity to form an impromptu geography class, with maps and charts, to study the names and locations of the various islands of the bay and to enjoy a kaleidoscopic view of Quincy and its environs from the water side.

Some questions arose as to the identity of certain well known points, which seemed somewhat unfamiliar from this new point of view; but such differences of opinion were easier to settle by definite and fixed standards than theological problems would have been; so the disputes were never serious or lengthy.

After an hour or two of this exhilerating sport the Kathrina slipped out through the thoroughfare into the open sea, and headed for Europe. But about the time the passengers began to sight torpedo boats and see evidence of German submarines, she veered about, and with Deer Island, Winthrop and Revere Beach coming into sight upon the left, she dropped anchor off Bass Point, Nahant.

Meantime indications of hunger had become quite manifest and while the efficient crew of the Kathrina stretched a canopy over the deck and otherwise provided for the comfort of the clergy, the latter turned themselves into an ambulance corps for first aid to the hungry, with the result that very soon a sumptuous and appetizing luncheon was served upon the deck with beverages ranging all the way from hot coffee to lemonade and lime juice.

After luncheon an hour was passed in story telling and exchanging jests in which the genial host showed himself a worthy leader. Then while a few of the party at a time took short trips with the captain in the tender and played "duck-on-the-rock" on the rocky shore of Nahant, others engaged in the absorbing sport of fishing from the deck—not with the common selfish idea of catching fish, but just "fishing"—while others "set and talked or just set."

About five o'clock anchor was weighed and the return trip began by a different route, passing close to the interned German steamers in Boston Harbor, and by good luck meeting the U. S. Battleship Nebraska, which was just steaming out.

Before reaching the mooring at Wollaston Yacht club, the president of the association called a meeting of the ministers upon the deck, and a hearty vote of thanks with ringing cheers was given to their hospitable host for for a most enjoyable and memorable day.

Those who made the trip with Mr. Burgess were Rev. Joseph Walther, of the First Baptist church of Wollaston; Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson of the First parish; Rev. Stephen C. Lang of the Quincy Point Congregational church; Rev. Garl G. Horst of the Wollaston Unitarian church; Rev. W. H. Germany of the Hall place M. E. church; Rev. A. G. Sporrong of the Swedish Congregational church; Rev. Paul Hallin of the Swedish Baptist church who is just leaving for work in Minnesota, and Robert S. Gaskell, secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

We wish to thank you for your liberal patronage of the past 3½ years. When we leased our present stores we thought our floor space would be large enough to take care of all our wants for years to come, but the liberal patronage we have been receiving has compelled us to enlarge our present stores, taking on the corner store. We are also building a new large warehouse at Castle Square, as our present warehouse is entirely too small for the large and increased volume of business that came to us this spring. With many carloads of new goods arriving daily and with mechanics and workmen all over our store, we must put on this sale at once. Generally we put on a Clearance Sale the End of July and in August, but on account of extensive alterations everything must go into this great Alteration Sale. Nothing is reserved. Everything reduced 25% to 33%. We must sell at least $100,000 worth of merchandise at once. Liberal credit terms to those who want them.

Yours truly, L. Summerfield

Odd Floor Samples 25% to 33% Off
Many very handsome show pieces that we do not want soiled by lime and plaster will go into this great Alteration Sale. Single pieces by the thousands that take up floor space selling at cost and below cost. To quote prices on so many articles is impossible. See our show windows for bargains, and you will realize the great money-saving opportunity this sale offers.

Baby Carriages 25% to 33% Off
Handsome show samples, many in white enamel, must go at once, priced from $7.50 to $65.00, all at reduced prices.

POEHLER SAVES HIS ALL STARS

Rolling a three string total of 360, Paul Poehler, the candle pin champ and local wonder, pulled his All Star team along far enough to give them a four point victory over the Wardwell five at the Poehler alleys at Houghs Neck Monday evening. The total was 1346 to 1342. A return match will be rolled Monday evening at the Wardwell alleys.

Poehler opened with 129, then 117 and closed with 114. His rolling was decidedly of spectacular. His All Stars, all good bowlers, were off color and he tightened up in the face of that and came across.

McLean was high man on the losing team. His single of 112 and two strings over 90 gave him 295, the closest of anyexcepting the champ, to a triple. The score:

SPORTING COMMENT

Saturday the Fore River team travels to Norwood to play the Norwood Press. On the holiday they clash with the Makarias in the annual game.

The North Quincy Catholic club and the Makarias are booked for the Atlantic playground next Saturday.

With Ganzel and Porky Flynn at Granville, N. Y., the city is without the services of two good players.

No game between the Somerville police and the local bluecoats today, the visitors being unable to come over.

The Church league is developing into an interesting combination. Six teams have met once and the seventh starts next Saturday. The jockeying for positions has just commenced and a triple tie is on.

The teachers at the Gridley Bryant school tendered the members of the school team which won the championship of the grammar school league, a reception, in recognition of the event at the school this afternoon.

SEEK LOST CHILD.

The lost child call from Box 37 at 8.45 Monday night was to summon aid to search for Edward Haynes, the eight year old son of Edward A. Haynes of 347 Water street. The boy attended school at the John Hancock but failed to return home and his parents became alarmed. The police have no record of the boy being found. It was reported at the John Hancock school this morning, however, that he had been found and was at school as usual.

HOLD REGULAR MEETING.

The regular bi-monthly meeting of the St. Mary's C. T. A. & M. R. society was held at the hall Monday evening. A committee of five, composed of Thomas F. O'Brien, Thomas J. O'Brien, George McDonald, Martin Griffin and Philip Grady, was elected to arrange for a baseball game between a team from the hall and a team representing the Holy Name society of Lowell. Rev. Fr. Buckley, a Quincy boy has charge of the Lowell boys.

CITY COUNCIL

Councilman McDonald "The street committee has given these matters careful attention and has pared them down. It is all right to talk about what has been appropriated but what about the people who live on these streets and desire them put in passable shape."

Councilman McGrath: "We seem to be getting away from the fundamental principal. This $33,000 is but a drop in the bucket. We should make a canvass early in the year so that we can have a definite basis to work on and we will know just where we stand. These matters are propositons that can just as well wait. We want to get rid of some of our big debt."

CALLS IT FRENZIED FINANCE.

Councilman Ross was called to the chair and President Whiton taking the floor said: "I hope the Council will kill the whole business. There are lots of things we would like but we can not afford them. This is nothing more or less than resurfacing and is therefore a current expense and should go into the budget. I will not say that these streets are in proper condition but they are better than the average. Here we are asked to pass another temporary loan simply because the taxes of last year have not been collected as they should. Do you think the people want a $24 tax rate? If you are going to borrow money for current expenses it will go up. If we can not put these matters in the budget we can not afford them. You can pass these orders by a majority vote but it will take sixteen votes to pass the loan. There is now outstanding of last years taxes $978,501.38. Let us kill every one of these orders. It will be frenzied finance to pass them."

Councilman Barnicoat argued in favor of the orders. The committee looked these matters over carefully and they are certainly needed I hope that they will all pass."

Councilman Nelson favored laying on the table until the loan order was disposed of.

Councilman O'Dowd, chairman of the street committee, said: "The street committee did the best it could. The legislature in its wisdom provided that we could borrow money for this work. It is in the nature of a permanent improvement. They are all intersecting streets and should be taken care of. The trunk line streets are used largely by people from out of town. In West Quincy the streets called for in this order have not had a cent laid out on them for 25 years. I can see no reason why we should put these in the budget and pay for what the people of years to come will get the benefit of. To me it looks as though the President of the Council was giving the committee a slap in the face after all the work it had done. It is not fair to the committee."

Councilman Whiton: "If his skin is thin I am sorry. It is poor financing to borrow money for current expenses. If there is anyone who should receive a slap it is the finance committee. If the council wanted to pass all of these matters I could stand it but it will only drive people out of Quincy. When it gets too bad, I too, can pull up stakes and get out."

Later President Whiton qualified his remark about getting thin skinned saying that what he meant was the minority of the finance committee who reported the orders two weeks ago.

Councilman Thompson favored the motion to lay on the table. "I believe in good streets but it is a question how we are to get them. Last year the Council made a start on the right track by putting these matters in the budget. Our whole trouble in Quincy is our bonded indebtedness. It is an easy matter to make a paper thing for this work."

Councilman Craig said: "We should settle this thing one way or the other. These are not temporary repairs but permanent. If we put them over it will be the same thing again next year."

Councilman Slade spoke in favor of the orders, particularly that for Rock Island road. "These improvements will last for five or ten years and people of these years should help pay for them."

After some further argument the motion to lay on the table was lost 18 no and 12 yes.

The order was then passed by a vote of 13 yes and 10 no.

In turn the following orders were passed:—

$2,000 for Liberty street.
$3,000 for Atlantic street.
$5,500 for Rock Island road.
$4,000 for Hall place.
$4,000 for Common street.
$5,000 for Willard street.
$400 for Badgers lane.
$6,000 for Beale street.

On motion of Councilman Smith the loan order providing funds for the above was recalled from the finance committee.

A motion of Councilman Smith to suspend Rule 28 that action on the order might be taken at a later date was rejected.

After some further discussion along the same line the loan order was put on its final passage and rejected by a roll call vote of 13 yes and 9 no as follows:

Yes:—Barnicoat, Barry, Bolster, Craig, Ferguson, Kessler, McDonald, Nelson, O'Dowd, Slade, Smith, Williams, Yule:—13.

No:—Beeman, Fuller, Gallagher, Griffin, McGrath, Prescott, Richards, Thompson, Whiton:—9.

Not voting:—Acting President Ross.

On motion of Councilman Smith the vote was reconsidered and the order laid on the table.

Councilman Nelson offered an amendment to Rule 28, which provided that all petitions and orders received for street work after April 15 shall be referred to the next City Council. The rule at present provides that all such orders received after May 15, shall be so referred. To Ordinance committee.

CHRIST CHURCH

and forty years would be a long history for many of the parishes in Massachusetts and it means quite a period in state history where the life and progress of the church has been so much greater in recent years than in the early days of the commonwealth.

"Christ church I believe is the oldest parish in Massachusetts and it is rich in history and there is no period brighter or more brilliant than that which is included in the past 40 years."

He spoke of Dr. Howe as the preacher who stepped into the breach which resulted from the fire and "through whose courageous leadership, aided by the backing of the people the church was built which stands as a living witness to the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ. They builded well, as the congregation has witnessed in many ways, that religion for which Christ church stands and which we hope will continue during the next 40 years and even 400 years and for even a longer time."

Dr.. Howe spoke of the double festival being observed. He said it was 211 years since the foundation of the parish and 40 years since the building was consecrated to the worship of God. To rehearse even in briefest outline the history of the parish he said would take much time. For that reason he spoke of the festival of the consecration.

"So many memories fill me," he said, "and so many facts present themselves I hardly know where to begin. My mind first reverts to the names of those who have passed on into the other life, names that are dear to me in memory and to you who are here, men and women who were earnest and conscientious and faithful worshipers here, who gave of themselves and their means that it might prosper. The names come before me in review."

Dr. Howe in mentioning the names of people who were prominent in the congregation during his pastorate said he did not single them out as being more devoted than many others he might speak of but that time forbade expressing of the many visions which came before him.

He spoke of Jeffrey R. Brackett who lived opposite the railroad station on the hill, senior warden, who built the church as it was before it was last burned, whose son is now on the staff of Harvard University. "To his devoted wife you are indebted for the beautiful chancel window," said the speaker.

On the Boston road, in the old house whose history is so closely connected with Dorothy Quincy, Peter Butler his wife, two daughters and son lived. He was an active gentleman of the parish.

"Peter Wainwright was a gentleman of the old school, a fine distinguished figure as he came up the aisle and stood all alone for prayer as he entered, standing English fashion with his hat before his eyes. The altar of this church is a memorial to his wife if I am not mistaken."

He then spoke of Elisha Packard, who passed away but a few years ago and of Miss Jerusha Hardwick and her sister who were faithful communicants.

All of these he spoke of in connection with the fire of October 1872, and he told how the interior was renovated with a recess chancel and how the experience of having the rectory behind the church, in the path of the fire prompted them not to put "all their eggs in one basket," hence the present site for the rectory.

From Hingham came Charles F. Shimmin who used to drive, oger, a member of the vestry. The big western window was the gift of his daughter.

Then the Lovering family of Milton hill, Miss Hunt, the devoted organist for many years, Mrs. Gregg from Braintree.

"This afternoon," said the speaker, "I passed the old mansion on Miller Stile road and recalled the Miller family, the same family with which one of the first rectors was connected."

He spoke of Samuel G. Wyman of Boston, of Miss Sarah Bent who lived to a great old age, and who like Anna of old, he said was "one who departed not from the house of God," who gave the old Colonial clock which stands on the stairs of the rectory.

He then spoke of the fire, how but half of the insurance was collected because the Boston fire wrecked some of the companies covering the edifice and said that New York people raised $3000 which, with the assistance of contributions from the parishioners, made it possible to rebuild.

He spoke of the memorial gifts and mentioned the christening of his son, at which were present distinguished men of the Episcopal church. He read an extract from a sermon delivered in 1839 by Dr. King, a learned divine.

"You are connected with a church which has a long history" he said. "It was Braintree not Quincy, in the olden times and the parish owes its origin to the missionary spirit of the members of the Church of England.

"Sometimes when I hear men speak slightingly of foreign missions I like to remind them that if it had not been that some were interested in foreign missions in England we might has been semi-heathen in America.

"One thing which has a great deal to do with prosperity and the best welfare of a Christian parish is to let everything proceed with perfect harmony. It is the best foundation for universal Christian work. I prize it above almost anything else for if everything moves in perfect harmony all other enterprises go on to success.

"Hold up the hands of your rector. No rector alone is able to do his best work without support and encouragement.

"These anniversaries set in train many thoughts. They are milestones on the way of life and they mark the passages of time. None of us are to be on the world forever."

"In speaking of the war he said that this great strife is setting men to think more seriously of life, "not to be gloomy, not to be overserious, but to have a better perspective of life, to put things in their right relation and no life is complete, is rounded out, that leaves out of account that for which the church stands These are the things which in the passage of years abide. Things which are seen are temporal: things which are unseen are eternal."

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

At last they came to the valley floor, over which a devastating fire had run some years before and which was still covered with fallen trees in desolate confusion. Here the girl made her first mistake. She kept on toward the river, although Wayland called attention to a trail leading to the right up over the low grassy hills. For a mile the path was clear, but she soon found herself confronted by an endless maze of blackened tree trunks, and at last the path ended abruptly.

Dismayed and halting, she said: "We've got to go back to that trail which branched off to the right. I reckon that was the highland trail which Settle made to keep out of the swamp. I thought it was a trail from Cameron peak, but it wasn't. Back we go."

She was suffering keenly now, not on her own account, but on his, for she could see that he was very tired, and to climb up that hill again was like punishing him a second time.

When she picked up the blazed trail it was so dark that she could scarcely follow it, but she felt her way onward, turning often to be sure that he was following. Once she saw him fall and cried out: "It's a shame to make you climb this hill again. It's all my fault. I ought to have known that that lower road led down into the timber."

Standing close beside him in the darkness, knowing that he was weary, wet and ill, she permitted herself the expression of her love and pity. Putting her arm about him, she drew his cheek against her own, saying: "Poor boy. Your hands are cold as ice." She took them in her own warm clasp. "Oh, I wish we had never left the camp! What does it matter what people say?" Then she broke down and wailed. "I shall never forgive myself if you"— Her voice failed her.

He bravely reassured her: "I'm not defeated. I'm just tired. That's all. I can go on."

"But you are shaking."

"That is merely a nervous chill. I'm good for another hour. It's better to keep moving anyhow."

She thrust her hand under his coat and laid it over his heart. "You are tired out," she said, and there was anguish in her voice. "Your heart is pounding terribly. You mustn't do any more climbing. And, hark, there's a wolf!"

He listened. "I hear him, but we are both armed. There's no danger from wild animals."

"Come!" she said, instantly recovering her natural resolution. "We can't stand here. The station can't be far away. We must go on."

CHAPTER IX.

The Other Girl.

THE girl's voice stirred the benumbed youth into action again and he followed her mechanically, often stumbling against the trees, slipping and sliding, till at last his guide, pitching down a sharp slope, came directly upon a wire fence.

"Glory be!" she called. "Here is a fence, and the cabin should be near, although I see no light. Hello! Tony!"

No voice replied, and, keeping Wayland's hand, she felt her way along the fence till it revealed a gate; then she turned toward the roaring of the stream, which grew louder as they advanced. "The cabin is near the falls, that much I know," she assured him. Then a moment later she joyfully cried out, "Here it is!"

Out of the darkness a blacker, sharper shadow rose. Again she called, but no one answered. "The ranger is away," she exclaimed, in a voice of indignant alarm.

Leading him toward the middle of the room, Berrie said: "Stand here till I strike a light."

As her match flamed up Norcross found himself in a rough walled cabin, in which stood a square cook stove, a rude table littered with dishes, and three stools made of slabs. It was all very rude, but it had all the value of a palace at the moment.

The girl's quick eye saw much else. She located an oil lamp, some pine wood and a corner cupboard. In a few moments the lamp was lit, the stove refilled with fuel and she was stripping Wayland's wet coat from his back, cheerily discoursing as she did so. "Here's one of Tony's old jackets, put that on while I see if I can't find some dry stockings for you. Sit right down here by the stove; put your feet in the oven. I'll have a fire in a jiffy. There, that's right. Now I'll start the coffee pot." She soon found the coffee, but it was unground. "Wonder where he keeps his coffee mill." She rummaged about for a few minutes, then gave up the search. "Well, no matter, here's the coffee, and here's a hammer. One of the laws of the trail is this: If you can't do a thing one way, do it another. I depend on this coffee to brace you up," she said.

After hanging a blanket over the broken window, she set out some cold meat and a half dozen baking powder biscuits, which she found in the cupboard, and as soon as the coffee was ready she poured it for him, but she would not let him leave the fire. She brought his supper to him and sat beside him while he ate and drank.

The hot, strong coffee revived him physically and brought back a little of his courage, and he said, "I'm ashamed to be such a weakling."

"Now, hush," she commanded. "It's not your fault that you are weak. Now, while I am eating my supper you slip off your wet clothes and creep into Tony's bunk, and I'll fill one of these sirup cans with hot water to put at your feet."

It was of no use for him to protest against her further care. She insisted, and while she ate he meekly carried out her instructions, and from the delicious warmth and security of his bed watched her moving about the stove till the shadows of the room became one with the dusky figures of his sleep.

A moment later, as it seemed, something falling woke him with a start, and, looking up, he found the sun shining and Berrie confronting him with an anxious face. "Did I waken you?" she asked. "I'm awfully sorry. I'm trying to be extra quiet. I dropped a pan. How do you feel this morning?"

He pondered this question a moment. "Is it tomorrow or the next week?"

She laughed happily. "It's only the next day."

He laid his hands together and then felt of his pulse. "I don't seem to have a temperature. I just feel lazy, limp and lazy, but I'm going to get up, if you'll just leave the room for a moment"—

"Don't try it now. Wait till you have had your breakfast. You'll feel stronger then."

At this point came again the disturbing realization that this night of struggle and the ministrations of his brave companion had involved him deeper in a mesh from which honorable escape was almost impossible. The ranger's cabin, so far from being an end of their compromising intimacy, had added and was still adding to the weight of evidence against them both. The presence of the ranger or the supervisor himself could not now save Berea from the gossips.

She brought his breakfast to him, and sat beside him while he ate, chatting the while of their good fortune. "It is glorious outside, and I am sure daddy will get across today, and Tony is certain to turn up before noon. He probably went down to Coal City to get his mail."

"I must get up at once," he said, in a panic of fear and shame. "The supervisor must not find me laid out on my back. Please leave me alone for a moment."

She went out, closing the door behind her, and as he crawled from his bed every muscle in his body seemed to cry out against being moved. Nevertheless he persisted and at last succeeded in putting on his clothes, even his shoes, though he found tying the laces the hardest task of all, and he was at the wash basin bathing his face and hands when Berrie hurriedly reentered. "Some tourists are coming," she announced in an excited tone. "A party of five or six people, a woman among them, is just coming down the slope. Now, who do you suppose it can be? It would be just our luck if it should turn out to be some one from the mill."

He divined at once the reason for her dismay. The visit of a woman at this moment would not merely embarrass them both, it would torture Berrie. "What is to be done?" he asked, roused to alertness.

"Nothing; all we can do is to stand pat and act as if we belonged here."

"Very well," he replied, moving stiffly toward the door. "Here's where I can be of some service. I am an excellent white liar."

SIEGEL GIVES HIMSELF UP

Former Merchant Prince Concludes to Serve Sentence

IS JAILED FOR TEN MONTHS

Grand Jury Investigation Caused Change of Plan to Offer $150,000 on Account of Thousands of Depositors Who Lost $2,224,000 In His Bank—Was Once Worth $4,500,000

Geneseo, N. Y., June 22.—Henry Siegel, who was convicted of accepting deposits for the private bank he operated in connection with his stores, when it was insolvent, gave himself up to the court here to serve the ten months sentence imposed upon him last November.

After his conviction and sentence, Siegel was given six months' liberty, under a stay, to earn money to pay back as much of the $2,224,000 he owed the 15,000 depositors as he could.

Counsel for Siegel withdrew the offer of $150,000 as the "substantial payment" to his creditors and waived stay of sentence. A few minutes later the former merchant prince went to the Monroe county penitentiary at Rochester.

It was admitted that the change in plan was the result of the grand jury investigation by Assistant District Attorney Train two weeks ago, which counsel for Siegel confess showed Siegel's offer was not acceptable to anything like a majority of the depositors who lost in his bank.

Siegel was convicted of a misdemeanor in obtaining a loan from a bank on a false credit statement. The trial was held in the Livingston county supreme court last November. Justice Clark sentenced him to pay a fine of $1000 and to serve ten months in the penitentiary.

The penitentiary sentence, however, was stayed till the June sitting of the court with the understanding that should Siegel then come forward with a substantial repayment of the depositors the sentence would be vacated.

Siegel's offer of $150,000 had proved acceptable to the depositors' committee—naturally an entirely unofficial body. With the cash offer went the proposition that Siegel desired to engage in business again, and, if permitted to do so, would assign to a trustee all the stock representing his interest, so that all the proceeds, except $10,000 a year for his living expenses, might be paid to the depositors.

Mrs. Emmeline Barker broke away from this committee, and soon made three sensational charges against it. Mrs. Baker gathered about 500 depositors and there followed grand jury proceedings, at which Train questioned scores of depositors.

It is said the testimony showed that the committee which had agreed to accept Siegel's offer had no authority from a considerable part of the depositors.

Siegel has testified that in 1902 he was worth $4,500,000. That was the high-water mark of his prosperity, for although he may have appeared more prosperous after that time, his fortune was insecure.

OLEOMARGARINE FRAUDS

Investigation Shows Government Was Cheated Out of $27,000,000

Washington, June 22.—How violators of the oleomargarine law have defrauded the federal government out of at least $27,000,000, due in stamp and special taxes, is revealed by Secretary McAdoo in a statement based upon a preliminary report on a sweeping investigation conducted by Commissioner Osborne of the internal revenue bureau.

Frauds committed as long ago as 1902, immediately after the enactment of the law, have been uncovered by the commissioner. Unpaid taxes aggregating $851,000 have been recovered and deposited in the treasury, "with the prospect of further very large collections."

Forty-two violators of the law have been convicted since the first of January, and twenty-nine of these have been given prison sentences. Fines aggregating $148,000 have been assessed in addition to the recoveries actually made.

The announcement shows that, since 1902, more than 200,000,000 pounds of colored oleomargarine has been manufactured and fraudulently sold as uncolored oleomargarine. "It is believed," it says, "that a great proportion of this product reached consumers as butter."

CARMEN DISAPPOINTED

Arbitrators Make Wage Scale Below What Was Expected

Boston, June 22.—The award of the Bay State railway arbitration board left a trail of gloom among carmen from Newport, R. I., to Nashua, N. H.

After costly arbitration proceedings that began nearly eight months ago, the men now learn that they have won practically nothing but what the road was willing to grant without arbitration.

In financial circles the award is termed a victory for the road. The whole award, affecting 5000 employes, will cost the company less than $300,000 for the two years ending Oct. 1, 1916.

The demands of the union, if granted, would cost the road in the vicinity of $1,189,000 per annum, and involved increases in wages running from 25 percent to as high as 40 percent, depending upon the class to which the employes belonged.

The half-cent increase granted the blue-uniformed men was rejected when President Sullivan, head of the Bay State system, made a similar offer last year.

It was a severe blow to the carmen. They were confident they would win a substantial increase. They expected at least 2 cents an hour increase, nothing less. That was the opinion of members on the joint committee handling the arbitration case for the sixteen unions on the road.

POLICE SUSPECT WOMAN MURDERED

Body of Unknown Found Floating In River at Waltham

Waltham, Mass., June 22.—The body of a well-dressed young woman, about 26 years of age, bearing evidences which the police believe reveal murder, was found floating in the Charles river last evening.

Metropolitan police have taken the case in hand. Middlesex county was scoured in an effort to establish an identification. Police stations broadcast have been asked to furnish the officials descriptions of missing young women.

The young woman wore a diamond engagement ring, and in a locket, set with five diamonds, is the miniature photograph of a young girl. The eyes and hair are brown and the body was dressed in a white silk dress with black polka dots. The shoes are black oxfords and the stockings black silk. She wore a light summer coat, and in a pocket was a purse containing 64 cents.

JOY RIDING AT 4 MILES PER

Steam Roller No. 2 Speeds to Cohasset

Despite the orders of Mayor Campbell that city machines must not be used on joy rides, Steam Roller No. 2 of Quincy was stopped in Cohasset Monday evening and the operator placed under arrest on a charge of being under the influence of liquor, according to advices received at local police headquarters.

The information created all sorts of excitement. Everyone who heard the story wondered how the machine reached there and what thoughts must have been in the minds of the operator to have undertaken a joy ride in a heavy ponderous vehicle capable of making as much as four miles per hour.

The mystery was cleared up when it was learned that a contractor had leased the roller for work in Scituate during its lay off period. The man was not in Quincy court this morning although Cohasset is in the district. It is said he lives at Scituate and was sent home at dawn.

HISS PICTURE OF W. J. BRYAN

When the picture of William Jennings Bryan was flashed on the screen at Kincaide's theatre Monday it evolved more hissing than applause President Wilson's picture on the other hand was warmly received.

Featuring the song "Virginia Lee, Won't you come back to me," Lew Orth's Musical Comedy Co., continues to be the chief attraction. "Aladdin from Broadway" is the name of the play staged this week. The song was sung by members of the company in various parts of the audience. This half of the week the company becomes intimately acquainted with the audience and the imitations of "Charlie Chaplin" (Bert Yorke) who views most of the performance from the floor. He is a real comedian and the funniest man Quincy has seen for many a day.

A stranded musical company in Egypt, and how they get their money from Charlie Chaplin, by imitating the kind of stars that are shining on Broadway, is the jist of the performance. Mary Collen, Al Joslin and Mary Pickford, Egyptian scenery, Egyptian costumes and Aladdin's lamp gave the performance a Far Eastern effect.

"The Diamond fro mthe Sky" will please the horse lovers this week. The diamond ends up in an owl's nest this time

ANNIVERSARY OBSERVED.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank McNeil of Moulton avenue, were pleasantly surprised Saturday evening by a large number of friends. Mrs. McNeil had invited a few friends to play whist, some of whom remembered that June 22 was the wedding anniversary of the couple and also Mr. McNeil's birthday and thought it a good opportunity to celebrate both events and instead of the few invited to play whist about thirty appeared to congratulate the couple. Guests were present from St. Louis Mo., Quincy, Boston and North Weymouth. Games were played, songs rendered and stories told that were enjoyed by all, and last but not least the hostess served a genuine North Weymouth clam chowder.

Just before supper Mr. and Mrs. McNeil were escorted to the dining room and presented with a brass electric lamp with a hand painted shade and a beautiful battenberg center piece to go under it. The presentation speech was made by William Kelly of St. Louis, Mo., and accepted by Mr. McNeil in few well chosen words.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. J. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. W. Norrie, Mr. and Mrs. Barnicoat, W. Blake, R Johnson, H. Smith, Mrs. William Lillie, Mrs. E. Savoy all of Quincy, William Kelly of St. Louis and C. Peterson, William Pratt, A. Kelly, J. Robertson, Mrs. Perkins and Miss Perkins of North Weymouth.

POLICE GET WARRANT FOR AVIATOR H. W. JONES

Must Answer Charge of Operating Without License

Harry W. Jones, the aviator, whose two passengers are dead as the result of a flight at Squantum last Friday evening, will be in the district court Thursday morning to answer to the charge of operating an aircraft without a license, as provided for in Sec. 1 of Chapter 663 of the Acts of 1913. He will be brought to court by Joseph Toye, a Boston newspaper man, who has been acting as his manager.

The warrant charging Jones with the violation was issued Tuesday, three days after Acting Chief McKay made the complaint. He will conduct the prosecution.

The case, as far as is known, will be the first of its kind in the country. Manager Toye has no objections to the appearance of Jones, being anxious to have the law tested.

Jones and Toye took every possible step to comply with the law. They applied for a license to the Highway Commission but learned that the latter could not grant one because it had no expert who could examine aviators and pass on their qualifications to operate. The law allows aviation but for some reason no provision has been made to regulate.

Acting Chief McKay, who will conduct the prosecution said this morning that although the law allows a man to fly, one cannot fly without a license.

Jones since the mishap has been in the Quincy City Hospital. His recovery has been unusually rapid and his escape from fatal injury is considered remarkable. For a day he lay with no recollection of the plunge from the air to the Crabtree estate. Then as he improved he commenced to worry about George H. Hersey of Squantum and William Ely of Providence, his passengers. He was not told they were dead.

On Tuesday his condition improved so much he was allowed to walk about the hospital. During his visit to various sections of the ward he picked up a newspaper and from that learned that both his passengers had died from injuries received during the fall. The information affected him deeply and he collapsed. He was revived by those at the hospital. Today he is much improved.

SUGGEST PLACE FOR FOUNTAIN

An adjourned meeting of the Municipal improvements committee of the Board of Trade was held this week but owing to the unavoidable absence of its chairman no decided action was taken relative to the matter of having sessions of the Norfolk County Superior Court held in Quincy. The committee, however, did consider in an informal way the matter of the fountain in City Square, which the Planning Board in a communication to the City Council recommended removed and stored on city property pending a rearrangement of City Square.

The Planning Board did not make any recommendation as to the final disposition of the fountain, which was erected some years ago through the generosity of the citizens but which owing to the rules of the cattle commission has fallen into disuse.

The committee has an idea for the final disposition of the fountain. The proposition, which seemed to meet with general favor of those present at the meeting, was that the fountain might well be set up in the centre of the pond at Mt. Wollaston cemetery, not for practical use but as an ornament.

In one section of the cemetery there is quite a good sized pond. If the fountain were set up in the centre of the pond some arrangement could be made, the committee believe, to supply it with water so that it might be playing during the day.

GERMAN SAILOR IN COURT TODAY

Max Wietisch, one of the crew of the German steamer Prinz Wilhelm, anchored in Boston Harbor since last fall, was in court this morning, charged with assault and battery on Charles Casna, an Austrian, who conducts a boarding house in the shipyard district.

The defendant was dismissed on payment of $5 board to the complainant and $2.10 costs. His testimony was through an interpreter. Casna and two witnesses said he had a razor in his hand when he struck Casna. The defense maintained it was a hack saw. Max accompanied his testimony with many gestures but smiled pleasantly after the finding. He is employed at the shipyard as a machinist.

ANNUAL RECITAL MUCH ENJOYED

The annual recital of the pupils of John D. Buckingham in Alpha hall Tuesday evening was one of the social events of the season. Included in the audience were some of the best known people of Quincy. The program was a most entertaining one.

Those who participated were the junior and advanced pupils. Miss Doris Sampson, Miss Rita Aronson, Miss Dorothy Hall, Miss Amy Fallon and Miss Dorothy Lavery gave unusual entertainments. The contributions of all the young women were of high class however.

It was the last appearance of Miss Fallon as a pupil of Mr. Buckingham. Her rendition of the Polonaise in E of Liszt was exceptionally brilliant. The composition is one of the most difficult of the classics and in the execution and technique of the player was wonderful.

Many of those who appeared were the recipients of bouquets, handsome large ones of roses and other flowers. The program:

GIRL STEPS OFF CAR BACKWARD

A girl whose name could not be learned owing to her hasty departure from the scene came near meeting with a serious accident in City square this noon. The girl, apparently about 20 years of age, was a passenger on the car from Houghs Neck due in City square at 12.55.

As the car was about to come to a stop in front of Shaw's furniture store the girl got up from her seat and stepped on the running board. Reaching in with her right hand she picked up a bundle and without waiting for the car to come to a stop stepped off backward. She was thrown against the running board but managed to retain her hold of the standards.

Several passengers jumped to her assistance and the conductor gave the emergency stop bell. The passengers kept her from falling to the ground and the only damage was to soil her skirt somewhat. Too confused to thank her preservers the girl walked across the street toward the depot.

MAYOR CONSIDERS STREET ORDERS

Mayor Campbell had placed before him this morning the various orders passed by the City Council Monday evening, which included the nine orders for what is known as street rebuilding, which carried an appropriation of $33,700, and shortly after 10 o'clock he went into executive session with himself to consider the situation. Just what his honor will do with the aforesaid street orders no one knows. He is known however, to feel that some of the orders at least should not be accepted.

ENJOY DAY IN NORTH SCITUATE

Several members of Dorothy Q. lodge of Odd Ladies accepted an invitation from Sister June Cook of North Scituate to spend the day at her home.

The trip was made by train and auto. The members were most cordially received. Some visited the beach while others enjoyed the social hour on the spacious grounds. One of the pleasant features of the occasion was the return of Estella Cummings who had been in California for two years in search of health.

A group picture of the party as they stood around the old well was taken to remind them of the good times they had enjoyed. A bountiful supply of the good things to eat was provided and the party left at a seasonable hour, leaving their best regards to the host and wishing her prosperity and happiness for the future years.

BUILDING BIG HEATING PLANT

Faxon's Stores to Be Supplied By One Boiler House

It is expected that a permit will be issued in a few days for the two blocks of stores which are to be erected on the west side of Hancock street, between the Music Hall block and Kincaide's theatre by Henry M. Faxon.

Mr. Faxon is at present at work erecting a boiler house and coal pocket in the rear of the lot. This building will be one story in height its dimensions being 79 feet by 92 feet. It is to be built of concrete and brick and the estimated cost is $2,500.

In connection with the erection of this boiler house it might be mentioned that the idea of Mr. Faxon is to generate the heat in this building, not only to heat the new block of stores that are to be erected but also to heat all of his buildings further along on the same street, as far as and including the hardware store of William Westland.

The man was asleep on the seat of the wagon when the boys in front of the Kincaide theatre saw him. They ran out, stopped the horse and "hid" him up the street. They then tickled him until he awoke. Good nature gave way to anger and then ——.

Continuing Mr. Vahey is reported as saying "Your votes can neither ratify nor reject the decision which must stand until Oct. 1, 1916. "I signed the award for your benefit. If I thought it was to your disadvantage I would have dissented. I did not choose to throw away a real benefit by dissenting."

FORE RIVER CAPTURES ANOTHER BIG CONTRACT

To Build Another Tank Steamer For Cuban Distilling Co.

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, which is apparently keeping the promise of the officials that it would be the busiest plant of its kind in the country, announced this morning that the Cuban Distilling Co. had awarded it a contract for another tank steamer, the second from that company within several months.

It is also announced that three more of the submarines built for the British government will be launched within the next ten days.

The ship will be a duplicate of the one now under construction. She will be 389 feet long, 54 ft. 6 in. beam and have a depth of 32 ft. 6 in. She will have a displacement of about 9000 tons. She will be built to carry molasses and will have a cargo capacity of 2,500,000 gallons.

Workmen are rushing the ship under construction for the distilling company and no time will be lost in getting the new boat under way. The one now being built will be christened "Cubadist." The name is the first word in the company title and the second syllable is the first syllable of the second word.

With the launching of the three underwater craft for the British government, only six of the ten constructed will remain on the ways. The first was launched June 12 and Mrs. Joseph W. Powell, wife of the president of the company, was the sponsor. The sponsors of the three to be next sent over will be announced soon.

The submarines are of the H type. The H-15 will be sent down the ways June 26, the H-18 on June 30 and the H-12 on July 3.

About 4500 men are at present employed at the yard. Their work is divided between the construction of the torpedo boats, the dreadnought "Nevada" and sumbarines for the United States, a tank steamer, foreign craft, and the big freighter for the Edgar F. Luckendach Co. of New York, which will have a cargo capacity of 10,000 tons, the contract for which was awarded two weeks ago. The present force will be kept busy for many months.

LOCAL ITALIANS LEAVE FOR EUROPEAN WAR

Quincy's Contribution to Italian Army is Nearly 100

Italian reservists left Quincy at seven o'clock this morning for Boston where they joined several hundred others who are on their way to the old country to fight in its war with Austria. The leave taking of the men, all of whom were less than 25 years of age, was most affecting.

The mother of one of the boys, who lives on Quincy avenue, near the Central Fire station, was deeply affected by the departure of her son. As the boy turned and waved to her for the last time in many months, and perhaps never again, she gave one shriek and fell into the arms of those nearby.

Just how many have left Quincy the past few weeks is hard to say although local Italians believe the total reaches two score. This would bring the number contributed from this city to nearly 100, 73 having left during the winter, when war first appeared on the horizon.

THOSE STREET ORDERS

"Streets where thousands of dollars have been expended have been going to ruin. Should we not, therefore, see to it that the vast amount of money already expended on our thoroughfares be protected before appropriations are made for new roads. Our main trunk lines should have constant attention and be kept in the best possible condition, and thus prevent the diverting of traffic to the minor residence streets."

The above extract from the inaugural address of Mayor Campbell last January surely is sound sense and good business. It has a bearing upon matters discussed by the City Council at Monday's meeting. It indicates the probable action of Mayor Campbell upon the street rebuilding orders passed at the session, if in his opinion the streets are important thoroughfares. However, it seems hardly good policy to let any accepted streets go to ruin because the appropriation which should go to them goes to new streets.

The question of whether the rebuilding should come under the head of current expenses or permanent improvements is the question upon which the Council split. Failure to appropriate the money needed for rebuilding for the time being has nullified the effect of the rebuilding orders.

If it is wise to rebuild it follows naturally that it is wise to appropriate the amount required. The rebuilding, if desirable, should not be blocked by a dispute over the method of raising the money, which, after all, is not vital. On the whole it seems as if the appropriation should be paid for in the future.

Up to the year 1913, when the legislature passed what is known as the act relative to municipal indebtedness cities could not issue bonds for current expenses but under this act it was provided that cities may borrow for work such as is provided for in the orders in question, that is tar macadam, to be built according to specifications approved by the Massachusetts Highway Commission.

If the matter under consideration was street rebuilding as it used to be understood, that is the placing of a few loads of gravel, etc. on the streets and then running the steam roller over them, a work which at best would last but a short time, it would be strictly, a current expense. In this case, however, the streets built of tar macadam, are in the nature of permanent improvements and should last from five to ten years. It would seem fair, therefore, that people who are to receive the benefit of the work during the next five or ten years should help pay for it.

TEACHERS' PENSIONS.

It is perhaps not generally realized how much is now being done to provide for the old age of teachers. The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching made its annual report the past week, showing nearly $700,000 paid for pensions for college professors. But this is only one phase of the movement. Twelve states now have a general public school teachers' pension law, and 14 have one applicable to the larger towns and cities.

The effect of this idea, new in the United States, is becoming far-reaching, though it may not draw a great many young people into the profession. To girls at the graduation age, the term of service required for a pension looks long, and matrimony looms large.

But after a young woman has been teaching for four or five years, she begins to find the sharp limitations of her employment, looked at from the business point of view. With the growing independence of the sex, there are a great many girls today who are not thinking seriously of marriage. Their first aim is a dependable life-work. A long career as a teacher at low pay and with many expenses looks less and less attractive as the years go by. There is no chance to secure a reserve for old age.

Hence many of them find their way into other employments. They find more attractive opportunities in business ventures of their own, as private secretaries, etc., and some are going into farming.

Realizing the growing scarcity of good teachers, and to hold in their positions many young women who otherwise would quit for more highly rewarded fields, the teachers' pension movement has grown rapidly. It must tend to concentrate good teachers in the larger cities and in states that provide this highly desirable incentive. Small places and states without a pension system find that their schools are considered too much as a place to "try it on the dog." The more gifted girls are apt to work there only until they reach a place where the teacher's service is more highly valued.

Now that the City Council has passed the order providing for a granolithic sidewalk on Hancock and Washington streets about the First Church grounds, the church people will complete their plans for the improvement of the grounds. These improvements include the building of a granolithic walk through the church yard from Hancock to Washington streets, the closing of the paths running north and south, also the path running east and west on the south side of the church. It is also planned to remove some of the trees which have outlived their usefulness and to regrade the entire lot. When the improvements contemplated are completed it will make a beauty spot of the First Church and grounds.

In connection with the coming Fourth of July celebration in Ward 2, wouldn't it be appropriate to dedicate a marker on the "exact geographical centre" of the ward so positively emphasized during the debates on the new school house site in that section? Or, would it be out of place to suggest to Chairman Flynn of the athletic committee to hold some of the sports on the proposed school house site? By this means many people of that section would get to learn where the site is.

Automobile racing will become a more generally popular sport if they all are as successful as was the recently completed Indianapolis one. The winner went 500 miles at an average of 89.04 a mile and the second was only four minutes behind, yet no one in the race was injured. This is the first time in the five years the races have been held there that this has been true.

A DRINK SYMPOSIUM.

Now that the liquor question is assuming such political prominence, the following opinions concerning "drink" are not without significance:

President Taft: "To the man who is actively engaged in responsible work, who must have at his command the best that is in him at its best, I would with all the emphasis that I possess advise and urge to leave drink alone, absolutely.... I do not drink."

President Emeritus Eliot: "The alcoholism of the white race must be overcome, or that vice with the licentiousness that it provokes will overcome the race."

Lloyd-George: "No reform, political or social will prevail in this country (England) unless you precede it with temperance reform."

John Mitchell: "The progress of the nation depends more upon the solution of the liquor problem than upon the disposition of any other question confronting the people of our country."

Connie Mack: "Alcoholism is practically eliminated from baseball." Elsewhere he says: "Alcohol slows a man down. I don't bother with younsters that drink."

Booker T. Washington: "Prohibition has attacked the evil at its source, and the results which the enforcement of this law brought about serve to indicate to what extent evils...can be modified if proper measures are taken and these measures are backed up by the will of the people."—The Christian Register.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Now that the Birth of A Nation has somewhat subsided and a calmer and more unprejudiced view can be taken of the situation, the net result of the whole excessive and excited protest seems to be valuable and almost unlimited advertising for the production, and a consequent swelling of the purses of the producers. And besides, after many competent judges and unprejudiced spectators have seen the films, the evidence seems to indicate that the protestants have protested too much and unwisely. Many of the films are commonplace and certainly not worth the price of the tickets, which price thousands of patrons have paid entirely because of the free and prolific advertising the crusade against the production has given it. Many zealous reformers and highminded citizens appear not yet to have learned that ignoring an undesirable thing before the public is a more effective way of killing it than advertising it by indiscriminate and intemperate protestations.—Jamaica Plain News.

MACHINE GUN COMPANY PLANS

Will Join Mobilization of Regiment

The Machine Gun Co. at its armory Tuesday evening made preparations to join the 6th Regt., M. V. M., to which it is attached, during the mobilization of the regiment at Lowell on July 2, 3 and 4th. The company will leave Quincy Saturday and will pitch a bivouac camp at Tewkesbury. Sunday morning it will go to the armory at Lowell where it will spend the night and on Monday it will appear in the military and civic parade.

All of the equipment will be shipped ahead and the new kitchen, received this week, will be used for the first time. The equipment consists of a field range, of sheet metal, made so that all its parts fit into one another so that when packed it is no larger than a good sized trunk. The kitchen weighs 265 pounds and is of the most approved type.

The new infantry rifles issued by the government have been issued to the company. They are of 30 calibre and are the latest model. Practically everything to be issued the company has now been received from the pack equipment for the mounted detachment to the arms to be carried by the men, tents etc.

During the manoeuvers the 6th Regt. and 8th Regt. will work out a problem which will be in the nature of a sham battle. Col. Warren E. Sweetser of Wollaston will head the 6th Regt.

Prizes are offered for the best appearing military company in the parade. The Lowell companies are excepted from competition and there was a general feeling that the local company would return with one of the honors of the day.

The company will be commanded by Lieut. George M. Downes, who supervised preparations for the journey before the drill. Sergt. Hooper, 30th U. S. Infantry, Plattsburg, the machine gun expert, assigned to instruction of the company, was present.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

AN APPEAL.

Editor of the Ledger:

More men out of work this past winter than ever before has meant many families in need of food, clothing, etc. Consequently the number of people known to the Associated Charities is almost double what it was a year ago.

As one result of the hard winter many sick people have suffered, especially those children who are in danger of becoming tubercular and mothers who are overworked and under nourished. These, especially, benefit by rest and change in the summer time. Already many applications have been made for vacations for sick and delicate children and mothers. Last year $90.00 was contributed by churches, Sunday schools and private individuals for this purpose and used in the following ways:—A convalescent man and his wife were sent to the country for four weeks and he returned able to work. Four mothers and children were given money to pay expenses for a day at Nantasket Beach. A delicate pre-tubercular girl was sent away to relatives in Maine for three months. An overworked mother and children were sent away for two weeks and a crippled tubercular boy was assisted to go away for two months, to the country. These people were all benefitted immensely by the rest and change of air.

This year with increased need we hope for more money to use and will be grateful for any contributions for this purpose. Remember $2.50 provides a day at the beach for a afmily. $30.00 will provide a vacation in the country of two weeks for a tired mother and two children. $10.00 will pay board for a tired working girl or $5.00 will pay board for a child for two weeks (railway fares extra.)

We are grateful for assistance in other years. This year with more demands we hope for more money to work with.

Sincerely yours,
JENNY M. PURCHASE.

TO MAKE WAR ON MEXICO?

Possible Plan of United States to End European Conflict

Washington, June 23.—Armed intervention in Mexico on a large scale by the United States is said by certain well-informed persons here to mean the end of the war in Europe or at least the beginning of peace negotiations. This information comes from a quarter entitled to very high consideration and respect.

It appears to be based upon the assumption that when the United States enters upon an extensive military campaign in Mexico an embargo will be placed on the shipment of arms and munitions of war to Europe.

Since the allies are compelled to rely to so great an extent upon this country for the means with which to prosecute the war, such an embargo is expected to make the allies give a willing ear to peace proposals and especially so if the proposals come from President Wilson, because under such circumstances Wilson would hold the whip hand on the whole warring world.

President Wilson has held that this country would not declare an embargo on the export of arms and war munitions because such declaration would be unneutral. Therefore it would require the advent of a strong necessity at home to justify the embargo.

War for the paciucation of Mexico would supply the required strong necessity. Under the supreme law of eminent domain the United States would take over all contracts for war materials now being filled by American manufacturers on European account.

Those who sponsor this remarkable possibility are of the opinion that the fundamentaly ground work already has been laid.

NO STRIKE AT PRESENT

New Haven Clerks and Railroad Managers to Have Peace Parley

New Haven, June 23.—The threatened strike of the 1800 clerks on the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad has been abandoned, temporarily at least, and Clifton Reeves, a federal conciliator, says he is hopeful of arriving at a peaceful solution of the trouble.

Through Reeves' efforts a conference has been arranged for this afternoon at which officers of the road and the clerks' brotherhood will attend. He secured written guarantees from both parties in the dispute of their intention to be present at the meeting and of their acceptance of the principle of mediation.

Reeves also announced that W. W. Hangar, assistant commissioner of mediation of the department of labor, had been named as mediator.

HOME OF SLATON GUARDED BY TROOPS

Excitement Over Frank Case Appears to Be Subsiding

Atlanta, June 23.—State troops continue to guard the suburban home of Governor Slaton, but quiet prevailed there and in the city after the demonstrations by the people most bitterly opposed to the commutation of Leo M. Frank's death sentence.

State and city officials say they anticipate no further trouble, but as a precautionary measure, additional militiamen are held under arms at an armory and extra policemen are available.

"The crowd which visited my home was not composed of the best people of Atlanta," declared the governor. "I have received telegrams from hundreds of people in Georgia and throughout the country congratulating me upon my action in this case."

Thirty-four persons who were arrested in connection with the demonstration had hearings in police court. Nominal fines were imposed in eleven of the cases, eight were dismissed because of inability of the officers to identify the accused, and the other cases were continued.

The case has come to be known throughout the kingdom as "the brides in bath" case. Smith appeared unperturbed. The object of his alleged crime is claimed to have been to secure insurance.

Two Different Effects

The quality of food is very largely determined by the ingredients in the baking powder with which it is made. Cream of tartar baking powders, such as Royal, add only healthful qualities to the food.

The cream of tartar of Royal Baking Powder as used in food has the same wholesome effect on the digestive system as the cream of tartar in grapes, from which it is derived.

On the other hand, it is in evidence that objectionable mineral residues exist in food made with alum or phosphate baking powders.

There is a clause on baking powder labels which names all the ingredients. Read it and let it guide you.

Burbank of Bridgewater, one of the leaders of the Progressive party, is expected to make it known this week that he will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor. The entrance of the former senator into the Republican field is sought as the one method to reunite the G. O. P. which has been divided since the Roosevelt faction created itself a few years ago.

A feeling is general locally, irregardless of how positive Republican leaders are that he Burbank seek the second place on the state ticket, that he will be a candidate for the Republican nomination to congress from the 14th district, now represented by Richard Olney, 2nd, of Dedham, a Democrat.

LIVELY CONTEST FOR PRESIDENT

Squantum Improvement Association Holds Meeting

James H. Sumner was elected president of the Squantum Improvement association at the annual meeting in Richards Memorial hall, Tuesday night There was a lively contest for the honor between Mr. Sumner and James H. Foster, former vice president and the retiring secretary.

With 38 members voting the first ballot was Sumner 18; Foster 18, John R. Nelson, 1; blank, 1. A second ballot was taken with the following result—number voting 40; Sumner, 21; Foster, 17; blanks two.

The other officers were elected without contest, vice president, Roger Mason; secretary, William Whitley; treasurer, Charles Bostwick; executive committee, John R. Nelson, Herbert A. Smith and William C. Spargo.

Councilman John R. Nelson, the retiring president, spoke of the work of the association during the past year and said that although his ambitions had not been fully realized he hoped the association had accomplished its share of work during his administration.

The newly elected officers were escorted to the chair amid applause.

There was a lively discussion of the mosquito question. Mr. Foster said that the City of Quincy had done some work in spraying oil in the marshes along the boulevard.

James H. Hagan declared that he had it on good authority that 15 minutes of actual work of spraying had been done. He said that the mosquitoes were very bothersome and that it was up to the improvement association to get busy on its own accord if the work was not properly done by the City officers. He said that the association collected money annually at its minstrel show to spend on mosquito extermination and that there had been some complaint that this money was not being used for this purpose.

Mr. Hagan declared that there was something wrong somewhere as in previous years when the association had spent money to get rid of mosquitoes the result had been very apparent.

Mr. Sumner said he believed the association should co-operate with the City of Quincy in the extermination work. He said he did not believe the the city's officers knew just where the oil should be sprayed and suggested that a member of the local mosquito committee accompany the city's workmen and show them the breeding places of mosquitoes. He believed the city men did their work as well as they knew how under the circumstances.

William N. Kenyon said he had it from a city employee that three barrels of oil had been used in spraying about Squantum. He said it was apparent that a large part of the marsh land had been sprayed as the grass had turned yellow. He said this was caused by the use of oil. He said he believed the city workmen had done their best with their knowledge of local conditions but favored the idea of a local man accompanying the city's men on their next trip. He said that according to the tides, the next spraying should be done about July 2d.

Mr. Nelson said he believed the city's workmen had done their work well and that they would do better work next time if accompanied by a local man.

Treasurer Charles Bostwick reported a balance of $1.64 in the treasury. As chairman of the minstrel show committee he said the money for advertising and tickets had not been turned in and that a report could not be made until the next meeting.

Chairman Kenyon of the Fourth of July committee reported progress and said that the following program for the day had been agreed upon:—

7.30 A. M. Flag raising with presentation of a flag to every child.

8 A. M. Parade. Prizes for best features.

9.30 A. M. Baseball game between the Squantum Boy's club and an Atlantic team.

2.30 P. M. Sports on Calahan's oval for men, women and children. Ice cream will be served to the children.

8 P. M. Vaudeville show by professional talent.

Frank Anderson, chairman of the whist committee reported a balance of $1.75 as the result of a series of five whist parties.

A letter was read from Mr. and Mrs. George Hersey expressing their thanks for a floral piece sent by the Squantum Improvement association at the burial of their son, George Hersey, Jr. A rising vote of expression of sympathy for the bereaved family was taken.

The tellers to count the ballots at election were—James H. Hagan, Thomas Currie and C. S. Purcell.

President Sumner made a brief speech thinking the members for the honor conferred upon him and promising to do his best for the success of the association for the coming year.

It was voted that the secretary write a letter to Congressman Olney asking for a year-round delivery of mail in Squantum.

They use the regulation bat and ball and circle the bases like regular leaguers.

TEUTON ALLIES TAKE LEMBERG

Galician Capital Is Abandoned by Russian Troops

HELD FORTRESS TEN MONTHS

Spiked Guns They Cannot Carry Away and Destroy Stores and Ammunition, Leaving Stripped and Deserted City—Arras Struggle Assumes Proportions Which May Decide Fate of France—Italians Lose Heavily, According to Berlin Report—Ground Lost by British In Dardanelles Regained by Scots

London, June 23.—Lemberg has fallen, according to authentic reports reaching here from Berlin and Petrograd.

So far as tangible war material was concerned, the victory was a barren one for the Austro-German armies, as the Russians, during the exodus they had been making from the city, had spiked all the guns they could not carry away, had destroyed immense quantities of stores and ammunition and had transported eastward all that could be possibly taken with them.

When the Teutons occupied the city they found but a remnant of the civil population and not a trace of the military occupants. As in the case of Przemysl, the Russians had had time enough to leave a stripped and deserted city for their foes to gloat over.

Lemberg had been in possession of the Russians nearly ten months, having been occupied by them on Sept. 3, one month after the opening of the war. During that time it had been organized as a Russian city and the government formally constituted after the rules of the czar's empire.

There is evidence from all sides that the city was to fall again into the hands of the Teutons within a few hours. The forlorn positions, held by a fragment of the retreating Russians, were under attack simultaneously by five great Austro-German armies under the leadership of Generals Mackensen, von Linsingen, Wovrach, Boeh-Ermolli and von Pflanzer.

The advance guard of Mackensen's army, which was operating under the eyes of the kaiser, reached the outskirts of the city early Tuesday afternoon, and found a scant curtain of Russians to oppose them.

The main body of Russians who had occupied the place were removed over the railroad which runs to Brody, as well as the munitions, heaviest artillery, hospital and ambulance corps. Only a rear guard was left to oppose the great mass of men and guns descending like an avalanche from three sides.

Desperate Battle Around Arras

In the Vosges the Germans have retired to the east bank of the Fecht, according to their own admission, but they assert that all French attacks have been repulsed.

The fighting around Arras continues to be desperate and sanguinary, the Germans counter-attacking to offset the recent French gains.

A wireless dispatch from Berlin says: "Neutral reports declare that the battle raging near Arras may decide the fate of northern France. The French are very strong, but the Germans are continually receiving reinforcements. The losses on both sides are fearful."

The Overseas News Agency gave out the following:

"Reports from Dutch sources state that the French losses are fearful. The hospitals at Amiens and Abbeville are overcrowded. The constant arrival of trains wth wounded adds to the confusion, and it is impossible o give the usual care to the wounded.

"Soldiers write that from Arras to Souchez (about eight miles), the field is covered with corpses and that the odor is unbearable."

Italian Charges Repulsed

Berlin reports that dispatches from the Italian front report serious reverses experienced by the Italians during the last four days in their attempts to storm the Austro-Hungarian line along the Isonzo river, a few miles from the Italian frontier.

The attacks, the reports say, were preceded by three days of terrific artillery bombardment. The Italians then, in thick lines of skirmishes, one behind another, charged repeatedly up the heights, the summits of which were held by the Austrians, only to be mowed down by rifle and machine gun fire.

The attacks were repeated six times in two days and each time are declared to have been repulsed, with heavy losses. The attackers left large numbers of dead between the lines and many wounded could be seen making their way painfully down the rocky and precipitous slopes.

Brilliant Work of Scots

An official bulletin issued by the British war ministry tells of a hard-fought battle at the Dardanelles, in which the Fifth Royal Scots covered themselves with glory and snatched victory out of the jaws of defeat, after other British troops had been mercilessly pummelled.

The location of the battle is not given, but was doubtless at the lower end of the Gallipoli peninsula, where the opposing forces have been facing one another for weeks. The Turks opened hostilities by hurling into the British lines hundreds of bombs, which, according to prisoners, were expected to demoralize the entrenched allies.

The Ottoman forces then attempted an infantry drive, and succeeded in gaining an ugly salient, from which all attempts to dislodge them were at first futile. A brigade of the expeditionary troops was sent against the Turks only to be rolled back with heavy losses.

The Fifth Royal Scots were then ordered forward and, with a company of Worcester troops, beat back the Turks and regained the lost salient.

The Turks suffered frightfully in the action, it being estimated that they left 1000 dead on the field.

GERMANY IS CONCILIATORY

Paper Printing Article Hostile to United States Is Suspended

The German authorities informed the administration of the Berlin Tages Zeitung that it would have to suspend publication for an indefinite period of time on account of the recent article published by this paper on the subject of German-American relations, from the pen of Count von Reventlow.

The action of the German authorities is regarded in Berlin is an indication that the government is weary of seeing its relations with America made more strained by journalistic outgiving such as those of Reventlow.

The article in question followed the well known lines of that writer, who asserted that international law must be disregarded in the conduct of submarine warfare. He declared that these laws were made before submarines were invented.

The government's prompt action in suspending The Tages Zeitung is but one of many indications that responsible statesmen are eagerly desirous of finding a common ground for an understanding with America.

$600,000 AN HOUR

What War Is Likely to Cost France Alone In the Near Future

The total amount of credits voted since the beginning of the war exceeds $3,123,000,000, according to a statement by Albert Metin in the general budget reported to the French chamber of deputies.

The provisional credit for the third three months of the present year, it is estimated, will be $1,188,000,000. Of this amount the budget committee has requested some reduction as to civil employes. In adding certain expenses and taking care of increases in the soldiers' pensions Metin says that France's war budget can be estimated at about $400,000,000 per month.

If the war continues, Metin adds, the time is not far off when the country will spend $600,000 an hour, or $15,000 a minute.

INSPECT PAVINGS.

Mayor Campbell and Commissioner Brown were on a tour Tuesday inspecting streets in and about Boston that have recently been paved with what is known as Bithulithic paving. This paving is a manufactured block and is composed of small stones and asphalt compressed. It has a slightly pebbled surface and is said to be excellent for street work.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

RECEPTION TO GRIDLEY BRYANT

Cup Presented to Baseball Heroes

"Let us cheer for the Gridley's
The team that has ust won
Let us cheer for the Gridley Bryant
The first and only one.
Other schools there may be
Other ball teams, too
Let us cheer, cheer, cheer for the Gridley Bryant
And our teachers too."
(To the tune of Tipperary.)

Echoing such sentiments in recognition of the Gridley Bryant base ball team which won the grammar school championship, the teachers, fans and men connected with the educational system of the city gathered in the school Tuesday afternoon to witness the presentation of the trophy of the season—a handsome silver loving cup, and to tender a reception to the heores of 14 hard battles who brought home the honors to West Quincy for the third time in six years and the first time to the further end of the district.

The program opened at four o'clock, after the arrival of Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director of the schools and sponsor of organized school athletics, H. W. French of the faculty of Quincy High school and Alexander Robertson of the Y. M. C. A., umpires of the season.

Mr. Thompson, also of the High school faculty and an umpire, was unable to be present.

Just as Miss Margaret Sweeney, assistant principal of the school, was about to start the exercises it was discovered that Michael Crowley, pitcher of the team and the man of the hour, was among the missing. He was discovered some distance from the building, earnestly discussing the latest move of the Braves with other boys.

When reminded that he was late, he blushed, stood first on one foot and then on the other and for the first time it was realized that the boy who had thrilled hundreds of grammar school fans by his coolness as he faced a batsman in a trying situation, was too modest to attend of his own accord. He ambled into the room only after considerable persuasion and stood by his "onesies" in a corner. The other boys sat in a semi-circle.

Captain Orienta Carella, the diminutive catcher, received the cup from Dr Smith and as cheers rent the corridors he set it on a flower banked table where it was generally admired. The cup was donated by the Park Department and is 14 inches from the base to the crown of the lip forming the upper edge. It bears no inscription as yet but within a few days it will be properly marked and set in the case prepared for it.

Andrew Johnson, principal of the school and coach of the team came in for his share of congratulation. A round of games—a peanut race with spoons as the carriers, the donkey trick and a few others were indulged in by those present. Messrs. Smith, French and Robertson, one of the teams in the race were defeated by over a lap.

The parody on Tipperary was then sung by the gathering and the team was cheered. Miss Augusta Dell, one of the teachers, read all interesting poem a takeoff "Casey at the bat." in honor of Crowley and refreshments were served by Miss Sweeney. They consisted of ice cream and cake.

CROWLEY AT THE BAT.

(Apologies to "Casey at the Bat.")

It looked extremely rocky,
For the Gridley team that day,
The score stood one to one,
With one inning left to play.
So when Gargan died at second,
And Hagerty did the same,
A pallor wreathed the features
Of the patrons of the game.

A straggling few got up to go,
Leaving there the rest,
With that hope which springs eternal
Within the human breast;
For they thought, "If only Crowley
Could get a whack at that."
They'd put up even money, now
With Crowley at the bat.

But O'Neil preceded Crowley,
And likewise did Amet,
The former was a fizzle,
The latter, a fret;
So on the stricken multitude,
a death-like silence sat,
For there seemed but little chance
Of Crowley getting to the Bat.

But O'Neil let drive a "single"
To the wonderment of all,
And the underated Amet
"Tore the cover off the ball."
And when the dust had lifted
And they saw what had occurred,
There was Amet safe at second,
And O'Neil a-hugging third.

Then from the gladdened children
Went yells that rent the air,
They rumbled o'er the quarry tops,
They rattled in Montclair;
They echoed back to Wollaston,
And rebounded on from that.
For Crowley! mighty Crowley
Was advancing to the Bat.

There was ease in Crowley's manner
As he stepped into his place,
There was pride in Crowley's bearing
And a smile on Crowley's face;
And when responding to the cheers,
He lightly tipped his hat,
For no one from Ward Four could doubt,
'Twas Crowley at the bat.

Two thousand eyes were on him
As he rubbed his hands with dirt,
Two thousand tongues applauded
When he wiped them on his shirt;
Then when the writhing pitcher
Ground the ball into his hip,
Defiance glared in Crowley's eye
A sneer curled Crowley's lip.

And now the leather covered sphere,
Came hurling through the air,
And Crowley stood a-watching-it
In haugthy grandeur there;
Close by the sturdy batsmen
The ball unheeded sped
"That ain't my style," said Crowley,
"Strike one," the umpire said.

From the benches black with children,
There went up a muffled roar,
Like the beating of storm waves
On the near by Adams shore.
"Kill him, kill the umpire,"
Shouted some one from the stand,
And perhaps they might have killed him
Had not Crowley raised his hand.

With a smile of Christian charity,
Great Crowley's visage shone.
He stilled the rising tumult
He bade the game go on
He signaled to the pitcher
And once more the the spheroid flew
But Crowley stilled ignored it
And ump French cried, "Strike two."

"Fraud," cried the maddened hundreds,
And the echo answered, "Fraud."
But one scornful look from Crowley,
And the audience was awed
They saw his face grow stern and cold,
They saw his muscles strain,
But they knew that Crowley wouldn't
Let the ball go by again.

The sneer is gone from Crowley's face,
His teeth are clenched in hate,
He pounds with cruel vengence
His bat upon the plate;
And now the pitcher holds the ball,
And now he lets it go,
And now the air is shattered
By the force of Crowley's blow.

Today in this honored district,
The sun is shining bright,
'Tis here our friends are loyal,
And here our hearts are light—
And here our teachers cheer us
And here the children shout
For there's joy in the Gridley Bryant
For Crowley was not struck out.

THEORY OF MURDER DISPELLED BY NOTE

Woman Who Drowned Self Was Tired of Living

Waltham, Mass., June 23.—Miss Ida Lehtimaki, a weaver on $8 a week, was "tired of living," "tired of hard work," and she decided she was "through with life's struggle." So she found peace and rest in the Charles river.

She wore a diamond solitaire on the engagement finger. She was a mill girl, but she read Tolstoi. Despite her ring and her romance, and her Tolstoi, the girl gave up.

This is the explanation, told in a neatly written note, of the body found floating in the Charles. Bruises on the face seemed suspicious and investigation was begun. Then the body was identified. This led to a search of the woman's room, where the note was found.

DENIES DOUBLE MURDER

Alleged Slayer of Priest and Housekeeper Testifies For Himself

Hartford, June 23.—Bernard Montvid, charged wth murdering Rev. Joseph Zebris, a Lithuanian priest, and his housekeeper, Miss Eva Gilmanatis, at New Britain Feb. 8, went on the witness stand in the superior court in his own behalf and denied that he had anything to do with their deaths.

Peter Krakas, who the state alleges was Montvid's companion, was recently hanged in Wilmington, Del., for a murder committed there.

Two Men Sentenced to Death

Litchfield, Conn., June 23.—Isaac N. Wiliams and Harry E. Roe were sentenced here to be hanged Dec. 8 next, for the murder of Hubert B. Coe at Barkhamsted.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Secretary McAdoo of the treasury has purchased a summer home at Vinalhaven, Me.

Two firemen were killed and more than a dozen injured when chemicals exploded in oilcloth works at Philadelphia.

The Massachusetts Real Estate exchange selected John J. Martin as its representative in the Boston budget commission.

Despondent over business reverses, James Plow of Gloucester, Mass., 55, manufacturer of spruce beer, committed suicide by inhaling gas.

Louis J. Royce, 65, of Springfield, Mass., committed suicide by shooting. He had been despondent.

SPORTING COMMENT

Base ball managers have probably wondered why box scores of some games have not appeared. It is due to their neglect in completing a return. Box scores should have a column of base hits, putouts, assists and errors. An "at bat" column is not necessary but will be used if filled out. Within the past month teams have forfeited an opportunity of getting their team properly before the public by only using two columns instead of four. It is of course undesirable to print it that way.

Others have been satisfied with simply filling in the columns and forgetting the pitchers and base running records, always below the detailed performance. Blanks in any quantity will be furnished at this office but unless they are properly completed we will not use them. Junior teams have been the losers in most cases although one semi-pro manager is on the record.

News Value of Scores.

The public is interested only in good base ball. A score by innings is perfectly satisfactory when the score is not all out of proportion to a good game. Therefore unless the game is within reason don't send in box scores. Make it the score by innings. Jot a note about a feature or how the game was won and add the batteries. Runs, hits and errors should be the total.

When To File Copy.

Sports of all descriptions should be in the office early. This news is the first to receive attention in the composing room. Because of its complications it should be legible and neat. There should be 27 putouts in a full game, unless one team doesn't play its last inning, when there should be 24. In any event three putouts must be accounted for each inning.

Contributed Comment.

Such must be signed, otherwise the paper will not publish it. It is unfair to slam behind a persons back. A person having convictions strong enough to submit a criticism should be courageous enough to see his name tacked on to it. No paper can be responsible for echoing a sentiment they do not feel and this is often the case at least until the merits of both sides are known.

A Word To Bowlers.

Accuracy in tabulation is a strict necessity. It takes time to correct scores but it takes only a second to verify them. The Ledger the past season has made an effort to give only correct scores, as submitted by alley clerks.

Official scorers have squelched many arguments by backing up their records with our published summaries. We acknowledge the compliment and explain it by saying we aim to be correct when it is possible.

That Cross Country Run.

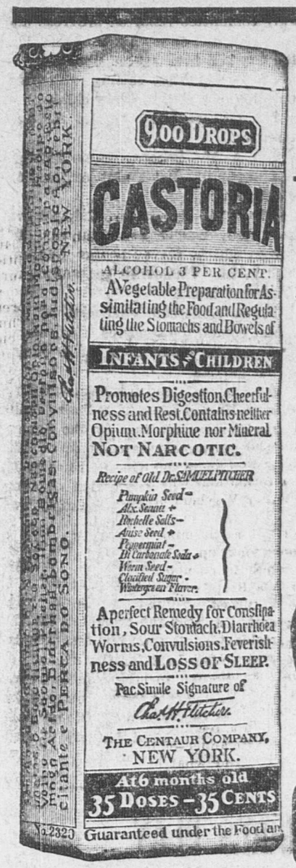

We haven't heard of any of the Board of Trade committee inquiring among the younger fellows about the cross country run referred to them. We of course know they are quietly looking into the matter. We expect to see a real report of their finding in the published report of the next meet. "J. E. B."

A Query About Fall.

Does Andrew Johnson, principal of the Gridley Bryant and Montclair schools know as much about soccer as he does about base ball? Thomas B. Pollard of the Washington school, who has earned the title of "expert" through the showing of his teams, should cock his weather eye. In any event he will not let his school's colors be lowered without a struggle.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

The beat of hoofs upon the bridge drew his attention to the cavalcade, which the keen eyes of the girl had detected as it came over the ridge to the east. The party consisted of two men and two women and three pack horses completely outfitted for the trail.

One of the women, spurring her horse to the front, rode serenely up to where Wayland stood and called out: "Good morning! Are you the ranger?"

"No; I'm only the guard. The ranger has gone down the trail."

He perceived at once that the speaker was an alien like himself, for she wore tan colored riding boots, a divided skirt of expensive cloth and a jaunty, wide rimmed sombrero. She looked indeed precisely like the heroine of the prevalent western drama. Her sleeves, rolled to the elbow, disclosed shapely brown arms, and her neck, bare to her bosom, was equally sun smit, but she was so round cheeked, so childishly charming, that the most critical observer could find no fault with her makeup.

One of the men rode up. "Hello, Norcross. What are you doing over here?"

The youth smiled blandly. "Good morning, Mr. Belden. I'm serving my apprenticeship. I'm in the service now."

"The mischief you are!" exclaimed the other. "Where's Tony?"

"Gone for his mail. He'll return soon. What are you doing over here, may I ask?"

"I'm here as guide to Mr. Moore, Mr. Moore, this is Norcross, one of McFarlane's men. Mr. Moore is connected with the tie camp operations of the railway."

Moore was a tall, thin man with a gray beard and keen blue eyes. "Where's McFarlane? We were to meet him here. Didn't he come over with you?"

"We started together, but the horses got away, and he was obliged to go back after them. He also is likely to turn up soon."

"I am frightfully hungry," interrupted the girl. "Can't you hand me out a hunk of bread and meat? We've been riding since daylight."

Berrie suddenly appeared at the door. "Sure thing," she called out. "Slide down and come in."

Moore removed his hat and bowed. "Good morning, Miss McFarlane. I didn't know you were here. You know my daughter Siona?"

Berrie nodded coldly. "I've met her." He indicated the other woman. "And Mrs. Belden, of course, you know."

Mrs. Belden, the fourth member of the party, a middle aged, rather flabby person, just being eased down from her horse, turned on Berrie with a battery of questions. "Good Lord! Berrie McFarlane, what are you doing over in this forsaken hole? Where's your dad? And where is Tony? If Cliff had known you was over here he'd have come too."

Berrie retained her self possession. "Come in and get some coffee, and we'll straighten things out."

Apparently Mrs. Belden did not know that Cliff and Berrie had quarreled, for she treated the girl with maternal familiarity. She was a good natured, well intentioned old sloven, but a most renowned tattler, and the girl feared her more than she feared any other woman in the valley. She had always avoided her, but she showed nothing of this dislike at the moment.

Wayland drew the younger woman's attention by saying, "It's plain that you, like myself, do not belong to these parts, Miss Moore."

"What makes you think so?" she brightly queried.

"Your costume is too appropriate. Haven't you noticed that the women who live out here carefully avoid convenient and artistic dress? Now, your outfit is precisely what they should wear and don't."

This amused her. "I know, but they all say they have to wear out their Sunday go to meeting clothes, whereas I can 'rig out proper.' I'm glad you like my 'rig.'"

At the moment he was bent on drawing the girl's attention from Berrie, but as she went on he came to like her. She said: "No, I don't belong here, but I come out every year during vacation with my father. I love this country. It's so big and wide and wild. Father has built a little bungalow down at the lower mill, and we enjoy every day of our stay."

"You're a Smith girl," he abruptly asserted.

"What makes you think so?"

"Oh, there's something about you Smith girls that gives you dead away."

"Gives us away? I like that!"

"My phrase was unfortunate. I like Smith girls," he hastened to say.

In five minutes they were on the friendliest terms—talking of mutual acquaintances—a fact which both puzzled and hurt Berea. Their laughter angered her, and whenever she glanced at them and detected Siona looking into Wayland's face with coquettish simper she was embittered. She was glad when Moore came in and interrupted the dialogue.

Norcross did not relax, though he considered the dangers of cross examination almost entirely passed. In this he was mistaken, for no sooner was the keen edge of Mrs. Belden's hunger dulled than her curiosity sharpened.

"Where did you say the supervisor was?" she repeated.

"The horses got away, and he had to go back after them," again responded Berrie, who found the scrutiny of the other girl deeply disconcerting.

"When do you expect him back?"

"Any minute now," she replied, and in this she was not deceiving them, although she did not intend to volunteer any information which might embarrass either Wayland or herself.

Norcross tried to create a diversion. "Isn't this a charming valley?"

Siona took up the cue. "Isn't it? It's romantic enough to be the backdrop in a Bret Harte play. I love it."

Moore turned to Wayland. "I know a Norcross, a Michigan lumberman, vice president of the association. Is he by any chance a relative?"

"Only a father," retorted Wayland, with a smile. "But don't hold me responsible for anything he has done. We seldom agree."

Moore's manner changed abruptly "Indeed! And what is the son of W W. Norcross doing out here in the forest service?"

The change in her father's tone was not lost upon Siona, who ceased her banter and studied the young man with deeper interest, while Mrs. Belden, detecting some restraint in Berrie's tone, renewed her questioning, "Where did you camp last night?"

"Right here."

"I don't see how the horses got away. There's a pasture here, for we rode right through it."

Berrie was aware that each moment of delay in explaining the situation looked like evasion and deepened the significance of her predicament, and yet she could not bring herself to the task of minutely accounting for her time during the last two days.

Belden came to her relief. "Well, well, we'll have to be moving on. We're going into camp at the mouth of the west fork," he said as he rose. "Tell Tony and the supervisor that we want to line out that timber at the earliest possible moment."

Siona, who was now distinctly coquetting with Wayland, held out her hand. "I hope you'll find time to come up and see us. I know we have other mutual friends if we had time to get at them."

His answer was humorous. "I am a soldier. I am on duty. I'm not at all sure that I shall have a moment's leave, but I will call if I can possibly do so."

They started off at last without having learned in detail anything of the intimate relationship into which the supervisor's daughter and young Norcross had been thrown, and Mrs. Belden was still so much in the dark that she called to Berrie: "I'm going to send word to Cliff that you are over here. He'll be crazy to come the minute he finds it out."

"Don't do that!" protested Berrie.

Wayland turned to Berrie. "That would be pleasant," he said smilingly.

But she did not return his smile. On the contrary, she remained very grave. "I wish that old talebearer had kept away. She's going to make trouble for us all. And that girl, isn't she a spectacle? I never could bear her."

"Why, what's wrong with her? She seems a very nice, sprightly person."

"She's a regular play actor. I don't like madeup people. Why does she go around with her sleeves rolled up that way and—and her dress open at the throat?"

"Oh, those are the affectations of the moment. She wants to look tough and boisterous. That's the fad with all the girls just now. It's only a harmless piece of foolishness."

She could not tell him how deeply she resented his ready tone of camaraderie with the other girl, but she was secretly suffering. It hurt her to think that he could forget his aches and be so free and easy with a stranger at a moment's notice. Under the influence of that girl's smile he seemed to have quite forgotten his exhaustion and his pain. It was wonderful how cheerful he had been while she was in sight.

In all this Berrie did him an injustice. He had been keenly conscious, during every moment of the time, not only of his bodily ills, but of Berrie, and he had kept a brave face in order that he might prevent further questioning on the part of a malicious girl. It was his only way of being heroic. Now that the crisis was passed he was quite as much of a wreck as ever.

HOLD LODGE OF SORROW

The Quincy lodge of Elks at its meeting Tuesday evening held a Lodge of Sorrow for two departed members—Robert T. Johnson, who was one of the best known local business men of the city, and George R. Kendrick, who was killed on the steamer Bunker Hill when that ship, en route to New York, was rammed by the steam yacht "Vanitie" in Long Island sound.

Exalted Ruler Edward D. Larkin, assisted by the officers, conducted the ritual. Both men were most popular members.

During the regular business session it was announced that the "Elks Tooth" had been awarded to Ambrose Joyce of West Quincy.

SPORT CLOTHES.

Motor Coats, Sweaters—Golf Skirts And Bathing Suits In Latest Mode.

If ever the world outdoors calls irresistibly, it is on a typical June day, and as women on this side are almost as much addicted to life in the open as their English cousins, no part of the well-balanced outfit is more important that the sport clothes.

MOTOR COATS.

In selecting a motor coat it is well to have in mind the many uses for it in other directions. One can find a whole host of smart coats in this category capable of giving the utmost service, yet pretty enough to top a frilly frock on a cool evening at a resort when a dressier and more dainty wrap would be neither as comfortable or appropriate. Golfine coats with pretty flowered silk linings are among the best garments of this class. The golfine is like corduroy, only finer and more flexible and it comes in rather prettier shades in all the fashionable colors, from Mandarin yellow, and vivid coral tones to dull rich amethyst and olive greens, that appeal to those who like quieter tones. Blues of all shades, and copper browns and grays are all in the running and fashionably worn. These are rivalled by wools with soft velvety surfaces in checks and plain colors which are the ideal selection where a really warm weight is desired, though sweaters are usually donned for this purpose under the lighter weight wraps.

SILK STRIPES FADDISH.

The silk sweater in striped effects is perhaps most favored this season, though solid colors with contrasts in belts, collars, cuffs or vests, come in the greatest possible variety of attractive styles. The mercerized kinds which look exactly like real silk and cost half as much, are extremely popular and copy every wrinkle of the more aristocratic sweaters.

BATHING SUITS.

Following the general trend of fashion bathing suits are more elaborate in cut and coloring than ever before. Apparently no material is too elegant, no trimming too fine to tempt the dancing waves, and make a picture of its pretty wearer. Silks and satins, in plain tones, vivid contrasting stripes, or printed floral effects, are all used for these costumes, and every conceit employed for milady's dry land get-ups, is repeated from scalloped edges, pipings, braids and fancy buttons, to contrasting lacings and Puritan collars in scrim that stands the salt spray reasonably well. Small ruffles in overlapping rows, three on the skirt and two at the edge of the fichu collar trim a taffeta suit in black, purple or navy blue that has wide plaid ribbon girdle while the silk cap worn with this has a bewitching garniture of rubber cherries, that defy sun and wave to do their worst, but always come out fresh and new as do the rubber flowers that mimic almost every known blossom.

BATHING ACCESSORIES.

Bathing suits are matched in variety and attractiveness by the many accessories made to go with them, and which add greatly to their effectiveness. An ill-selected cap, hose that do not match up with the suit, shabby, clumsy shoes, or worst of all, careless grooming that allows unsightly hairs to remain on the arms or face when it is no trouble at all to get rid of them, spoil anyone's appearance. For over sixty years the select few have been using X Bazin depilatory powder, which works perfectly for this purpose and can be had at any well-stocked toilet department.

GOLF AND BEACH DRESSES.

For the extra skirt that fittingly accompanies a tailored shirt topped by a sweater or sport coat, there are practical models to suit any taste, and in these times when the flare has taken all the world by storm it is remarkable how many plain skirts of very modest width are worn by people who can buy whatever they desire. Pleated styles with the pleats either at front and back, or grouped at either side are smart and one sees of course, full circular models in this class, but not as a rule so well carried as the moderate cuts.

The simple, well made type of dress variously known as a Palm Beach or Porch Dress, is coming to be a great favorite with discriminating women who like simplicity combined with style in cut and perfection of finish. These gowns take the place of the smart utility serge which is the standby of almost every Frenchwoman as well as a host of Americans, for between season wear.

Verona Clarke.

New York, June 16, 1915.

FORGOT WHERE SHE WAS.

A party of American school-teachers were touring Italy. They reached Venice late one evening after a delayed train journey from Milan. Noticing the untidy condition of the houses around the station, and the dirty streets, one of the young women shuddered. "Ugh!" she said. "This must be the Italian quarter!"—Pathfinder.

NO WONDER.

"Your voice," said the commanding officer, "is decidedly rasping."

"Yes, sir," said the subordinate, touching his hat. "I have been out roughing it with a file of soldiers all morning."—Chicago Tribune.

JURY IS CHOSEN AT ONE SESSION

Thaw Pleased With Men Who Will Decide His Sanity

WILL HAVE FIFTY WITNESSES

Number of Them Are Alienists Who Will Testify That Prisoner Is Entitled to Freedom—Jerome Among Those Summoned to Give Evidence In Behalf of Prosecution

New York, June 3.—Harry K. Thaw's seventh attempt to gain his freedom since his arrest nine years ago this month for the murder of Stanford White was begun here with the selection of a jury to inquire as to his sanity.

If the jurors decide in his favor and Justice Hendrick, presiding, who has the power to reverse their verdict, accepts it, Thaw will obtain permanent release from the Matteawan insane asylum, where he was incarcerated after being acquitted of murder at his second trial, and from which he escaped in 1913.

The selection of the jury occupied the entire session of the court, but its completion in one day was regarded as rapid progress when compared with the time it took to fill the jury box on the two previous occasions on which Thaw has faced a jury.

Today John B. Stanchfield, his attorney, will outline his case and the taking of testimony will begin. Thaw has about fifty witnesses, including a number of alienists, to prove that he is now sane and entitled to his freedom, and the state also has a large number to testify against him. Among the latter probably will be William T. Jerome, Thaw's prosecutor at the previous trials.

Thaw said after the jury was completed that he was entirely satisfied with it. "They are an intelligent body of men," he said, "and I will have little difficulty in convincing them that I am as sane as they are."

Although Thaw sat at the counsel table, he took small part in picking his jurors. On only one occasion did he overrule the opinion of his counsel and cause the challenge of a talesman.

Crowds thronged the corridors of the courtroom all day seeking admission, but were told that no spectators would be admitted while the selection of the jury was going on.

Lawyer Manton Endeavors to Secure Clemency For Becker

Albany, June 23.—Martin T. Manton, attorney for Charles Becker, pleaded for the life of his client, who has been condemned to die during the week of July 12 for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal..

Neither the governor nor Manton would discuss the details of the conference. The governor said, however, that he would confer with Manton again next week, when it is expected the formal application for executive clemency will be made. The governor also announced that he would see Mrs. Becker, wife of the condemned man, "or anybody else in his interest that may come to Albany."

Manton was said to have left with only slight hope of favorable action by the governor.

PLEADS NOT GUILTY

Perjury Charge Against Stahl In Connection With Lusitania Case

New York, June 23.—Gustav Stahl, the German reservist who was indicted on a charge of perjury by a federal grand jury, entered a plea of not guilty when arraigned in the United States district court here.

The perjury charge is based on an affidavit in which Stahl is alleged to have sworn that he saw four guns on the Lusitania when she left this port on April 30.

Trial of the case was set for July 12, and in default of $10,000 bail, the defendant was remanded to the Tombs prison.

After all, it is quite appropriate that the new church in the Point district should be located at the corner of Pray street.

SPECULATION ON STREET ORDERS

There is some speculation on the part of the members of the City Council as well as among these citizens residing upon the streets which were under discussion Monday night as to what action Mayor Campbell will take on the orders. There were nine of these so-called street rebuilding orders which were passed after one of the liveliest sessions the council has ever held. None of these orders carried a clause providing the money to do the work, this being provided for in a loan order which the Council refused to pass and which is now on the table in the Council calendar.

If the Mayor gives these orders his approval the work contemplated can not be done until money is provided and it looks very doubtful if it will be possible to pass the loan order this year. According to President Whiton of the Council before the loan order in any event can now be passed it will be necessary to suspend Rule 28 and as this requires a three-fourths vote it seems very doubtful, unless a number of the members of the council change their minds, to muster enough votes to suspend the rules, which means that the street rebuilding orders will be little more than dead letters.

There is one ray of hope however among those favorable to the orders and that is that later in the year there may be a change of feeling on the part of the Council, and if not that better luck may be had next year.

If the orders are approved by the Mayor the work contemplated can be done at any time the money is provided. Therefore if the council of 1915 refuses to provide the necessary funds the Council of 1916 may be a little more liberal and pass a loan order.

It will of course be possible for the incoming City Council to introduce an order early in January providing money to do the work, or it may even be possible another year to provide the $33,700 necessary in the annual budget. If this can be done there is no question but what the money will be forthcoming.

The main bone of contention at Monday nights meeting was not so much that the streets did not need rebuilding, but at the way in which the money was to be provided. The ground taken by the opposition headed by Whiton and supported by Councilmen McGrath, Richards, Griffin and Beeman in their arguments was that it was strictly a current expense and as such should be provided for in the budget, and that it was poor financing to bond the city for the work.

On the other hand those that favored the passage of the order claimed that it could not exactly be called a current expense for the reason that the streets thus rebuilt should last from five to ten years and therefore those who would reap the benefit of the work in the next few years should be those who helped pay the bill rather than to place the burden on one year. This was the claim of Councilman Smith who led the thirteen men favorable to the passage of the order and he was supported by the seven members of the street committee to a man, as well by several others who are not members of the street committee but who believe that the residents on these streets are entitled to have the streets put in a passable condition.

The Sachem Campfire girls held their first monthly Council Fire Tuesday afternoon at the home of the guardian Mrs. James Christie of Bromfield street. The pleasant meeting closed with refreshments.

FINE OF $100 IMPOSED UPON AVIATOR JONES

Judge Avery Suspends Sentence in First Case of Kind in State

The first case ever brought in Massachusetts for violation of the laws regulating aircraft was heard in the district court this morning with Harry M. Jones of Providence, the aviator of the machine which plunged into the Squantum hillside last Friday evening, as the defendant.

The complaint charged him with violation of Sect. 1 of the Acts of 663 of 1913 which states an aviator must secure a license. Jones pleaded not guilty but Judge Avery fined him $100 and suspended the sentence until Sept. 30 with the understanding that if no further violation is committed in that time the fine will be remitted.

Jones came to court from the Quincy City Hospital where he has been a patient since the accident. He was accompanied by Joseph Toye of Boston, his manager.

Apparently Jones has not recovered from the effects of his experience. His pale and nervous appearance, together with the piece of court plaster across the point of the nose and a large dressing on a cut behind the right ear, reminded the spectators of the plunge from the air which resulted in the death of two passengers, George H. Hersey of Squantum and William Ely of Providence, and of his own narrow escape.

Acting Chief McKay, who secured the complaint, conducted the prosecution. He told of the accident and Jones sat unmoved when the death of the two young men was mentioned although he was very attentive.

Manager Toye was the first witness. He reviewed a recent attempt of Jones and himself to secure a license to fly. He said Sec. Bieler of the Highway Commission said their applications was the first made since the law was enacted and that the commission had no facilities to issue a license. Toye said he asked immunity of Jones from arrest because of the condition but that the secretary would give no assurance such would be the case.

Witness then said he called at the office of Atty. Gen. Atwill and in his absence went to the office of the State Police where he interviewed a man named Shaw. He said he then saw Mr. Seagrave at the office of the attorney general. There they knew of the existence of the law but said that the legislature had provided no money to employ an expert to carry it out. Toye said he offered to get an expert who would serve for a penny, so services would have been paid for.

The next man seen was Colonel Schier of the Highway Commission. According to Toye he seemed to be interested and said that he never wanted that law passed because it would mean a lot of bother for the commission. He promised to take the matter up before the next meeting of the commission.

Toye then reviewed the flights made by Jones, told of his landing on Boston Common in 1911 and of his trip to New York, over Connecticut, where a law regulating flying has since been passed.

In cross examination by Acting Chief McKay he said that Jones after flying in this state flew back to Providence and hadn't returned until a few months ago.

Judge Avery asked Toye about the duties of an expert and Jones stepped to the stand and said an expert could only pass a man on observation, after watching from the ground how he controlled his machine, and that an aviator in order to qualify would have to fly alone because the expert could not be with him and that therefore the expert could know little about his navigation.

He was asked by the judge if he was employed by anyone and Jones said he worked for himself but that the Boston Blower Works was interested in his flights because he used an engine made by them.

Judge Avery then spoke of the law and intimated that the only way he could see for anyone to get a license was to go to the Supreme Judicial Court for a writ of mandamus to compel the issue of one. Manager Toye said that had also been suggested at the office of the attorney general.

The court in imposing the fine he said the police of the city would make a further investigation and if no more violations were committed the fine would be remitted. Jones was then placed in the care and custody of Francis H. Fahy, probation officer.

It is doubtful, according to his manager, if Jones will attempt to fly for some time since he is badly in need of rest and suffers from the effects of the shock.

WOODWARD INSTITUTE GRADUATION EXERCISES

Thirty One Girls Are Given Their Diplomas

The annual graduation exercises of the class of 1915 of Woodward Institute were held Wednesday and as usual the attendance was limited only by the capacity of the hall. The exercises were of the usual interesting nature. The speaker of the evening was Dr. Franklin Hamilton, chancellor of the American University at Washington, D. C.

The decorations were simple in the extreme. Across the front of the platform there was one bank of green with no contrasting color. With Miss Burgess at the piano the school marched in from the class rooms and took seats set apart for them at the front of the platform. Then followed music by the school under the direction of John D. Buckingham, the selections rendered being "The Maid and the Violet" Madrigal, "A Southern Hush Song," violin solo, "Berceuse from Jocelyn" by Miss Helen Moulton with piano accompaniment, and "Excelsior."

The graduating class, 31 in number, then marched to the platform where they sat during the address.

Dr. Hamilton was introduced by Mr. Rice, principal of the school. Dr. Hamilton spoke for an even half hour.

In opening he said that it was fitting on occasions of this character and of significance to those who are graduating that some one should speak a word in keeping with the meaning of the hour. He then spoke of the drinking of God's cup of celestrial fire and said: "Who partakes of the cup of life and wisdom is eternal." In illustrating this phase he spoke of such personages as Phillips Brooks, Wendell Phillips and Jennie

The speakers of the evening were Emery L. Crane, city clerk; and Willard F. Crocker, captain of the tennis team which defeated all of the best school teams in the state and is in line for the state championship. He mentioned the fact that the only defeat registered against his combination was that given by the alumni team but admitted the boys "wanted another crack at them." He also thanked the association for the support given.

Two presentations were made to the school, a framed picture of the tennis team and a handsomely bound set of the short stories of O. Henry. The presentation was made by Vice President Frank F. Prescott and the acceptance was made by William McMann, high honor pupil of the graduating class, who said he thought the stories would be more interesting than some of the books in the library.

COLLECT BACK TAXES.

The report of the city treasurer and auditor for May issued this week shows that of the total tax levy of $928,512.71 for the year 1914 only $225,865.18 has been collected up to May 1, leaving still uncollected the sum of $702,647.53 although it is over six months since the tax bills were sent out.

It is on account of the small amount of taxes collected that the City Treasurer was forced to go to the City Council and ask for authority to borrow an additional sum of $100,000 on temporary loans in anticipation of taxes.

The original temporary loan order passed by the city council in January authorized the Treasurer to borrow a sum not exceeding $500,000 and this was not passed until after a spirited debate, during which it was argued that it was a larger amount than would be needed. It was expected that this sum would be sufficient, and this would have been true if the taxes had been collected as they should have been.

Quincy has always had the reputation of being one of the most negligent cities in the commonwealth in the collection of its taxes and this seems to be borne out this year. For many years the plan in Quincy has been not to advertise personal and real estate taxes until two years had elapsed, although there is no law which prohibits the tax collector from taking earlier action. To the best of our recollection there has been but one Mayor with backbone enough to take the bull by the horns and make people pay up. That official was Joseph L. Whiton, who served as acting mayor during the last three months of 1914. During this period a determined effort was made to collect back taxes with unusually good results.

The only way for the tax collector to get in these taxes, now long over due, is to go after them as though he meant business. If the parties will not pay up, advertise them.

The demands of the citizens for this improvement or that improvement are many. They howl if they do not get them and yet when it comes to paying their just share of the expenses of the city they hang back and will not pay until forced to do so. It seems as though it was up to the Mayor and collector to get into action in order that the treasurer's and auditor's report for June may show a much larger percent of taxes collected than does the May report.

THE PROFESSION OF HOUSEWIFE.

There seems to be a revival of interest in home economics. Many women's clubs are arranging courses for next fall with lecturers on the subject of home efficiency.

The great majority of women are hard working people, who may not have studied household efficiency scientifically. But they have put an enormous amount of toilsome labor into the practice of the art.

To some others, household cares have been a tedious and boresome task to be shifted over to servants as much as possible.

The efficient and economical running of a home is a business problem that should be no less interesting than the details of running a newspaper, a store, or a factory. Educational institutions, clubs, and other agencies have given too much attention to the world of books and art, too little to this fundamental business problem affecting every family's welfare. The women's clubs are evidently seeing it.

For some purposes it is claimed that Quincy Granite is too hard. This should not apply to the use of granite as missiles in warfare because even civilized (?) nations are accustomed to use implements of war which will prove as effective as possible. They would not consider, for example, using a nice soft block of Westerly lest their enemy when struck imagine that they were being bombarded, after the manner of the ancient Romans, by loaves of bread. It is reported that agents of the British and French governments have been in Barre, Vt., seeking contracts for granite shrapnel. Quincy granite shrapnel would be unequalled and perhaps local dealers will defeat the Barre manufacturers and secure the contracts. In any event, if contracts are awarded for immediate delivery the United States government will be the first government in modern history to have the duty of forbidding the exportation of granite munitions of war from a neutral nation to the combatants.

The merits of the Frank case are not easy to judge at this distance. Whatever they may be it is certain not only that the action of Gov. Slaton was unpopular but also that he must have known his commutation of the sentence would be unpopular. Right or wrong the action which he took was one which called for conscious self sacrifice on his part. It appears likely that he has ruined his chances of further political honors at the hands of the Georgia electorate. May America have more men in public office of this type: men who will do what they believe is right regardless of consequences.

Now the country is to be treated to a rehash of the Thaw filth. The court should confine itself to the question of whether the man is sane or insane, should make a decision which would send him back to Matteawan or, if he is adjudged sane, retire him to private life

---

The report that the Allies have ordered Bulgaria to take arms against the Unspeakable Turk must surely be exaggerated. For have not the Pacificists assured us that if a nation be small and weak enough it can lead a Christian life without ever finding need to go to war?

The broad brimmed straw hat worn by the farmer is the most comfortable kind, which is perhaps the reason why it looks so funny to the city folks.

Some city people still laugh at the poor farmer, but as they tramp along the dusty road they would better look out that the poor farmer does not run them down in his new six cylinder automobile.

DEVIL WANTS LONGER DAY

The churches of the town, for the purpose of holding religious services and stimulating and maintaining the spiritual life of the community, are probably open something like a dozen hours per week. The schools for the purpose of educating our youth and training them mentally, morally and physically, are open for business about twenty-five hours per week. The theatres, seeking to entertain the people and furnish them with a little amusement and color, are open eighteen to twenty hours per week. The ordinary merchant has his place open for business possibly seventy-five hours per week, to meet the requirements of food and rainment for the people. The factories are in operation not more than fifty-eight hours per week to furnish employment and the wherewith by which the people may secure the necessities and a few of the luxuries of life. But the barrooms, if we include the licensed hotels, which cater to little else than the things which make for wrong, evil, sin and discord—in effect the institutions which break down and destroy the good that the church, the school, the factory and even the theatres seek to accomplish,—are open 119 hours per week. Worse than that, the liquor interests are trying to get the Massachusetts legislature to extend the privilege for another hour per day, or until midnight While the Lord's helpers, Education and Society's helpers, and Industry's workers are working toward shorter hours, the Devil seems to be on the job every minute and asking for a longer day for his work—and yet we wonder at the results.—Spencer Leader.

WHERE IS DANIELS?

Secretary Daniels head of the United States navy boasts of the benefits to be derived from service in the navy, and allows no opportunity to pass where it is possible for him to induce American boys to enter the service. The constitution of the United States permits no predjulice on account of race, color or condition to stand in the way of any young man who wishes to enter the navy, and there are colored men in the service. Some of the young men who are in the service forget this provision that protects the black man as well as the white man, and they need to be better instructed. A base ball nine belonging to the crew of the U. S. S. New Jersey, now at the Charlestown navy yard, came down to Lynn to arrange a game with a local team. When the Jackies found that there was a man of African descent on the Lynn nine they refused to play and went back to their ship. Such an exhibition of colorphobia by men in the navy should be rebuked. Their officers deserve blame if they do not teach them to respect Americans, regardless of ancestry.—Lynn Item.

WILSON MAKES POPULAR CHOICE

Lansing Appointed Secretary of State to Succeed Bryan

IS INTERNATIONAL LAW EXPERT

Has Guided President's Policy Since Outbreak of European War—Official Washington Unanimous In Praise of Diplomat Who Is Thoroughly Familiar With Duties of His Office

Washington, June 24.—Robert Lansing, who, as counsellor of the state department, has advised President Wilson in law and precedent in the policy pursued by the United States toward belligerent governments since the outbreak of the European war, was named as secretary of state to succeed William J. Bryan.

Few appointments in recent years have given such widespread satisfaction in the national capital. Lansing is a Democrat, but he has devoted his time to international law and diplomacy and is as popular with former Republican officials as with his colleagues.

Members of the cabinet who talked with the president on the subject were unanimous in their recommendation that he should be appointed. Colonel E. M. House and other personal friends of the president advised the selection.

Official announcement of the selection of Lansing, who has been serving as secretary ad interim since the resignation of Bryan on June 8, was made in the following statement issued from the White House:

"Before leaving for a brief rest in New Hampshire the president announced that he had offered the post of secretary of state to Mr. Robert Lansing, the present counsellor of the department of state, and that Mr. Lansing had accepted the appointment."

A commission was prepared which President Wilson signed giving Lansing a recess appointment. When congress re-convenes, the nomination will go to the senate. No opposition to his confirmation is anticipated.

Lansing is 51 years old and a native of Watertown, N. Y. He graduated from Amherst college in 1886.

STARTS ON VACATION

President Wilson Will Keep Closely In Touch With Public Affairs

Washington, June 24.—President Wilson left at midnight for the summer White House at Cornish, N. H., not to return until July 6. He goes first to Roslyn, L. I., to spend today with E. M. House. Late tonight he will leave Roslyn for Cornish, where he expects to arrive tomorrow afternoon.

Direct telegraphic communication between the White House offices and Cornish has been arranged and the president will be in constant touch with Secretary Lansing and other officials here.

The president is accompanied by Secretary Tumulty, some of his family and a corps of stenographers.

WANTED HERO'S MEDAL

Boy Scout Set Fire to Barn and Then Helped to Extinguish It

Worcester, Mass., June 24.—Confessing to the police that he set fire to a barn so that he might later put out the blaze and gain a medal for heroism, John J. Murray, 22 years old, scoutmaster 237 of the Boy Scouts of America, was arrested by the state police, charged with attempted arson and held in $1000 bond for the grand jury.

Murray was with the Boy Scouts tramping to Shrewsbury. The police say he and some others set fire to Caufield's barn, in which was stored hay and straw. Later they put out the fire.

"COUNT" GOES TO JAIL

Claimed He Was In America to Buy Horses For War Purposes

Lynn, Mass., June 24.—Insisting that he is an Austrian "count" and that he came to this country to "quietly buy up war horses for the Austrian government," Edmund Sperling, 40, was nevertheless sentenced to four months in the house of correction by Judge Lummus for larceny from residents of this city.

Witnesses appeared to testify that he had collected sums varying from $2 to $20 through misrepresentations. Victims claim he told them he was a millionaire, but that his funds were tied up by the war.

Profit—— Profit
who's got the profit ?

CHAPTER I

"Sure, I Promise"

The genial Mr. Bates can be pushed just so far. He was slightly exasperated. As a matter of fact he rather likes to talk to traveling men, but it seemed a bit rough, on Saturday morning with deliveries way behind, for a perfect stranger to try to sell him a—

"Say, what do you think this is, a bank?" he asked testily.

"No, it's a grocery store—and a mighty busy one. That's why I am trying to convince you that you need our service. Now take that package of tea—have you ever tried to figure whether you make or lose money on it, figuring in overhead, your salary, etc.?"

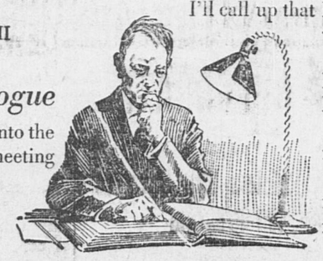

"No use, young man; you're just wasting your wind. I'm too busy selling goods to bother with all that theoretical stuff."

"All right, Mr. Bates, I see you're not ready to talk with me; but promise me this: that the first time anything in the way of costs, collections, profits or inventory puzzles you, you will give me another chance."

"Sure, sure, I promise; anything to get you out of here."

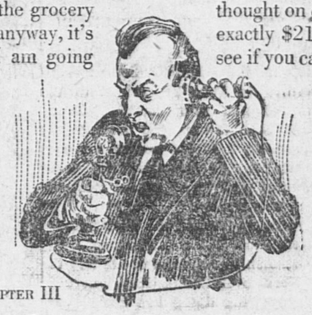

CHAPTER II

Midnight Monologue

Mr. Bates drops into the store after lodge meeting and goes over his books to see how he stands. "Gosh! It's no use. I've either got to get a new bookkeeper or a new line of business. Sales are O.K.—better than last year—but where in Sam Hill are the profits? It ain't reasonable that I could do the grocery business of the town and be in the hole. I wonder, can the trade on tea and coffee be falling off. Maybe we ought to push the profitable lines more—providing there are any profitable lines. Perhaps it's costing me more to do business on account of the war or the tariff.

"I tell you it's no cinch to guess the right answer in the grocery business. Well, anyway, it's midnight, and I am going home. I'll make Dobbs go over his figures again in the morning and see if he can't juggle out a little profit for the month.

CHAPTER III

The Telephone Call

When Mr. Bates got down to the store next morning, his stern resolve to put a little ginger into his bookkeeper was defeated by the fact that the latter was reported sick in bed. However, bills were coming due and the Bank hadn't been any too willing on the last loan, so something had to be done. He recalled his promise to the strange salesman who had entertained the "preposterous" idea of selling him a—

"Say, there may be something in this Adding Machine idea after all. Guess I'll call up that Burroughs chap and see what he's got.

"Hello—Main 724—I said Main 7-2-4—No, I want Main—Main 724.

"Hello, is this Burroughs? This is Bates the grocer. Say, how much profit can your machine show on $1,000 worth of business? Huh! Oh! very well, come on over. My bookkeeper is losing his speed—hasn't shown any profit for two months."

CHAPTER IV

Facts, Not Guess-Work

Mr. Bates is seen studying a report prepared by his bookkeeper with the aid of his new Burroughs. He calls for his head clerk.

"Say, Bill, you got to put more thought on our fresh fruit trade—we lost exactly $21 on fruit last month. And see if you can't dope up some way to get more trade on specialty crackers—that's one of our most profitable lines. That's all now. Tell Pete I want to see him."

"Pete—you are slowing up. Last month you sold $123 less than Sam. Moreover, Sam sold stuff we make a good profit on, while judging from profits on your sales you must have the idea we only handle sugar and kerosene. I didn't make a cent on you. Brace up, Pete, remember a job's a job. That's all."

There are over 90,000 merchants using Burroughs Figuring Machines right now. Every retail merchant can use a Burroughs to stop leaks and make more profits just as Bates did.

Write for store leak stopping information. Business bulletins are sent free to retail merchants. Please write on your business letterhead.

RETURNS TO QUINCY.

Ex-Councilman William P. Hughes, formerly of West Quincy, who has been making his home in South Carolina for the past eight and a half years has returned to Quincy where he will make his home in the future. While in the south Mr. Hughes has been engaged in the business which he followed while in Quincy, namely the granite business. He is now interested in a mineral spring water.

AUCTION BRIDGE.

Mrs. Maurice P. Spillane and Mrs. Herbert D. Cole were hostesses at an auction bridge party Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Spillane on Elm street. The party was given under the asupices of the educational committee of the Quincy Woman's club for the benefit of the summar gardens. Souvenirs for the afternoon were awarded Mrs. Edward E. Miller and Mrs. George T. Magee.

KNIGHTS OFF FOR BIG DAY

Quincy commandery, Knights Templars, is celebrating St. John's day today by an outing at King Phillip's Tavern, Middleboro. On this occasion the women are admitted to the outing and they are looking forward to a jolly time. The party, some one hundred and twenty-five in number, left City square at 8.30 this morning for Middleboro. The trip is being made by automobiles, something like thirty being in the procession.

One would hardly take the men of the party he will doubtless be selected, the showy uniforms usually worn by the Sir Knights were conspicuous by their absence. In fact old coats and caps prevailed. Stowed away in the bottom of the automobiles were base ball bats, catcher's masks, shields and mits, for one of the features of the outing will be a game of ball. Sir Knights Cole and Whitehead, who have the game in charge, have secured strong teams and the contest for supremacy will be a hot one, even if bloodless.

Just who the umpire of the game will be has not been announced, but as Mayor Campbell went along with the party he will doubtless be selected, for the reason that he professes ignorance of the fine points of the game and it is figured out that the decisions of a novice will be impartial.

That none of the cars might be lost on the way, each was decorated with a pennant reading "Quincy commandery No. 47 K. T."

The committee in charge also thought that perhaps some of the Sir Knights might get lost in the wilds of Middleboro and for this reason they were also tagged, each Sir Knight being decorated with a blue ribbon badge.

POPULAR SCHOOL TEACHER WEDS

Miss Edith Abbott Marries Providence Man

Miss Edith Lucia Abbott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Abbott of Ocean street, Atlantic, was married Wednesday night at the home of her parents to Henry Jennison Blakely Stitt of Pawtucket, R. I., son of James H. Stitt of New York. The Rev. T. W. Davison of the Memorial church officiated the double ring service being used.

The decorations were simple but notably artistic.

The ceremony was performed in an embankment of palms, ferns and pink cut flowers. The walls of the rooms were almost obscured by laurels while here and there were large clusters of pink roses and carnations.

Miss Elthea Eldredge of Wareham and Miss Dorothy Freeman of Sandwich, acted as ribbon bearers and made an aisle for the bridal party to the improvised altar from the stairway which was made beautiful by a profusion of greenery and pink roses.

Miss Abbott, who was given in marriage by her father, was a very attractive bride. Her gown was of white crepe meteor with an over jacket of real lace, trimmed with pearls. The bodice, which was cut with a V shaped neck, was pinned together with a pearl brooch, the gift of the groom. A tulle veil was arranged with a wreath of lilies of the valley over the coiffure from which it fell to the edge of her dress. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and roses.

Miss Hazel Davison of Atlantic, who acted as maid of honor, was prettily gowned in shell pink crepe meteor with an over-jacket of real lace trimmed with pearls. Her only ornament was a string of pearls, a gift of the bride. She carried a huge bouquet of pink roses.

Mr. Stitt had for his best man James P. Brown of Pawtucket, a former classmate at Brown University. The ushers were Calvin B. Stitt of Providence, a brother of the groom, and Henry D. Corkum of Leominister, Mass., Arvid Alm of Peabody and Edgar Allan of Edgewood, R. I., all students of Brown University.

The couple were assisted in receiving by the best man, the maid of honor and the parents of the bride. The bride's mother wore an exquisite gown of wisteria crepe meteor trimmed with silver point lace. The music for the bridal procession was furnished by the White trio which played selections throughout the evening.

Shortly before ten o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Stitt left amid a shower of confetti and good wishes for their honeymoon, the first two weeks of which will be spent traveling and the remainder at Block Island, R. I.

After September they will reside in Pawtucket where Mr. Stitt will resume his duties as teacher of mathematics and football coach of Pawtucket High school.

The bride is a graduate of the Dorchester High school and Boston Normal college. For the last four years she has been one of the most popular teachers in the Quincy High school. Previous to teaching in Quincy she taught in Wareham.

Mr. Stitt graduated from Brown University in 1909. During his four years at college his work on the gridiron put him among the famous athletes.

Among the guests at the wedding were about twenty-five school teachers from Quincy High school and Pawtucket High school, including Head Master and Mrs. Collins of Quincy.

KAMP KWINZY HAS SCHEDULE

The overland tour of the White Mountains and the Green Mountains via Bretton Woods, N. H., and Burlington, Vt., that is to be conducted by Senior Kamp Kwinzy is arousing a great deal of interest at the Y. M. C. A. POLICE ARE EASY VICTORS

The base ball team of the police, strengthened by the addition of Bill Duggan and Sid Patterson, won an easy victory over the team of the R. E. Foy markets at the Ward Three playground Wednesday afternoon. The final score was 20 to 13. The game was witnessed by a large gallery. The victory was due to the heavy hitting of the police. The market boys used four pitchers in an effort to stop the attack but the resistance was weak.

SPORTING COMMENT

Just think of it, Charlie Brickley's average in the Harvard-Yale series was .837. He batted for 1000 in his first six times up. Some average. "Tack" Hardwick got a hit, two assists, but was unfortunate in making two errors.

And Frye, a pinch hitter turned the trick that sent over the run.

Taunton has jumped a place in the Colonial league. They have won 11 and lost 15 against 16 wins and 10 losses for New Bedford, the leaders.

WILLIAM O. PHELPS.

MYSTERIOUS SMOKE.

Robert Commins, a Wollaston contractor, stopped his auto in front of City hall Wednesday to investigate a mysterious smoke issuing from his machine. A close search uncovered matches on fire in the pocket of a coat under the cushion of the seat.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Editor of the Ledger:

My attention has been called to an error in my letter, printed in the Ledger of May 8, in reply to Mrs. Alice E. Comins. Through a slip of the pen I make it appear that the President of Bryn Mawr college is the author of "The Case for Woman Suffrage." The fact is that "The Case for Woman Suffrage" is a bibliography of suffrage literature compiled by Margaret Ladd Franklin, a graduate of Bryn Mawr college. It has an introduction written by M. Carey Thomas, president of Bryn Mawr, and president of the National College Equal Suffrage League, which publishes The Case. I have been charged by the president of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association with having deliberately falsified in referring to the President of Bryn Mawr as the author of the book in question, but I leave it to any fair-minded person to say whether that is a reasonable assumption from all the facts.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

Pisa is the subject of the pictures now on exhibition in the art gallery of the Thomas Crane Public Library. The capital of the province of Pisa, in Tuscany, Italy, this city is far famed for the Piazza del Duomo, with its cathedral, baptistry, Leaning Tower and Campo Santo, all situated in the northwest corner of the city.

In the history of art, Pisa occupies began the dawn of medieval Italian foundation of the Cathedral of Pisa an important position, for, with the art. And "in the 15th century, Pisa was also important as a cradle of sculpture and gave birth to Niccolo Pisano." His son Giovanni, also noted as an architect was no less famous than his father."

The whole collection includes 79 photographs, beginning with a map, and a large view of the city from the tower of the citadel, which give a clear idea of its present aspect. There are several views of the buildings which comprise the Piazza del Duomo, some from a distance, and some in minute detail. And there are also many reproductions of the pictures by artists who have made Pisa famous.

EARTHQUAKE KILLS FIVE

Property Damage In Imperial Valley Is About $1,000,000

El Centro, Cal., June 24.—An earthquake shook up the Imperial valley of California, killed five persons, caused damage estimated at $1,000,000 in the valley's little cluster of towns, and left almost undamaged the great irrigation system which transformed the valley from a desert to a fertile farming country.

El Centro suffered more than any other town. The five killed were caught in falling walls at Mexicali, just across the border. Martial law was proclaimed there.

As far as can be learned the shocks were severest at and below the border. The earthquake extended all the way to Yuma, Ariz.

The duration of the first shock was about thirty seconds. This was followed half an hour later by a second shock almost as severe as the first.

JEWS ARE ORDERED TO QUIT MARIETTA

One Result of the Commutation of Frank's Sentence

Atlanta, June 24.—The Jewish residents of Marietta, the city where Mary Phagan lived, have been notified by the Marietta vigilance committee to close up their business and leave Marietta by next Saturday night or stand the consequences.

"We mean to rid Marietta of all Jews by the above date," says the notice. "You can heed this warning or stand the punishment the committee may see fit to deal out to you."

The first victim is I. Rosenthal, an employe of the German store of Marietta, who is in a dangerous condition, suffering from injuries received when a crowd of men attacked him at his home and ran him out of town.

Fears of anti-Jewish riots have been growing steadily since the commutation of the sentence of Leo M. Frank, convicted of the murder of the Phagan girl.

"SINISTER INFLUENCE"

Blamed by Indianapolis Politicians For Fraud Indictments

Indianapolis, June 24.—Thomas Taggart, Democratic national committeeman, Mayor Bell and others of the 128 Indiana officials indicted for alleged election frauds, were not disposed to take seriously the charges against them.

Efforts of the indicted men were centred largely in pointing out what they said was "a sinister influence" at work against them.

Bell issued a formal statement in which he said his was "a prosecution of certain selfish interests" and said the trial would result in vindication for all.

CLUB WOMEN AT MARION.

By courtesy of the Sippicon Club, the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs held its annual meeting this week in the Congregational church, Marion. Many delegates and chairmen of departments arrived Wednesday afternoon. In the evening a most interesting Round Table conference of departments was held, followed by a short address by Professor William J. Hudson of University of Missouri on "Constructive Peace."

Today at 10 A. M. Mrs. George W. Perkins, president of the Federation called the meeting to order and after the address of welcome and response from the Federation, the session was given up to the reading of the annual reports of officers and chairmen of special committees. A short address was given by Dr. Edward Reynolds on "The Fight Against Cancer."

At the afternoon session there were greetings from outside guests and presentation of new clubs. The annual reports of committees was continued after which the remainder of the afternoon was devoted to a most interesting address on "Beauty in Our Cities" by Lorado Taft of Chicago.

A trip to the Converse Estate will add to the day's pleasure and in the evening a reception is to be tendered he convention by the Sippicon Club, at the Casino where readings of Mrs. Dennett will add greatly to the enjoyment of the guests.

The conference continues all day Friday. A few of the annual reports read today are given below:

REPORT OF CLERK.

Today completes twenty-two years of earnest work along the lines laid down by the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, the aim of which during the past year has been always toward that goal for the betterment of the home and community life.

The Autumn meeting was as guests of the Norwood Woman's Club in the Civics Association building Nov. 4; subject considered Prison Reform. Reports of the Biennial and the Domestic Science and Pure Food Exposition with which the Federation cooperated were given at this time.

By invitation of the Somerville Women's Club, the mid-winter meeting was held Feb. 26. The morning session was given over to Legislative measures and reports on the New England Conference and the Conference for Rural Progress. The subject of the afternoon meeting was Immigration.

Two President's conferences have been held during the year; the first on Education at Mechanics building, Boston, Oct. 24 at the time of the Pure Food Exposition through the courtesy of its management. The second, March 25 with the Thought and Work Club and the Salem Woman's Club. At this time, the chairmen of departments gave ten minute talks on their work. Also, the idea of a State Federation endowment fund was first presented.

Mrs. Perkins called together department chairmen in conference under date of Sept. 24. She made it a point to go very carefully into the work for the coming Club year, and to emphasize the rules which were to govern the Committees in the development of their year's outline.

One of the most interesting gatherings of the entire Federation year was that which occurred in Springfield with the Springfield Women's Club on Jan. 22. At this meeting, forty clubs from the western part of the state were invited to send delegates and of this number, twenty-eight were represented. The topics considered were:

1st. What is the most interesting work your Club is doing at the present time?

2nd. What specific work would you like to do for your Club or community?

3rd; Mental Diseases.

A report was given at this time about the formation of the Hospital Relief Committee for the purpose of aiding the needy hospitals of Northern France.

BELLE R. CLARK.

FEDERATION SECRETARY.

During the past year the New Century Club of Needham and the West Roxbury Community Club have been admitted to membership in the General Federation; the Current Events Club of Hyde Park has been readmitted, having withdrawn in 1909, and the International Kindergarten Union has applied for membership and been received, through the State of Massachusetts. Two clubs have withdrawn —the Boston Business Woman's League and the Boston Parliamentary Law Class.

The General Federation has gained the last year 125 new clubs, all fine active organizations, living up to the highest principles of federation Ideals.

The biennial meeting next year will be held in New York City. The local board of management promises the greatest biennial ever held. Massachusetts clubs will want to be represented.

Although Massachusetts has a large number of clubs in direct membership with the General Federation, yet there are still many that have not associated themselves with the national body. The strength and vigor of this national body depends, of course, on the number and vitality of the clubs composing it, just as our State Federation depends on the value of the individual club.

It is from these great national meetings,—we might say International meetings,—where leaders in the woman's club movement from all parts of our own country and representatives from abroad gather to confer, to give out the benefit of their experiences, and to plan for greater action, that the delegates gain inspiration, courage to meet the home problems, and a breadth of vision which takes us out of our natural New England conservatism. We need this contact and the General Federation needs us. See if it can't be presented to the clubs for their consideration and let us have at the beginning of next season a long list of clubs eager to associate themselves with the great national organization of club workers in a movement, the like of which the world has never known.

Your secretary would repeat the advice given by her predecessors: If any club is hesitating about joining, because of dues, so change your constitution as to add ten cents to your annual club dues, as General Federation dues, thus making the tax a true per capita tax.

Please bear in mind the fact that, according to the constitution of the General Federation, a club desiring membership and the right to be represented by delegates at the biennial must have its application in the hands of the membership committee at least two months before the first day of the biennial convention.

LEILA C. PENNOCK.

BUREAU OF INFORMATION.

This year the calls upon the Bureau of Information have increased nearly three times over those of last year, coming from as far west as the Connecticut Valley and as far east as the elbow of Cape Cod, not mentioning out of state correspondence. The Bureau has made every effort to respond to these calls and hopes that its suggestions have proved helpful.

Clubs desiring assistance in framing by-laws may have the "By-Laws Guide" for five cents a copy. "The Out-line Studies" of many countries are still available and also "The Old Bay State Out-line Study," which was compiled by Adolf A. Berle, Jr., and presented to the Bureau. Madam Adamowska of Cambridge has prepared an "Out-line Study of Poland," her own country, which may also be obtained, upon application. All facts obtainable in regard to the women's club houses of Massachusetts have been collected and placed on file for the use of any club desiring them.

The Bureau appreciates the Year Books that have been sent and thanks the clubs for "programs that can be recommended" that were sent in response to the request published in the Bulletin.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

URGE AGAINST STRIKE AT MIDNIGHT SESSION

Rumor Is That Some of Younger Members Clamored For Strike

The conductors and motormen of the Quincy branch at an all night meeting in Hancock hall again deferred final action on the report of the board of arbitration which recently adjusted their wage scale. The first meeting was called at eight o'clock and the second at midnight. Men from the Quincy, Weymouth and Braintree barns attended.

Nothing exciting was developed during the earnest discussion by the men but those leaving the meeting said that Joseph Pelletier, the third member of the board, had been roundly scored for his attitude toward the blue uniform employees.

Others say that younger members of the local talked strike but that the older members counselled patience until a further study of the finding could be made. It was also stated that such a vote could not be taken at a special meeting because members had not been properly notified.

P. E. Sheahan, president of the Brockton branch and a member of the state conference board, was present at the meeting and explained at length the finding as it is. He was a member of the joint conference board.

The local will not take action until the state conference board goes on record with regard to the award. Well known members on the street, however said that if a vote was taken at the meeting they thought the men would accept it. Opinions still differ as to the merits of the case but many state a great deal was accomplished because an agreement was secured.

CHARLES J. McGILVARY

Athletic Suggestions Pointed.

Harold Hill read the recommendations of the athletic committee, in the absence of Russell Bates, its chairman. Several bright suggestions were offered,—the playing of Saturday afternoon games and the publishing of a statement of the financial income and expenditures of the team with a view of interesting the city in what was being done in athletics.

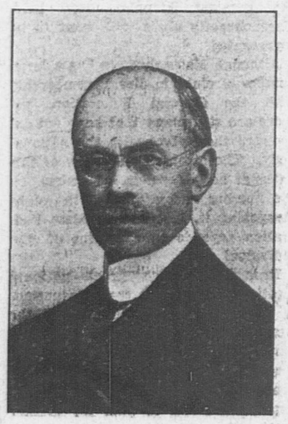

President-elect McGilvray, when presented by President Thayer, made a speech of acceptance. He said he hoped the association this year would be as successful as it has been, mentioned the sterling results attained by 1906 members and congratulated the committees responsible for the splendid showing.

The membership, it was announced, was now 245, 93 being added during the recent campaign conducted under the direction of Fred Atwood.

City Clerk Crane Pops Up.

Mr. Crane proved to be the man for the occasion. Nothing stereotyped was included in his speech. His appearance on the platform was the signal for an outburst of applause and when it subsided, he said he was an academy boy who had nothing of the school spirit in common with the High school in those days but now and for many years a strong supporter of the advance of the school.

He said the closest reason he had for claiming kinship with the school was based on his service as a member of the school committee and the presentation of the diplomas to a class of graduates. He said he would never forget that event for the chairman in bestowing the honor said, "I regret to announce that owing to the illness of Dr. Sheahan Mr. Crane will present the diplomas."

EMERY L. CRANE

Mr. Crane discussed "School Spirit" and in the brief time he occupied the platform created many hearty laughs with his apt stories.

Before the association was formed, he declared there was no such thing as the Quincy High school. He spoke of how it now impressed the people of the city with its value and assured the graduates that in order to have it continue to flourish they must not only believe in it but practice it.

Wellesley Warbles Echoed.

Sports, he said, are not the chief thing in a school but are quite a factor in its success and sports cannot be successful unless properly supported not only by financial assistance but also by attendance at the games. He said no attempt should be made to put it on a commercial basis and he scored the system in vogue in schools to the north of Boston because it created dissension and hard feeling. Presence encourages and cheering inspires, said the speaker, and I have never heard a cheer at any game that was much better than a Wellesley warble. Side lines introduce the "pep" into the game. In closing he was most heartly in his congratulations and well wishes for the association.

And then, President Thayer had the unpleasant duty of telling those present that the orchestra engaged for the dance in the gymnasium had not appeared. While he sought a pianist Miss Dorothy Packard and Miss Eleanor Whittemore led in the singing of the alumni song, the words of which were written by J. Harry Hooper to be sung to the air of Tipperary, and popular song hit choruses.

Sam Sears A Rescuer.

Nearly a quarter of an hour was devoted to this form of entertainment, with all crowding around the piano. As the voices became husky the members wended their way to the gym where Willard Crocker was playing the piano. He made it possible to dance until the arrival of Sam Sears who had been invited by phone and who responded nobly to the request. Punch was served during the evening. The social broke up at 11 o'clock.

VANQUISHED BY TEUTON ARMIES

Defeat of Russians In Galicia Appears to Be Complete

VICTORS' BOOTY IS NOT LARGE

Czar's Troops Moved Almost Everything of Military Value and Left Few to Become Prisoners When They Fled From Lemberg—Wilhelm and Francis Joseph to Celebrate the Event—Austrians Put Up Stiff Fight With Italians—Conflict In West Favors France—Turk Trenches In Dardanelles Taken by Allies

London, June 24.—The Russians have lost Lemberg. They occupied the Galician capital early in September and held it continuously until Tuesday, when the combined Austro-German forces compelled them to retreat from the city, which is sixty miles due west from the nearest point of the Russian frontier.

Whether the fall of Lemberg means that the Russian army operating south of it in southeast Galicia is effectively cut off from the army to the north stretching across Poland to the Baltic cannot yet be said. The newspapers of both Vienna and Berlin say this is the case and that the Russians have received a blow from which they cannot recover.

If the stroke proves as crushing as the Teutons predict, its effect, military observers in London say, soon should be felt in the transfer of vast German forces to the west, where for days they have been hard pressed by the French.

Petrograd has not conceded the fall of Lemberg. Previous dispatches from the Russian capital, however, related details of what purported to be the systematic withdrawal of Russians from the town, and if these details should prove correct, it is believed in military circles that when the count is taken of the Austro-German booty it will not be large, for, as was the case at Przemysl, the Russians are said to have worked hard to move everything of military value.

Russians' Masterly Retreat

Telegrams from Vienna concerning the capture of Lemberg and recounting the celebration of the populace in Vienna over the victory, add that the Austrian correspondents with the Teutonic armies pay tribute to the magnificent rear guard action fought by the Russians, who are declared to have retreated eastward in good order, leaving behind few prisoners and even removing the Russian documents from the city, which, since the Russians occupied it, has been called by them Lwow.

One telegram from Vienna says Emperor William and Emperor Francis Joseph purpose to meet soon in the recaptured Galician capital for "fitting ceremonies to mark the end of Russia's dominance of Galicia."

The news of the fall of Lemberg did not reach London until late Wednesday afternoon, when bulletins arrived almost simultaneously from Berlin and Vienna by way of Amsterdam. It drove home, according to military observers, the fact how ample must have been the Austro-German ammunition supply to accomplish the feat.

Berlin and Vienna are reported to be filled with joy over the victory of their forces. Archduke Frederick of Austria, commander-in-chief of the Austrian forces, and General von Mackensen of the German army both have been made field marshals of the Prussian army in recognition of their services in the Galician campaign.

Italians Meet Reverses

The Italians have met their first reverses along the Isonzo river, according to dispatches from Laibach, Austria, by way of Geneva.

Southeast of Flitsch the Italians have been driven back to their eastern frontier by a strong Austrian force, while their advance has been stopped at Caporetto, where 30,000 Austrians, who debouched from the Ternova forest, are now marching against the Italian positions north of Goritz.

As an offset to these reverses the same dispatch declares that the Italians have taken all the defenses surrounding Malborghetto, further north in the Isonzo valley, and are now bombarding the town itself.

Malborghetto was the first main objective of an Italian army, which has been slowly advancing along the railroad to Tarvis, practically since the war began.

Fighting Around Arras

The French war office reports that north of Souchez, in the Arras section, the French made slight progress and repulsed a German counter-attack.

The French exploded a mine near Berry-au-Bac, at Hill 108, causing a 100-foot excavation and seriously damaging the German trenches.

The Germans recaptured their second line at the Calonne trench on the heights of the Meuse, but the French took the offensive and regained a foothold.

In Lorraine the French captured two German works near Leintry and took some prisoners.

In the Fecht river region in Alsace, the French have occupied Sondernach and pushed their line along the slopes east of that village.

An official communication on the operations in the Dardanelles was issued by the French war office. It says:

"The expeditionary corps in the Orient attacked the Turkish lines on two-thirds of the front. After an artillery preparation the infantry sallied from the trenches. Our left carried two lines of the enemy's trenches, and these they held.

"To the right the struggle continued on the ruins of the Turkish works, which had been razed by the artillery. The enemy had succeeded in retaking these entrenchments when a battalion of the Foreign Legion and a battalion of Zouaves, in a bayonet assault, carried the position.

MUST RALLY TO FACTORIES

Lloyd-George Issues Ultimatum to British Laboring Classes

David Lloyd-George, the minister of munitions, has given British labor seven days in which to make good the promise of its leaders that men will rally to the factories in sufficient numbers to produce a maximum supply of munitions of war.

This was the most striking statement in the new minister's speech in the British house of commons in the course of outlining the munitions measure, which is designed to control not only the output, but the men responsible for the output. Unless the order is complied with, the minister said conscription will be enforced.

Speaking of German preparation, the minister said:

"Germany has been piling up material. Until she was ready, she was friendly with everybody. During the Balkan crisis, none could have been more modest or unpretentious.

"She had a benevolent smile for France. She walked arm in arm with Great Britain through the chancelleries of Europe. We really thought an era of peace and good will had come. At that moment she was forging and hiding away for months, war stores to attack her neighbors unawares and murder them in their sleep."

SPY MULLER EXECUTED

Had Supplied Germany With British Military Information

F. R. Muller, who was found guilty of being a German spy, was executed in the Tower of London by shooting.

Muller was arrested some time ago, with Anton Knepferle and another man named Hahn. All three were accused of sending military information to Germany by means of invisible ink.

Both Muller and Hahn were convicted and Muller was sentenced to death, while Hahn was sentenced to seven years' servitude. Knepferle committed suicide while his trial was in progress.

TRIBUNE APOLOGIZES

Mistaken In Publishing Story Concerning Bernstorff's Envoy

The New York Tribune apologized, editorially, to Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, for asserting recently that Meyer-Gerhard, Bernstorff's emissary to Berlin, was really Dr. Alfred Meyer of the German war office, who came to this country to purchase war munitions.

The reason for the apology is that one of the witnesses on whom The Tribune relied has now given a totally different version of the affair from the one he originally made.

DROWNED HIS WIFE TO OBTAIN MONEY

Testimony at Trial of London's Alleged "Bathtub" Slayer

London, June 24.—In the trial of the famous "Brides' Bathtub" murder case, George J. Smith, charged with drowning three of his wives in a bathtub, scowled when Herbert Mundy, uncle of his first alleged victim, took the witness box to testify.

Beatrice Mundy, the witness testified, inherited $10,000 by the will of her father, a bank manager. She met Smith, who posed as Henry Williams, and married him after a three days' courtship on Aug. 25, 1910.

Despite her relatives' protests, she gave him $500 in gold. Smith then deserted her, the witness said, but two years afterward the two met accidentally. The deserted bride forgave him and two months later made a will, leaving him the balance of her $10,000, Mundy said.

The will was signed July 8. On the morning of July 15, the nude body of Beatrice Mundy was found in the bathtub of a rooming house. Smith, the witness said, collected the $10,000.

Boston, June 24.—Elizabeth M. Ryan, famed as "Toodles" because of her $50,000 breach of promise suit against Harry K. Mansfield, former landlord of Ferncroft Inn, left Boston yesterday for New York.

Her leave taking and the filing in the Suffolk superior court of a paper legally settling the famous case, closed the long-pending Ryan-Mansfield suit.

What the settlement of the case cost Mansfield is not known, but it is understood that Mansfield paid the sum of $20,000 to close the case.

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

CHAPTER X.

Further Perplexities.

PERCEIVING Wayland's returning weakness, Berea insisted on his lying down again while she set to work preparing dinner. "There is no telling when father will get here," she said. "And Tony will be hungry when he comes. Lie down and rest."

He obeyed her silently and, going to the bunk, at once fell asleep. How long he slept he could not tell, but he was awakened by the voice of the ranger, who was standing in the doorway and regarding Berrie with a round eyed stare.

He was a tall, awkward fellow of about thirty-five, plainly of the frontier type, but a man of intelligence. At the end of a brief explanation Berrie said, with an air of authority: "Now you'd better ride up the trail and bring our camp outfit down. We can't go back that way anyhow."

The ranger glanced toward Wayland. "All right, Miss Berrie, but perhaps your tenderfoot needs a doctor."

Wayland rose painfully, but resolutely. "Oh, no. I am not sick. I'm a little lame, that's all. I'll go along with you."

"No," said Berrie decisively. "You're not well enough for that. Get up your horses, Tony, and by that time I'll have some dinner ready."

"All right, Miss Berrie," replied the man and turned away.

Hardly had he crossed the bridge on his way to the pasture when Berrie cried out, "There comes daddy."

Wayland joined her at the door and stood beside her watching the supervisor as he came zigzagging down the steep hill to the east with all his horses trailing behind him roped together head to tail.

"He's had to come round by Lost lake," she exclaimed. "He'll be tired out and absolutely starved. Wahoo!" she shouted in greeting, and the supervisor waved his hand.

There was something superb in the calm seat of the veteran as he slid down the slope. He kept his place in the saddle with the air of the rider to whom hunger, fatigue, windfalls and snowslides were all a part of the day's work. Still when he reined in before the door and dropped from his horse he put his arm about his daughter's neck with quiet word: "I thought I'd find you here. How is everything?"

"All right, daddy. But what about you? Where have you been?"

"Clean back to Mill park. The blamed cayuses kept just ahead of me all the way."

"Poor old dad! And on top of that came the snow."

"Yes, and a whole hatful. I couldn't get back over the high pass. Had to go round by Lost lake, and, to cap all, Old Baldy took a notion not to lead. Oh, I've had a peach of a time, but here I am. Have you seen Moore and his party?"

"Yes, they're in camp up the trail. He and Alec Belden and two women. Are you hungry?"

He turned a comical glance upon her. "Am I hungry? Sister, I am a wolf. Norcross, take my horses down to the pasture."

The Supervisor Waved His Hand.

She hastened to interpose. "Let me do that, daddy, Mr. Norcross is badly used up. You see, we started down here late yesterday afternoon. It was raining and horribly muddy, and I took the wrong trail. The darkness caught us, and we didn't reach the station till nearly midnight."

Wayland acknowledged his weakness. "I guess I made a mistake, supervisor; I'm not fitted for this strenuous life."

McFarlane was quick to understand. "I didn't intend to pitchfork you into the forest life quite so suddenly," he said. "Don't give up yet awhile. You'll harden to it."

"Here comes Tony," said Berrie. "He'll look after the ponies."

Nevertheless Wayland went out, believing that Berrie wished to be alone with her father for a short time.

As he took his seat McFarlane said: "You stayed in camp till yesterday afternoon, did you?"

"Yes, we were expecting you every moment."

He saw nothing in this to remark upon. "Did it snow at the lake?"

"Yes, a little; it mostly rained."

"It stormed up on the divide like a January blizzard. When did Moore and his party arrive?"

"About 10 o'clock this morning."

"I'll ride right up and see them. What about the outfit? That's at the lake, I reckon?"

"Yes, I was just sending Tony after it. But, father, if you go up to Moore's camp don't say too much about what has happened. Don't tell them just when you took the back trail and just how long Wayland and I were in camp."

"Why not?"

She reddened with confusion. "Because— You know what an old gossip Mrs. Belden is. I don't want her to know. She's an awful talker, and out being together up there all that time will give her a chance."

A light broke in on the supervisor's brain. In the midst of his preoccupation as a forester he suddenly became the father. His eyes narrowed and his face darkened. "That's so. The old rip could make a whole lot of capital out of your being left in camp that way. At the same time I don't believe in dodging. The worst thing we could do would be to try to blind the trail. Was Tony here last night when you came?"

"No; he was down the valley after his mail."

His face darkened again. "That's another piece of bad luck too. How much does the old woman know at present?"

"Nothing at all."

"Didn't she cross examine you?"

"Sure she did, but Wayland side tracked her. Of course it only delays things. She'll know all about it sooner or later. She's great at putting two and two together. Two and two with her always make five."

McFarlane mused. "Cliff will be plumb crazy if she gets his ear first."

"I don't care anything about Cliff, daddy. I don't calve what he thinks or does if he will only let Wayland alone."

"See here, daughter, you do seem to be terribly interested in this tourist."

"He's the finest man I ever knew, father."

He looked at her with tender, trusting glance. "He isn't your kind, daughter. He's a nice clean boy, but he's different. He don't belong in our world. He's only just stopping here Don't forget that."

"I'm not forgetting that, daddy. I know he's different. That's why I like him." After a pause she added: "Nobody could have been nicer all through these days than he has been. He was like a brother."

McFarlane fixed a keen glance upon her. "Has he said anything to you? Did you come to an understanding?"

Her eyes fell. "Not the way you mean, daddy, but I think he—likes me But do you know who he is? He's the son of W. W. Norcross, that big Michigan lumberman."

McFarlane started. "How do you know that?"

"Mr. Moore asked him if he was any relation to W. W. Norcross, and he said, 'Yes, a son.' You should have seen how that Moore girl changed her tune the moment he admitted that. She'd been very free with him up to that time. But when she found out he was a rich man's son she became as quiet and innocent as a kitten. I hate her! She's a deceitful snip!"

"Well, now, daughter, that being the case, it's all the more certain that he don't belong to our world, and you mustn't fix your mind on keeping him here."

"A girl can't help fixing her mind, daddy."

"Or changing it." He smiled a little. "You used to like Cliff. You liked him well enough to promise to marry him."

"I know I did. But I despise him now."

"Poor Cliff! But the thing we've got to guard against is old lady Belden's tongue. She and that Belden gang have it in for me, and all that has kept them from open war has been Cliff's relationship to you. They'll take a keen delight in making the worst of all this camping business." McFarlane was now very grave. "I wish your mother was here this minute. I guess we had better cut out this timber cruise and go right back."

"No, you mustn't do that. That would only make more talk. Go on with your plans. I'll stay here with you. It won't take you but a couple of days to do the work, and Wayland needs the rest."

"But suppose Cliff hears of this business between you and Norcross and comes galloping over the ridge?"

"Well, let him. He has no claim on me."

FLIGHT STORY TOLD BY THAW

Unexpectedly Called Upon to Testify In Own Behalf

ALIENIST FLINT IS SCORED

Declared to Have Never Thoroughly Examined Man He Declared Insane —Stories of Girls Lured to Thaw's Rooms and Stripped by Him Is Retold by the Prosecution

New York, June 24.—Attorney Stanchfield, chief counsel for Harry K. Thaw in his fight to prove his sanity, sprung a surprise on the state by putting the slayer of Stanford White on the stand as his own first witness.

Deputy Attorney General Cook was so taken by surprise that he had not prepared to cross-examine the prisoner and, after occupying the stand twenty-five minutes, Thaw was excused. He is, however, subject to recall.

Stanchfield began his questioning by allusions to Thaw's sensational escape from Matteawan asylum. Under Stanchfield's guidance, Thaw sketched his escape, his flight to Coaticooke, Can., his return to New Hampshire and the subsequent fight to have him brought back to New York. Then he told how a commission appointed by Federal Judge Aldrich in New Hampshire had adjudged him sane, and there was an audible note of triumph in his voice as he reached that point.

Twelve other witnesses, including four jurors at Thaw's former trials, two chaplains, a physician and a keeper at the Tombs prison, where Thaw was several times confined, two newspaper men who had been associated with him during the nine years' history of Thaw litigation, a lawyer who had met Thaw in New Hampshire and a juror in civil proceceedings instituted by one of Thaw's former attorneys against Thaw's mother.

They all agreed that Thaw showed no symptoms of delusion, that he could talk intelligently on many subjects, had never been violent in his conduct to their knowledge, and was rational in his talk and actions.

Stanchfield in his opening speech bitterly attacked Dr. Flint, the alienist, who has figured prominently in all of Thaw's long fights for freedom.

"Dr. Flint has never made an examination of Thaw," declared Stanchfield. "The only time he was ever with him alone was for forty minutes, and he never made a thorough examination then. Yet this man has adjudged Thaw insane.

"Dr. Flint has made thousands of dollars out of this case. People are interested in keeping Harry K. Thaw insane, for there is money in it.

"Not one legal officer ever connected with any of Thaw's many trials," he said, "ever contended that Thaw was insane, except the night of June 25, 1906, when he shot and killed Stanford White. Even William Jerome declared positively at the second trial that he did not believe Thaw insane.

Stanchfield dwelt at length on the intimate relations White had with Evelyn Nesbit, who, he said, was taken by White to his apartments after being made drunk.

"The girlish Evelyn related her experience to Thaw, who at once gave her the protection of his name by marrying her," continued Stanchfield.

Stanchfield then read to the jury the summing up of Jerome at the second trial. In that address Jerome said he believed Stanford White had met the fate he deserved, as the revelations of Evelyn Nesbit about the Twenty-second street place, maintained by White, were the worst ever made in New York.

The private life of Thaw was the subject of a vitriolic scoring by Cook.

"The murderer of Stanford White led a wild life of debauchery from the time he left his home in Pittsburg as a young man for the night life and bright lights of Broadway and Forty-second street," declared Cook.

He said Evelyn told Thaw of her downfall when they were in Paris in 1903 and that Thaw did not kill White until three years later.

"At the time Thaw shot White, this alleged defender of virgin Evelyn was conducting a house on Fifty-eighth street, where he received over 200 girls under the guise of getting them positions on the stage. He undressed them personally and tied them to the bed post so that they were helpless."

Cook made a passionate defense of the memory of Stanford White.

The state suffered a heavy blow when one of its most important witnesses, Mrs. Susan Morrill, a former New York boarding house keeper, could not be found.

Mrs. Morrill had been a prominent figure in the former Thaw trials. It was she who testified that Thaw "beat up" chorus girls at her house. Cook announced that a searching investigation would be made by detectives.

Condemned Beans Go Overboard

Boston, June 24.—United States Deputy Marshal Ruhl destroyed 100 cases of canned beans by throwing them overboard from a scow in Boston harbor. It is claimed that the beans were injurious for food consumption.

PRETTY BATHING SUIT.

Black satin is used almost more than any other material for this season's bathing suits. The one shown here is lent distinction and a dash of style by a girdle of cream silk dotted with crimson dots.

ETON JACKET FEATURED.

The Eton jacket is a feature of the summer frocks. As shown here, it is more simulated than real, however, as the Eton effect is secured by bands of trimming upon a foundation blouse. The natty skirt is cut not too wide and is trimmed with revers.

DISGUISE THE POWDER PUFF

Quaint Designs That Make Ornaments of the Ever-Essential Toilet Article.

Here are two novel ways of disguising the ever-essential powder puff. The first can be made of ribbon about four inches wide and eight or nine inches long, the selvage edges folded and sewed together, except for about two inches at the center, making a strip of double silk nine inches long and two inches wide. Now gather each end up tightly and attach a silk tassel the same shade or contrasting with the color of the ribbon. Slip two ivory rings over the little bag, and you have an old-fashioned purse just like grandmother used for her pennies, but which you will use to hold in one end a powder puff, very diminutive, but quite adequate, and in the other end a mirror of the same dimensions. This little vanity bag can be carried out in the shades of the favorite evening gown, and makes a dainty and inconspicuous accessory for the carrying of the evening's ammunition. The second puff is for the dressing table, and is in the shape of a bisque ballerina, with voluminous maline skirts, who poises lightly atop of a glass powder jar. The puff is attached in some mysterious manner to the little bisque body, and the maline skirts act as a pretty ornament and a practical cover for the powder beneath. They can easily be renewed from time to time as they become soiled or mussed.

TUB FROCKS OF EVERY KIND

Charming Light Materials Are Offered for Afternoon Wear During the Warm Weather.

Very charming materials are shown for afternoon frocks for the warm days, in a great variety of weaves, colors and design. Pretty voiles with white or putty colored backgrounds have large dots in a contrasting color. Another voile comes in the old-fashioned Dolly Varden patterns worn by our grandmothers when styles similar to our own were in vogue. The new tiled checks are seen in all colors, and are quite smart, as well as practical for tub frocks. White cotton eponage in fancy weaves is suitable for skirts or suits. Lovely fancy organdies and nets in all-over designs come in the darker shades. Heavy noncrushable linens in colors which make useful suits for a small boy or girl are inexpensive. A great variety of ramie linens may be had one yard wide. Sheer French crepes for blouses or frocks are embroidered in Dresden designs.

Attractive Japanese crepes in various light shades make pretty tub dresses, practical for the grown-ups as well as for the younger members of the family, as they are easily laundered. Another quality of crepe to be had in stripes and other designs is suitable for tailored skirts. Good quality wash silks for shirts or frocks are 30 inches wide.

IN NATURE OF A REVIVAL

Costume Retains Best Lines of Old Style With the Newest Ideas of the Moment.

In the old "pelisse" style: A model in blue serge. Made like an old-fashioned "pelisse," this model is carried

Hour for Stout Women.

Now is the time for the stout woman to rejoice, for, indeed, her hour has come at last. No longer will she have to look on in helpless envy while her slender sister frivols around in wide, graceful circles. She will never have to sit silently by and watch the conquest of the beach carried off by a clinging vine. The worm has turned at last, and the "sturdy oak" type of woman can rest assured that her martyrdom is over. The spring styles prove conclusively that the narrow belt has come to stay.

WOODWARD INSTITUTE

Lind, who from apparent failure had drunk of the cup of fire and their names still lived. "To us it matters not how deep or wide the stream but of eternal moment is the cup which we dip into that stream. Until death one holds the cup of his own fashion."

"The trouble is, life is full of moral illusion and it is difficult to distinguish between God's cup and the cup of the witches. The Godless cup of humanism out of which the bottom has dropped."

Dr. Hamilton then spoke of the modern idea of culture, saying that sometimes that comes from graduation. "Culture is not efficiency. I much prefer the Japanese idea of culture to that of the Gertmans."

At this point Dr. Hamilton caused a ripple of laughter as he told how while a student at Berlin he had frightened Emperor William when he ran in front of his horse. He held a book in his hand but the Emperor thinking it a bomb drew back, "If we will hold to the Book, America can hold its place without fighting."

"Yet I hold to culture. Culture is that which teaches young men and women, and makes them capable of holding their own wherever they be. The life training out of which has dropped the sky line never make young men and women pure and holy." All through this life we come to the angel of the desert who says 'Drink, Drink and wisdom shall grow in your heart. If you turn from the cup of fire to the cup of witches you are turning from the cup of life. No matter what we may accomplish the end will be tears. Just when life seems to be collapsing the angel of the desert says, 'Drink and the memory of life shall return. I have finished the work that has been given me to do, now glorify thou me.'"

AIMS OF THE INSTITUTE.

At the conclusion of the address Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, chairman of the Board of Managers in presenting the diplomas, departed somewhat from his usual custom and used the occasion to make a general statement concerning the aims and ideals of the school. He said:

"Under the will of the founder, he said, "Woodward Institute can never become, either in form or substance a mere department of the public school system of Quincy. It is a separate and independent education institution with its own traditions and ideals to maintain.

"Its paramount purpose is to help Quincy born girls to fit themselves for life, whether they wish to equip themlesves for earning a living, to prepare for college, or to gain proficiency in those things which will make them useful in the home. In fulfilling this purpose it will, to the extent of its financial ability offer such general and special courses of instruction as may be required. It is greatly to be desired that the school may deserve and gain the confidence of the community to such a extent that through its graduates and friends, it may receive such additional endowment as shall enable it to increase, from time to time its capacity for usefulness.

"No institution such as this stands still for very long. It either goes forward or dies. Loyalty to its fundamental ideals is the condition of its continued existence.

"But the school has done only a part of its duty when it has helped its students to do something worth while. A far more important mission is to help them be something worth while. No amount of specialized training, however efficient, can be a substitute for character. We are having ample proof today that without firmly established moral ideals, practical efficiency becomes self destructive. And all history shows that the only permanent support for moral ideals is a vital religious faith.

It is evident that, in devoting to the activities of this school the results of a lifetime of earning and saving, the founder fully realized this religious need when he placed the control of instruction in the school in the hands of the settled ministers of Quincy, of all denominations. It is obvious that he relied upon them both for that devotion to duty and that broad catholicity of spirit which should enable them to lay aside sectarian differences and to maintain, as a background to the instruction of the school, those fundamental principles which, in a Christian land are broadly recognized as Christian ideals.

"This is a field in which, of necessity, no particular rules can be established and no definite tests can be applied. But none the less it is highly important that every one connected with this school shall realize the need of positive religious convictions and thorough going consecration in our work.

"The most dangerous tendency of our time, which threatens to undermine the sanctity of the home and the progress of civilization, is the growing dominance of selfish individualism in our social relations—a disposition to disregard public duty in the pursuit of private pleasure. Any sympathy with this spirit on the part of any of us, either expressed in our words or implied in our actions, must weaken to that extent the power of our school to fulfill its highest duty, viz., the duty to surround the lives of these girls, committed to our care, with an atmosphere of vital and vitalizing religious faith.

As chairman of the board, and expressing its undivided thought and purpose, I urge you all who hold dear the welfare of this school, that while we go to country, lake or forest to mountains or to seashore, to enjoy a summer's rest and to recuperate our forces for another year of work, we use this opportunity to look through nature up to natures God, to renew the springs of moral purpose, and to gain profounder convictions of the eternal verities of life."

Mr. Hudson then turned to the graduating class and conveyed to them in a few words the thought that upon them rested the greatest responsibility of all, namely the duty to exemplify, all through their lives, the noble ideals of the institution of which they were now to become alumnae."

The Cubs, the leaders of the West Quincy, Twilight league, defeated the Hinkies in a very tightly contested game Wednesday evening which was not decided until the final inning. The score at the end of the fifth inning was 10 to 6 in the favor of the Cubs. The Hinkies came to bat in the sixth and started a batting rally and drove over the three runs with only one out. Al. Desmond, the star first sacker of the Quincy High school team, came to bat against his brother "Chick" who struck him out making the second out. Joe. Desmond another brother and a Fore River star, then came to bat and he also fanned, settling the game. The final score was 10 to 9.

QUINCY MAN TAKEN PRISONER BY GERMANS

Malcolm Gillis Writes Wife He Is Well Treated

Confined in a German prison, a captured member of an enemy force, Malcolm Gillis of the Irish Fusiliers of Canada, has written his wife who lives at 5 Liberty square, this city, that he is receiving good treatment.

The family learned of it when Mrs Gillis received a card six weeks ago which cleared up the mystery surrounding the whereabouts of her husband, who was reported as among the missing. The fact that he was a prisoner become generally known Thursday when the Canadian office furnished the information to the newspapers.

Gillis left Quincy three years ago for Canada. He went to Vancouver and when the war broke out he enlisted. The battalion to which he was assigned spent the great part of the winter undergoing a system of training and about Easter left for European territory. Gillis is thought to have been captured in the first engagement in which the battalion participated.

RECOVERS AFTER SERIOUS ILLNESS

George Abele, a well known musician of Braintree is at his home on Taylor street after a serious illness of several weeks. He is now convalescent.

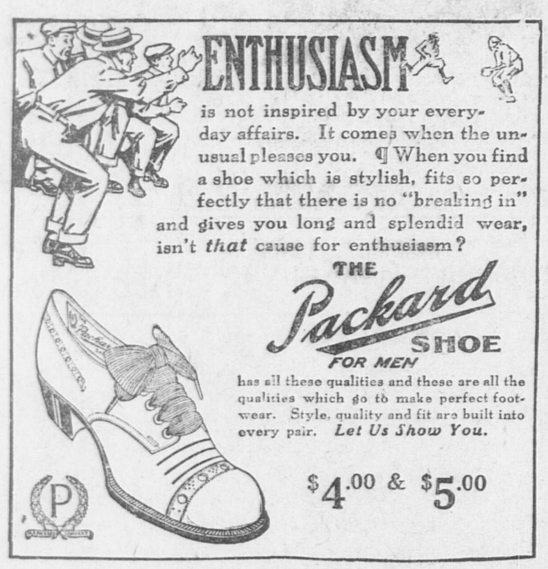

Abele was stricken a month ago with cerebral meningitis. He was removed to St. Elizabeth's hospital, Brighton, but little hope was held out for his recovery because the disease is usually fatal. The Dr. Fleixner serum obtained through research at the Rockefeller Institute was administered and the young man responded well to the treatment and was soon out of danger.

Abele since childhood has been a musician. As a mere boy he started piano lessons and is now considered one of the best accompanists in theatrical circles. When stricken he was pianist and organist at the Modern theatre, Boston.

DISPENSARY TO OPEN TUESDAY

The Board of Health has extended an invitation to the members of the City Council, the physicians of the city, the presidents of the several Women's clubs of the city, and those directly connected with the work of the Associated Charities of the city to attend the opening of the new Quincy Dispensary, Tuesday evening in Room 1, Durgin & Merrill Block between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock.

Under a recent law the city is obliged to establish and have in operation a dispensary by the early part of July. The matter was brought to the attention of the City Council and an appropriation for the work was provided for in the supplementary budget which was passed last Monday evening.

The dispensary will be in charge of a nurse who will be present at all times and of a physician. They will probably be appointed at a meeting of the Board of Health to be held this evening.

POOR DEPT. AUTO TO BE LETTERED

At the time the automobiles owned by the several departments of the city were painted that of the poor department was not in the list, a fact which caused some comment. However, according to a statement by Mayor Campbell, this is not to be excluded The reason that it was not painted with the others was that there was not time enough to do it that day Saturday, however the poor department machine will receive its letters of gold.

There will be one expection to the general rule however, and that is that the words "Overseer of the Poor" will not be painted on the sides but simply the words "City of Quincy."

There is a good reason for omitting these words. It not unfrequently happens that the car is used to take some person to the state or local poor farm, and these unfortunates would feel that the attention of the world was called to their condition if the car was labeled "Poor Department."

AUSTRIAN SUFFER LOSSES.

(By United Press)

Petrograd, June 25—Russian troops in South East Galicia inflicted heavy losses on the Austrian troops attempting to cross the Geneisse. The war office admitted that at a certain point the Germans succeeded in crossing but declare that at other points they were thrown back across the stream in great confusion. The war office also claimed the Russian retreat from Lemberg is continuing in orderly fashion.

YALE TAKES FIRST BLOOD

Wins Second Varsity Eight Oared Race

(By United Press)

New London, June 25—Yale drew first blood in the annual Yale-Harvard regatta today, the Blue crew winning the first event, the second varsity eight oared race, by half a length. The official time was Yale 10m 40s; Harvard 10m 42s.

The race was a neck and neck struggle up to the last quarter. Weather conditions and water combined to make a perfect setting Both shells took the start cleanly. Yale slightly led at the mile and the Crimson increased their stroke and for a time evened things up. It was on the last half mile that the Blue forged ahead by a beautiful sprint, running the stroke up to 38. Both crews finished strong

The Yale-Harvard eight oared race, scheduled for 10.45 was postponed. The committee announced the event would be rowed after the senior event this afternoon. A stiff breeze from the south west blew up and on that account the officials made the change. The main event will probably be delayed until after five o'clock, providing it is necessary to wait for the usual dying down of the wind near sunset.

CHEERED ALL ALONG LINE

President Gets Ovations on Way to Cornish

(By United Press)

Greenfield, June 25—Pres. Wilson, en route for a vacation at Cornish, N. H., got a rousing reception all along the line today. He slept until late and early morning crowds respected his desire for quiet, but after Springfield he went to the platform where crowds greeted him at every station.

Flowers and handshakes were passed at Holyoke where the factories and buildings were hung with flags and decorated with bunting. A crowd of Toronto students on another train gave him three rousing cheers. He will meet Mrs. Jesse Wilson Sayre at Cornish.

It was said the president briefly read the British note on shipping before leaving Washington. There was no announcement as to his views on the document.

GERMANS ATTACK WITH GAS BOMBS

(By United Press.)

Paris, June 25—With fiery liquid and asphyxiating bombs the Germans violently attacked the French trenches on the Meuse near Calonne. The battle raged all day yesterday and at midnight the enemy attacked in large forces. The first assault drove the French from the row of trenches they captured several days ago. The French troops retired in good order when the position was streamed with liquid fire.

The attack was renewed at midnight. The French lighted the grounds with illuminating bombs and searchlights and turned machine guns on the charging columns. The Germans were caught in a deadly cross fire and retreated with heavy losses. An official communique from the war office this afternoon reported that two German attacks along the Loraine frontier had been repulsed.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR ENJOY BIG OUTING THURSDAY

Play Baseball And Sit Down To Fine Dinner

Nearly every commandery of Knights Templars throughout the state observed St. John's Day Thursday in some form, most of them by an excursion. Quincy commandery, in keeping with the general custom, held its celebration at King Philip's Tavern, Middleboro, and a day of rare pleasure it proved to be to the 125 Sir Knights and ladies who participated in the outing.

The trip from Quincy and return was made by automobiles. The party left Quincy shortly before 9 o'clock, each automobile flying pennants which served to inform the natives along the line that something was doing. Not only were the automobiles tagged but each of the Sir Knights and ladies wore a properly labeled blue ribbon badge.

King Philip's Tavern was reached after an hour and a half ride through a delightful country, over a state road nearly the whole distance, nicely oiled and therefore free from dust.

EM. SIR JOHN MORGAN
Chairman of Committee in charge of outing.

A few minutes after arrival George Cole and John Whitehead, the committee on sports, were busy measuring off distances in the field and making ready for the sports. The referees were Mayor Campbell and Em. Sir Walter E. Piper.

The first event was a fifty yard dash, run in two heats. Moses Brown was an easy winner in the first heat and Jake Peterson carried off the honors for the second heat. The final heat between Messrs. Brown and Peterson was won by the genial commissioner of public works. The stop watch used was not rapid enough to take the time. Next in order was a twenty-five yard dash for the fair guests and this was won by Miss Marion Mitchell. Miss Mitchell received a bar pin in recognition of her fleetness of foot while Mr. Brown received a pair of silver cuff links.

The next event was a twenty-five yard spoon and peanut race for the women and Mrs. George Cole won by a good margin. She was awarded a hat pin. Then there was a spoon and peanut race for the men. During this event it was claimed that Jake Peterson held his thumb over the peanut and that someone stole one of John Conway's peanuts so the race was run over again and this time Oscar S. Sandberg was the winner and received a stick pin.

Mrs. Cole and Mr. Sandberg ran a third race to see which was the swiftest. Mr. Sandberg appeared to be a winner when someone got in his way delaying him just enough to bring Mrs. Cole in a winner. A potato race for women was also won by Mrs. Cole who received a pencil and that for men by Arthur B. Hillman who received a knife. The three-legged race was won by Arthur B. Hillman and James Christie and each received a shirt stud.

Then came the piece-de-resistance: A ball game between Quincy and Wollaston. The Quincy team was captained by George B. Dexheimer and the Wollastons by Arthur B. Hillman. The line up of the two teams was as follows:

WOLLASTON		QUINCY
Brown	c	Dexheimer	p
Brokaw	p	Peterson	2b
Cole	1b	Sandberg	1b
Chase	2b	Duncan	ss
Fay	3b	Winslow	rf
Hillman	ss	McKenzie	cf
Christie	rf	Stone	lf
Musgrave	cf	Westland	3b
Hanson	lf	Litchfield	c

An effort was made to get Mayor Campbell to act as umpire behind the bat but he wisely shook his head, and said "I guess not, I know my business." Then James Treadway said he was not afraid of any of the bunch and he took his place behind the catcher with his hands full of rocks with which to keep account of the strikes and balls. J. S. Swingle was supposed to be the umpire on the field but his eyes were fixed in another direction most of the time.

UNIFYING QUINCY.

The Quincy High school Alumni association, which has just closed its first year, has possibilities of great service to the city. There are many things which an organization of this kind can do but the most important service which it can undertake is in the welding together of a community lamentably separated.

Most of the faults with which Quincy has been charged can be reduced to one; a lack of civic spirit. As we have remarked in this column before a city government is no better and no worse than its electorate and for the shortcomings of the various administrations which Quincy has possessed the people have only themselves to blame. The various shortcomings denote a lack of civic spirit for if this were present the people would contenance nothing but the best.

Quincy has become a city of factions, partly due to its geographical position. West Quincy South Quincy, Quincy Centre, Quincy Point, Wollaston, Atlantic and Squantum are all working for their own little district and the men and women of ability and the inclination to serve who have at heart the good of the city as a whole are few and far between.

The Alumni association is composed of graduates of the High school, that is to say, of men and women from every section of the city. If the association can get these people to work together they may become imbued with a spirit of cooperation which will find expression in a real civic spirit.

The opportunity is there. Whether or not it is seized, whether or not the association achieves real success, depends largely upon the character of the officers. President Lucien Thayer of Wollaston, the founder of the organization, through whose untiring efforts the past year has been so successful, has set a standard. President Thayer is a Wollaston man. His successor, President-elect McGilvray comes from West Quincy. Mr. Thayer's declination to serve another year was partly influenced by his feeling that it would be better for another section of the city to be represented in the chief office of the association. We believe that Mr. McGilvray should make an excellent president and we have every confidence that under his administration the work of unifying Quincy, begun under Mr. Thayer, will be carried on with success.

THE SALEM FIRE.

A year ago today the City of Salem was scourged by a fire which in the property loss inflicted was the worst this state has suffered since the great Boston fire of 1872. The Chelsea fire of 1908 destroyed property valued at $6,000,000, the Salem fire's toll was $10,000,000. It was a terrible disaster but Salem arose nobly to the occasion and within the year great progress has been made in building a bigger and better city. The terrible calamity also has had a beneficial effect upon the political life of the city and Salem today has a better government than it had a year ago.

It often seems as if calamities were inflicted by a higher power to awaken a civic spirit which had lapsed into a comatose condition. From the Galveston flood sprang the commission form of government, which Dr. Charles W. Elliot and others contend is the best form of government for small municipalities. Let us pray that Quincy will not need so terrible a lesson to awaken its citizens to a sense of their responsibility to the community.

AN EXPLANATION.

In an editorial entitled "Collect Back Taxes," which appeared in Thursday's Ledger, it was stated that the report of the city treasurer and auditor for May issued this week showed that the total tax levy of $928,512.71 for the year 1914 only $224,865.18 had been collected up to May 1 of this year. This statement was correct so far as it went but the intimation that $225,865.18 was the total amount collected was not correct. The statement of the city treasurer and auditor contained only the amounts collected this year and gave no account of $492,652.35 collected in 1914. This leaves the amount of the 1914 tax still uncollected, $197,716.20, due account being taken of abatements.

In the appointment of Robert Lansing as Secretary of State for the United States President Wilson appears to have been influenced by a qualification apparently not considered in the selection of the late lamented incumbent, namely fitness for the duties of the office.

The case of Aviator Harry M. Jones is a beautiful example of what law makers sometimes do, or rather do not do. It was unlawful to fly without a license but no provision was made for granting licenses of this character.

Huerta-Blanquet-Diaz - Mondragon conferring in New York. Surely a notable quartet. So notable that we hesitate to intrude with the thought that the United States may be serving as a base for future war operations.

KEEP THE MILK COLD.

The city consumer of milk can greatly aid the dealer by cleaning and returning promptly every bottle received. The bottle should be washed in clear, warm water, then in very hot water, and stood wrong side up in a clean place to dry. This, done by the housewife, is particularly a saving when the dealer or dairyman operates only a small plant and does not have the outfit for rapid cleaning. When milk is left in bottles to get sour or to putrefy, it adds to the dairyman's cost for cleaning them, and the same is true when a little milk is allowed to dry in the bottle, especially in the angle around the bottom.

Another way in which the consumer can cooperate is by quickly removing the milk from the doorstep or porch where the heat from the sun is likely soon to affect it. The farmer and the dealer, if they have done their part in keeping the milk cold, can not be held responsible if the consumer fails, immediately upon receipt of the milk, to put it into the refrigerator. A few hours' exposure to the summer heat soon brings the temperature up to above 50 degrees F., where the bacterial content increases rapidly. The department's experts advise keeping the milk, as much as it is practicable, in the original receptacle in which it is received, and at a temperature of between 40 to 50 degrees F., thus aiding in keeping down the great summer waste caused by the souring of milk before it can be used.

JUSTIFIES HER CARGO SEIZURES

Britain Assumes Blockade Is a Military Necessity

HAS FAVORED UNITED STATES

Claim In Memorandum Which Is Not a Reply to Our Protest Against Order-In-Council as an Invasion of Rights of Neutral Commerce—Another Note to Be Sent

Washington, June 25.—In a memorandum received from the British government through Ambassador Page, it is represented at considerable length that United States commerce has been specially favored under the blockade established some time ago under orders-in-council.

The memorandum recites at length the efforts to minimize inconvenience to neutral commerce resulting from the order-in-council against trade against Germany, Austria and Turkey, and asserts that American citizens have no just grounds for complaint on account of the treatment accorded their cargoes.

No attempt is made to answer the principles asserted in the American note of March 1 protesting against the order-in-council and insisting upon the right of neutrals to carry on legitimate commerce with each other and to trade in non-contraband with civilians in belligerent countries. In transmitting the memorandum, Page said it was "merely an explanation of concrete cases and the regulations under which they are dealt with."

The British government seems to assume that the blockade against Germany is a military necessity, and the memorandum is intended to show the special consideration extended to United States shipping in the effort to minimize to the utmost the inconvenience to American commerce.

Another note to Great Britain is now in course of preparation at the state department, and is expected to be dispatched as soon as the negotiations with Germany over submarine warfare have been cleared up.

While this communication probably will make reference to the latest memorandum, it is understood that the manner of enforcing the order-in-council will not be treated as relevant to the question at issue—whether there is any warrant in international law for the powers that Great Britain and her allies have assumed to exercise over the commerce of the world.

In its memorandum the British foreign office emphasizes the "various special concessions made in favor of United States citizens" in setting forth that all British officials have acted in every case "with the utmost despatch consistent with the object in view, and of showing in every case such consideration for neutrals as might be compatible with the object, namely, to prevent vessels from carrying goods for, or coming from, the enemy's territory."

Arrangements for buying American cotton detained and for permitting the passage of goods bought in Germany by Americans before the date of the order-in-council are outlined and the promise made that consideration will be given to special cases of this kind in the future.

The British government, the memorandum concludes, "are earnestly desirous of removing all cases of unavoidable delay in dealing with American cargoes and vessels which may be detained, and any specific inquiries or representations which may be made by the United States government in regard to particular cases will always receive the most careful consideration and all the information which can be afforded without prejudice to prize court proceedings will be readily communicated; but they can scarcely admit that, on the basis of actual facts, any substantial grievance on the part of American citizens is justified or can be sustained, and they, therefore, confidently appeal to the opinion of the United States government as enlightened by this memorandum."

TAMPERING WITH MAILS

Burleson Issues Order Which Will Tend to Stop Practice

Washington, June 25.—Because of the report that United States mails destined for Norway, Sweden and Denmark and the Netherlands, in transit through belligerent countries, have been opened and censored, Postmaster General Burleson directed that, until further orders, all mails for those countries be sent on vessels sailing direct, and not touching at any port of belligerents.

Direct lines, not touching any belligerent port, are running to all the countries named, and the order will cause no serious delay to the mails.

Burleson has not completed his investigation, it was stated, of reports that mails both to and from this country have been opened by British censors. The investigation was requested by the state department.

MAKING SUGAR.
Ancient As Well As Modern Industry.

The world has had a "sweet tooth" for many ages. People have been eating sugar from time immemorial it would seem, and growing sugar cane is an industry so old that it antedates the Christian era by many centuries. At least that is what we gather from an article by Edward Albes in the May number of the Monthly Bulletin of the Pan American Union, Washington, D. C., which gives a comprehensive account of the cane sugar industry in the Americas, and incidentally embodies an interesting resume of what is actually known of the history of the industry throughout the world from the very dawn of civilization to the present.

"Scientists admit they do not know just where the sugar cane originated" he writes—"for nowhere has it been found in its wild state. It has been a cultivated product for many centuries, and the first mention to be found in written records is in the sacred book of the Hindus. 'I have crowned thee with a shooting sugar cane, so that thou shalt not be averse to me,' was written many centuries before the Christian era. In the train of Alexander the Great during his Asiatic conquests were some observant persons who made notes of what they saw, when not too busy killing off the inhabitants, and in these written documents, according to later writers who fell heir to them, is told the story of 'a reed growing in India which produces honey without bees.' Thus sugar cane was evidently well known in that country before 320 B. C.

"As to the manufactured product of the cane, the first kind of sugar of which mention is made was a concentrated cane juice called 'gur' in India ('gud' in Sanskrit)' and this seems to have been known as a food from prehistoric times. That its manufacture was a well established industry in India in the seventh century is attested by the old Chinese encyclopedia, the Pen-tsao-kang-mu which states that the Emperor T'altsung, who reigned from 627 to 650 A. D., sent some of his people to Behar to learn the art of sugar making. The manufacture of sugar even in the early centuries of the Christian era was not restricted to the mere evaporation of the juice of the cane to dryness for the Arabs and Egyptians had soon learned how to purify raw sugar by rechystallization, and incidentally how to make a great variety of sweetmeats, or candy, out of the product."

The author tells of the introduction of the cane into Sicily by the Arabs in 703, whence it was taken to Africa, to Spain, and all along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, as well as to the islands and borders of the Indian Ocean. The Crusaders found extensive sugar-cane plantations in Tripoli Mesopotamia, Syria, Antioch, and Cyprus, and by the fourteenth century the cane was being cultivated in every part of the known world where soil and climate were propitious.

It came to South America by being introduced into Brazil by the Portuguese, who brought it from Madeira, and thence it spread to nearly all the other countries of that continent. Columbus is said to have brought it to the island of Santo Domingo, whence it spread to Mexico and Cuba. It was introduced into the other islands of the West Indies as soon as they came under European domination. The first sugar cane came to Louisiana by being sent to the Jesuits from Santo Domingo, in 1751, some English authorities giving the date as 1737.

Although practically all of the countries of the Pan American Union cultivate the cane, Cuba is the greatest producer of cane sugar, not only in the western hemisphere but in the world. The total production of the western hemisphere for the 1913-14 season amounted to 4,919,814 tons of which Cuba produced 2,597,732 tons, or nearly 52 per cent. The total cane-sugar production of the world was 9,773,348 tons, and deducting the 2,262,600 tons produced by India and locally consumed, it is seen that Cuba produces nearly 35 per cent of the cane sugar that is available in the markets of the world.

The United States is the greatest sugar consuming country of the world In 1913 its total consumption amounted to 3,743,139 tons including cane, beet, and maple. This is a per capita consumption of 85.4 pounds per annum. Much of this is consumed in the form of candy, over $500,000,000 being spent for that sweet commodity in the United States every year. New York is the largest candy-consuming center in the world, and to supply that city alone it would take five trains of 50 cars, each loaded to the limit with candy, every week in the year if it had to be shipped in on a railroad.

Seven candidates were initiated at the regular meeting of Reliance Rebekah lodge of Wollaston, Thursday evening. There were many visitors present, representing Rebekah lodge at East Weymouth, Quincy, and Hyde Park. Light refreshments were served after the meeting.

AT THE THEATRE

The last performance staged by the Lew Orth Musical Company is at Kincaide's Theater today and tomorrow, and in many ways it is the best show offered by the aggregation. It is called "Cannibal Isle." Many new and popular songs are sung including: Down Among the Sheltering Palms, The Ragtime Cannibal Man, Fatima Brown, and Just A Little Love Just A Little Kiss. Lew Orth and Bert Yorke make two funny sailors who make fun the watchword of the show, Orth taking the part of a German sailor while Yorke takes his usual part of Charley Chaplin. New scenery and new costumes add to the performance.

The new pictures featuring Pearl White have started out with a vim. "The Lost Torpedo" is the name of this adventure and it is a thriller, the clever collie dog playing an important part as he finds the torpedo and then hides it. The intelligence shown by this dog is remarkable, and is well worth seeing. "Love Speed and Thrills" is a comedy film which will bring you to your feet with laughter. The Pathe News has some interesting features including the gymnastic drill of the Chicago school boys on Federal Field and also the Boy Scouts' field day which was held at the Stadium, Cambridge.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

REV. C. E. CAMPBELL IS FORMALLY INSTALLED

Large Number At Impressive Service In Water Street Church

A very impressive service was held Thursday evening at the Water street Presbyterian church when the representatives of Boston Presbytery formally installed Rev. C. E. Campbell as pastor of the church. An enthusiastic audience comfortably filled the auditorium, and after the various speeches of the evening and two splendid selections from the choir and the words were said by Moderator of Presbytery Dr. MacQueen which placed the Presbyterian stamp of approval on what the congregation had already done, the audience filed past Mr. Campbell to give him the hand of welcome. It was a very pleased congregation. One speaker said he had often taken part in such exercises but there were more people out at this installation than any he had ever attended.

The sermon was preached by Dr. Young of Roxbury from the text from the book of Esther, "who knows but that thou hast come to the kingdom for such a time as this." This is a time of excesses. Too much emphasis is placed upon the material and we have our efficient fighting machines, our highly and efficiently organized industrial enterprises and we have somewhat forgotten the spiritual—there is too much hurry and noise to hear the still small voice. Who knows but that the Christian church has been preserved for such a crisis as confronts the world today. Wars, brutality, seared souls, men glorying in killing other men,—surely the church must have a message for such a world.

In closing the speaker impressed upon his audience to try honestly to live the Golden Rule instead of the rule of gold. In the perilous times in which Esther lived she was needed at court to save her people. The church is needed today to save the higher and finer sympathies and enterprises of the human soul. She must assert herself proclaiming the message of the Galliiean, even if this message does mean sacrifice. The way of the cross is the way of victory.

Dr. Todd, a former pastor of the Water Street church was to have been present and give the charge to the pastor, but on account of ill health his physician ordered him to remain at home and so Rev. Mr. Warren of East Boston gave the charge instead. He gave some splendid advise to the incoming pastor and closed with this remark, "Do not forget in the pulpit that you are a man; and do not forget out of the pulpit that you are a minister."

The Moderator gave the charge to the people. He congratulated the congregation upon securing such a fine young man as their pastor. "You have called him to be your leader, now follow him," he urged. "What would happen on the European battlefield if when the officer in charge gave his orders to advance, his soldiers stopped to criticise and argue? No battle could be won in any such way. In your battle against the enemies of the soul you must be ready to fall in line as one and march unitedly to victory. You had a chance to criticise when Mr. Campbell came to you as a candidate, and no doubt you did, but mostly favorably for you united in calling him as your pastor. Now don't begin to criticise. It is no time for such. Every one fall in line and the work will be greatly enjoyed. You had no objections before the marriage so now forever hold your peace."

The Rev. D. B. McLeod of the First United Presbyterian church gave a very enjoyable five minute speech in welcoming Mr. Campbell as a member of the Quincy Ministers' Association. He spoke very highly of the flattering prospects before the Water street church with such a popular man as leader. The services were closed with the Apostolic benediction being pronounced by the formally installed pastor.

WILL NOT SIGN STREET ORDERS

Mayor Campbell when asked if he had put his signature to the orders passed by the City Council for the so called street rebuilding answered in the negative. He said that at the time the street committee made its tour of the city inspecting streets orders and petitions, which had been referred to the City Council, he had probably seen all of them, but that was so many weeks ago he had forgotten, just what their condition was. "It is my intention however, before I sign or refuse to sign any of the orders in question personally to visit and inspect them all," declared his honor.

The orders passed Monday night reached the Mayor Wednesday morning and he has ten days in which to sign them, to veto them, or allow them to become a law without his signature.

LANGELIER HAS NEW OPPONENT

Atty. Kelley of Braintree Said to Be In Field

Supporters of Senator Langelier, a candidate for re-election, are said to be casting eyes toward Braintree where it is strongly rumored that William P. Kelley, an attorney with offices in that town and also in Quincy and Boston, is to go into the primaries this year as an aspirant for the Republican nomination. It is said that the Kelley papers are being circulated and will be filed at the proper time.

The loyal friends of the senator according to inside information expected that there would be no opposition to the present incumbent. Rep "Ken" Nash of Weymouth, who was slated for the primaries several months ago withdrew it is said after a conference with local Republicans and will again run for the house and next year come out for the senate. It was thought that he was the most likely of the possible candidates.

But the Kelly boom will probably be the occasion for a real hot campaign and those living in Braintree, Weymouth and some parts of Quincy say they will support him. This challenge will not pass unaccepted by the Langelier forces who are strongly entrenched throughout the district and it is possible that the Republican contingent is on the edge of as warm a campaign as has been waged in the city.

Charles W. Guy, who was a councillor for a year has taken out papers for the same office and William Murray of Dorchester is also preparing his campaign for the Democratic nomination.

Many Quincy people are interested in the candidacy of J. Paul Canty, a Boston newspaper reporter, who is to run for the House of Representatives from Ward 24. The candidate is well known here. He is editor of the Dorchester Telegram and covers Dorchester for the Boston Journal, Record and Advertiser.

USING JUICE OF MANY BERRIES

Fresh Vegetables Noted In Weekly Market Review

This is the season of fresh vegetables and the local markets are well supplied with all varieties, both native and southern grown, although just at the present time the native grown vegetables predominate. Peas ar the latest of the vegetables to make their appearance in any great amount. There have been a few in the markets during the past week but they have been too high for most people to indulge in. Now, however, even the back yard gardens are producing their supply and they are fine.

The native strawberry has appeared in the markets this week. There is a great abundance of berries in the markets at the present time, most of which were raised in the immediate vicinity of Quincy. They are large, handsome and very tasty and people who enjoy them should make the best of the opportunity to get their fill for in a few weeks at the most they will be gone. Asparagus is fast disappearing. While there is some in the markets at the present time it has apparently lost that delightful taste that characterized it earlier in the season.

As for meats and fish there is but little change. The demand for meats has fallen off considerably while the demand for fish has increased correspondingly. Good catches of ground fish of all kinds are reported and they are as cheap at the present time as they will ever be. Some of the local fishermen have succeeded in catching a few mackerel but they are of course for home consumption. As a rule the local catches are what are known as tinkers which to a great many are preferable to the larger sized variety.

That the juice of currants, blackberries, black raspberries, sour cherries and peaches may be prepared and kept as successfully as grape juice and by the same methods, has now been demonstrated in the course of a series of investigations which the United States Department of Agriculture is conducting into the whole complicated question of fruit juices. The juices of the fruits mentioned, it has been found, retain their characteristic color and flavor after being sterilized and stored away and can, therefore, be made available for use throughout the year in households and at soda fountains, etc. In this way it is thought much fruit that has hitherto been allowed to go to waste may be utilized.

For reasons, however, which are not not as yet very thoroughly understood, the various fruits differ greatly in the effects of sterilization upon them. Thus, strawberry juice and red raspberry juice lose their distinctive colors and flavors very readily and, therefore, can not be put up on a commercial scale and marketed as grape juice is. Lemon and orange juices also undergo peculiar changes in flavor after sterilization and no satisfactory method of overcoming this obstacle has yet been developed. Lemon juice is the more promising but this, too, can not yet be manufactured commercially with success.

With certain precautions, on the other hand, pineapples can be made to yield a sterilized juice of a very attractive flavor which should have distinct commercial possibilities. The juice, however, should be kept in cold storage at from 32 to 35 degrees Fahrenheit after sterilization, and most of the suspended material should be removed by means of a milk separator or by filteration. Moreover, where atmospheric oxygen is not excluded in the process of bottling, the juice darkens gradually.

These studies have already resulted in the discovery of a method producing concentrated apple juice by freezing which is not only easier to ship than ordinary cider, but which will keep much better. In the concentrated juice, however, the presence of sugar and acid retards the growth of microorganisms and fermentation is very slow.

Similar methods are now being tried out with other fruits. In the case of grape fruit juice, for example, concentration to a sirup by freezing is easily accomplished and it appears at the present time that there are great commercial possibilities in this method although further experimentation is considered necessary. In the case of fruits whose juices do not suffer any change of flavor or color in the process of sterilization, this method is not likely to prove necessary.

Details of the experiments with a discussion of the effects upon the various fruits of sterilization, exposure to atmospheric oxygen after sterilization, storage at low temperatures, etc., etc., are contained in a new bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture, No. 241, Studies on Fruit Juices.

SPORTING COMMENT

Real fans agree with City Clerk Crane who told the Quincy High school Alumni association Wednesday evening that sport should not be commercialized. Support is spontaneous from an ardent fan and the city is filled with them. But, they haven't had a real excuse for several years to boost High school athletics. The base ball team has just completed a "weary" season.

It must have been the way some players acted and it was no secret that not a few, toward the end of the season, thought donning a uniform a lot of trouble. One branch of the sport however brought glory to the school and each member of the tennis team deserves more than the school letter. Undefeated by school teams and recognized as a real contender for the state championship is the final summary. And by a coincidence the game at school,got its start from "Dick" Crane, son of the speaker.

Old Ward two, where to he a real Pointer one must have been a whittler (and to have been a whittler means one who helped cut away the bridge with jacknives) is going to spread itself in its observance of July 4th. Every facility nature can give is at their disposal, even to the water and the Town River Yacht club is responsible. No wonder they are enthusiastic in the success to be measured out to them. Contributions from the people their friends, are doing it. Excitement runs high and none find fault because they censored the City Council by declining to make them special guests for not appropriating something for a city affair.

Gridley Bryant's base ball team has been challenged by the champion school team of Revere. Let the game be on. Frankly, we are so interested in proper development and believe it starts in the right place when commenced in "kid" days, that we see the boys play in preference to the semi-pros. And we rather think we won't he alone at the game, eh?

English as she is spoken—"We thank you muchly" said a fan after getting the score at a recent game.

Allan Connor of this city, who wears the colors of the North Dorchester A. A., has two cross countries ahead of him. One at Hopkinton and one at Fitchburg.

George Sullivan who suggested a cross country run under the Board of Trade auspices started his athletic career at Adams Academy. Then he did jumping and running. Later he became a dark man and as such took his share of the prizes as a member of the B. A. A.

Fay Phelan continues improving and ere long will be released from medical care.

Dr. J. P. Murphy and "Al" Carey of the post office are in camp at Medfield. John A Duggan and Joseph M. Larkin expect to join them for over Sunday.

The boat races are now holding the center of the stage and Harvard is picked as a winner over Yale, so sayeth the mermaids.

THREE RED SOX TO BE GUESTS

Three members of the Red Sox will be among the special guests at the field day of St. John's parish to be held on the parish school grounds on July 3rd. The affair will be under the direction of a general committee which expects to complete its plans at the meeting tonight in the school hall.

The affair will be the first open air party held since Fr. Michael J. Owens became pastor of the parish and there is wide cooperation between all of the members to make the affair successful. Several parties preliminary to the event have been held and more are to take place.

On Monday evening of next week a whist party will be held at the home of Mrs. M. E. Cook at 26 Adams street and on Wednesday evening a whist party will be held in the hall of the parish school under the auspices of the Quincy Point table.

The plans for the table of the Children of Mary, the girls society of the parish, were completed at a meeting on Monday evening. Mrs. R. T. Foye and Mrs. Margaret Mahan will preside at the table.

A regular meeting of the School Committee will be held next Tuesday evening at which time the Board will consider the plans for the proposed new sixteen room school buildings at Quincy Point and Norfolk Downs.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

The ball used was about the size of a croquet ball and somewhat softer than the ordinary ball used. This kind of a ball was used for several reasons. First so that the tender hands of the players might not become so mangled that they would be unable to use knives and forks at the dinner, and, second because there was but one ball and the committee did not care to take any chances of having it lost in Lake Assowampsett, a half mile away, for it was feared that some of the strong armed old timers would get their muscle up especially as they were playing with the fair guests as spectators, and hit the sphere a swipe that would cause it to cover the necessary distance.

When the burlap bags, which were used as bases had been filled with dirt from a nearby potato patch, the umpire called the game and the score said "Brown at the bat." Pealin down to his negligee Moses grasped the bat and made ready to swat the ball. The first time he hit it he missed it. The second time he hit i he missed it in the same place he hi it the first time. "Two strikes shouted the umpire. "Put them ove the base" shouted Moses as he took firmer hold of the stick. One cam straight over the home plate. "Thre strikes and striker out," cried th umpire and Brokaw went to the bat He scored as did also Cole, Chase Hillman and Christie before the sid was out, having placed five runs t its credit.

Quincy came to the bat full of confidence and determination to make those five runs look sick but Peterson was the only one to score. Harry Winslow felt very much disappointe that he did not have an opportunit at this time to show his skill at th national game, and he was visably affected as he meandered back to righ field. Thus the game went on.

It would require page after page t tell of all the brilliant plays and thos that were not brilliant. Ex-Mayo Stone distinguished himself with som good stops and by allowing the b ball to roll through his legs severa times. Wild throws and fumble were too frequent to record and was these more than anything el that contributed largely to the de feat of the Quincy's, although some one was unkind enough to remar that the wire mask that Catche Brown wore caused Quincy to ge a little rattled. Just why Brow should wear a wire mask and pe sist in being nearly on his knee while in the catchers box no on seemed to understand but he himse and he would not tell.

When Harry Winslow got a chanc to show what he could do, h grasped the bat and proudly took hi position at home plate, as much a to say, "See what a big boy am I. He made several unsuccessful at tempts to hit the ball and at last succeded in hunting it. The ba rolled a few feet, was thrown t first and Harry was out before he ha covered half the distance.

After the first inning Wollaston ra up its score fast shutting out Quinc several times. In the last half o the sixth Wollaston scored eight run bringing their total up to 22. Quin cy played the first half of the sevent and got another goose egg, and the the bottom fell out and the game wa over, with the score 22 to 8 in fayo of Wollaston.

The scorer started in to keep a rec ord of brilliant plays and errors, es pecially the latter, but they came s thick and fast that his pencil poin was soon worn to a stub, and ther was no chalk handy to keep accoun on the varnished sides of the automo biles. However it might be sai that while Wollaston made the mos runs it also made the most errors The account, as far as the score keep er was able to tell, showed 199 error for Wollaston and 99 1-4 for Quincy The fourth error was that of Jak Peterson when he gave first basema Cole of the Wollaston some back talk when he called him out.

The score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
Wollaston	5	3	0	2	4	8		22
Quincy	1	0	2	2	0	8	0	8

In the meantime some of the party had gone to the dance hall at the tavern where an orchestra was playing lively music and a few indulged in some of the modern dance figures. A young Iwongn cabaret singer also entertained with a number of selections. That the party might not get too hungry before dinner was announced the management placed a delightful lunch on a table on the lawn.

At 2 o'clock a line was formed on the ball field and the party marched to the tavern for dinner. The tables were set on the broad glass enclosed piazzas and it was not many minutes before the hungry party were busy with knives, forks and spoons. The dinner was a most excellent one well cooked and well served, the menu including Steamed Clams, Celery Bisque, Olives, Radishes, Bread, Broiled Live Chicken Lobster, Broiled Chicken, French Fried Potatoes, Lettuce, Cucumber and Tomato Salad, Ice Cream and Cakes, Cream, Roquefort and Edam Cheese, and Coffee.

During the progress of the dinner there was music by the orchestra and singing by the cabaret girl. As a wind up for the dinner each lady in the party was presented with a box of Lowney Chocolates and the Sir Knights with cigars.

Em. Commander Morgan then presented the prizes as mentioned, with exception of the base ball team. To each member of the winning team was presented a small broom, emblematic of a clean sweep.

It was not intended to have any speech making but the Emminent Commander called upon Mayor Chester I. Campbell, John T. Conway of the Street Railway Co., Ex-Mayor Eugene R. Stone and Em. Sir. Arthur W. Stetson, all of whom spoke briefly. Mayor Campbell said that he did not come to the outing to speak but to run away from a bunch of street orders sent to him by the City Council without any appropriation while Sir Knight Conway said the less anyone talked railway business on an occasion like this the better he liked it. Ex-Mayor Stone and Mr. Stetson also spoke briefly, but no one heard what they said.

Before leaving the table, for that was about all there was to leave when the party got through, a vote of thanks and three cheers and a tiger were given to Commander Morgan. It was intended to have dancing after dinner but so long a time had been spent discussing the many good things placed before them that this was given up. As the clock struck the hour of 5 o'clock, the automobiles pulled out headed for home and Quincy was reached without a mishap at 6.30 and the St. John's Day outing of 1915 had taken its place in the history of the many good times held under the auspices of Quincy commandery No. 47, K. T.

WARNED AGAINST FAKE COLLECTORS

Persons without authority have been canvassing Ward Two for subscriptions to the fund being collected to pay for the monster celebration to be held here in observance of Fourth of July. It is reported, and a warning has been issued that no money should be given to anyone not armed with the proper paper, bearing the signature of George I. Jacques, treasurer of the Town River Yacht club which has fostered the affair.

Most of the collectors are known to the residents of that section and the report came as a big surprise. The collectors who begun their work several weeks ago have increased the fund to a good amount but are exerting themselves in the final moments to secure all that will be necessary to sustain the big program arranged.

The bon fire to usher in the event will be the only one in the South Shore district and will be touched off by Mayor Campbell. The material has all been contributed and collected and massed on Pin Cushion island. During the observance the club house will be open to contributors.

The collectors have a box of buttons and with each subscription give a button to the person chipping in. It is reported by the committee that the fake collectors have no buttons.

Commodore Joseph Carruthers is president of the general committee of arrangements, W. C. Luther is secretary and George H. Jacques is treasurer. The executive committee consists of these officers and H. R. Holmes, Allan MacGeachie, W. G. Newcomb and William Caldwell. The chairman of the sub-committees are: William H. Flynn, athletics; Joseph W. Pinel, bonfire; Rev. Stephen C. Lang, children; George H. Jacques, fireworks; James Brooks, water sports; Councilman Charles B. Yule, program; T. B. Crane, regatta; Peter M. Sullivan, press; W. C. Caldwell and C. G. Foster, house committee; Commodore Carruthers, reception.

The women of the Quincy Riverside club have joined the men in making preparations for the day. Their work has been devoted ot the children under the direction of Rev. Mr. Lang.

AUCTION BRIDGE PARTY.

Mrs. Joseph L. Evans of Edgemere road gave a delightful auction bridge party Thursday afternoon. Six tables were in play. Miss Catherine Johnson had the highest score and was awarded a pretty silk parasol. Mrs. James M. Nowland was second and received three lovely handkerchiefs. Mrs. Soley was given a bunch of sweet peas as a consolation for having the lowest score. An effective feature of the refreshments was the ice cream served in the shape of miniature warships flying the United States flag. The house was filled with flowers; pansies, peonies and roses in abundance.

LAST MEETING OF HOSPITAL AID

The June meeting of the Hospital Aid Association, and the last meeting until September was held Thursday with Mrs. Paul R. Blackmur of Elm street. The work of the afternoon was sewing bandages and coverings for hot water bottles. There was a very large attendance for the June meeting and the members had the pleasure of welcoming Mrs. Charles Spear.

At the business session it was voted to appropriate sufficient money to provide a flag for the City Hospital. Mrs. Blackmur also reported that she had taken up the matter of placing signs on the streets leading to the Hospital with Commissioner Brown and the street signs would be put up immediately.

During the afternoon Mrs. Blackmur, Mrs. Sturtevant and Paul Blackmur entertained with vocal selections. Light refreshments were served. The next meeting of the association will be held Thursday Sept. 30, with Mrs. Arthur A. Townsend, 27 Avon way.

MOSS COVERED TRICK WINS

The Blue Hills took the Commons into camp Thursday evening in a game which was not decided until the final inning. The final score was 4 to 3. In the final inning the Commons started a batting rally and landed men on first or second when the "Hide the Ball" trick was pulled on "Bunt". Dunn on second and settled the game.

Thomas twirling for the winners fanned eleven batters and got 3 safe hits.

FIGHTING TYPHOID.

Are you a federal employee? This question can be answered in the affirmative by over 400,000 persons, the largest army of employees which can be mustered in the land. They comprise a most intelligent, efficient, and representative group of citizens, individuals who have attained prominence in their respective communities and who are looked to for advice. Yet for every month of the coming year, six of these people will die unnecessarily of a disease which is absolutely preventable. That disease is typhoid fever. The annual toll from this single group of workers will be over seventy lives. Can you afford to take the chance of being one of the seventy? Think it over and decide.

Under order of February 12, 1915, Secretary of the Treasury W. G. McAdoo designated 164 stations of the Public Health Service in the United States where the preventive treatment may be administered. Whether you work in Ketchikan, Sheboygan, or Washington, is immaterial; the treatment is at your call and without cost. The inconvenience is slight, the dangers negligible, and the immunity fairly permanent. Reckoning the period of immunity as four years, and basing the calculation upon what has already been accomplished, compliance with the Secretary's offer would result in saving the lives of 300 people and at least ten times that number from periods of invalidism.

The danger season for typhoid is now here. The vacation period is especially apt to bear a definite relation to the development of the disease and the days which should be complete with joy and pleasure are marred by disease and death. The means of infection are numerous, and flies, milk, polluted water and contaminated food products are all factors, so that control is difficult to exercise. No matter how faithful and efficient your health officer may be, and regardless of the funds at his disposal, he cannot altogether relieve you of the dangers of the disease. Vaccination will, however, accomplish this.

Already hundreds of Federal employees have availed themselves of this opportunity to be treated. The crews of all lighthouse vessels are now immune, and likewise the civil employees of the Engineering Corps of the Army. Treatment should not be delayed by those who wish to avoid the dangers of the summer season.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

He rose uneasily. "It's all mighty risky business, and it's my fault. I should never have permitted you to start on this trip."

"Don't you worry about me, daddy. I'll pull through somehow. Anybody that knows me will understand how little there is in—in old lady Belden's gab. I've had a beautiful trip, and I won't let her nor anybody else spoil it for me."

Wayland was down on the bridge leaning over the rail listening to the song of the water.

McFarlane approached gravely, but when he spoke it was in his usual soft monotone. "Mr. Norcross," he began, with candid inflection, "I am very sorry to say it, but I wish you and my daughter had never started on this trip."

"I know what you mean, supervisor, and I feel as you do about it. Of course none of us foresaw any such complication as this, but now that we are snarled up in it we'll have to make the best of it. No one of us is to blame. It was all accidental."

The youth's frank words and his sympathetic voice disarmed McFarlane completely. Even the slight resentment he felt melted away. "It's no use saying 'if,'" he remarked at length. "What we've got to meet is Seth Belden's report—Berrie has cut loose from Cliff, and he's red headed already. When he drops on to this story, when he learns that I had to chase back after the horses and that you and Berrie were alone together for three days, he'll have a fine club to swing, and he'll swing it, and Alec will help him. They're all waiting a chance to get me, and they're mean enough to get me through my girl."

"What can I do?" asked Wayland.

McFarlane pondered. "I'll try to head off Marm Belden and I'll have a talk with Moore. He's a pretty reasonable chap."

"But you forget there's another tale bearer. Moore's daughter is with them."

"That's so. I'd forgotten her. Good Lord, we are in for it! There's no use trying to cover anything up."

Here was the place for Norcross to speak up and say, "Never mind, I'm going to ask Berrie to be my wife." But he couldn't do it. Something rose in his throat which prevented speech. A strange repugnance, a kind of sullen resentment at being forced into a declaration kept him silent, and McFarlane, disappointed, wondering and hurt, kept silence also.

Norcross was the first to speak. "Of course those who know your daughter will not listen for an instant to the story of an unclean old thing like Mrs. Belden."

"I'm not so sure about that," replied the father gloomily. "People always listen to such stories, and a girl always gets the worst of a situation like this. Berrie's been brought up to take care of herself, and she's kept clear of criticism so far, but with Cliff on edge and this old rip snooping around"— His mind suddenly changed. "Your being the son of a rich man won't help any. Why didn't you tell me who you were?"

"I didn't think it necessary. What difference does it make? I have nothing to do with my father's business. His notions of forest speculation are not mine."

"It would have made a difference with me, and it might have made a difference with Berrie. She mightn't have been so free with you at the start if she'd known who you were. You looked sick and kind of lonesome, and that worked on her sympathy."

"I was sick and I was lonesome, and she has been very sweet and lovely to me, and it breaks my heart to think that her kindness and your friendship should bring all this trouble and suspicion upon her. Let's go up to the Moore camp and have it out with them. I'll make any statement you think best."

"I reckon the less said about it the better," responded the older man. "I'm going up to the camp, but not to talk about my daughter."

"How can you help it? They'll force the topic."

"If they do I'll force them to let it alone," retorted McFarlane, but he went away disappointed and sorrowful.

When the supervisor returned from the camp something in his manner revealed the fact that the situation had not improved.

"They forced me into a corner," he said peevishly. "I lied out of one night, but they know that you were here last night. Of course they were respectful enough so long as I had an eye on them, but their tongues are wagging now."

As bedtime drew near Settle took a blanket and went to the corral, and Berrie insisted that her father and Wayland occupy the bunk.

Norcross protested, but the supervisor said: "Let her alone. She's better able to sleep on the floor than either of us."

This was perfectly true; but, in spite of his bruised and aching body, the youth would gladly have taken her place beside the stove. It seemed pitifully unjust that she should have this physical hardship in addition to her uneasiness of mind.

Berea suffered a restless night, the most painful and broken she had known in all her life. She acknowledged that Siona Moore was prettier and that she stood more nearly on Wayland's plane than herself, but the realization of this fact did not bring surrender. She was not of that temper. All her life she had been called upon to combat the elements, to hold her own amid rude men and inconsiderate women, and she had no intention of yielding her place to a pert coquette, no matter what the gossips might say.

"She shall not have her way with Wayland," she decided. "I know what she wants—she wants him at her side tomorrow. But I will not have it so. She is trying to get him away from me."

The more she dwelt on this the hotter her jealous fever burned. The floor on which she lay was full of knots. She could not lose herself in sleep, tired as she was. The planks no longer turned their soft spots to her flesh, and she rolled from side to side in torment.

Her plan of action was simple. "I shall go home tomorrow and take Wayland with me. I will not have him going with that girl; that's settled."

The hard trip of the day before had seemingly done him no permanent injury. On the contrary, a few hours' rest had almost restored him to his normal self. "Tomorrow he will be able to ride again." And this thought reconciled her to her hard bed. She did not look beyond the long, delicious day which they must spend in returning to the Springs.

She fell asleep at last and was awakened only by her father tinkering about the stove.

CHAPTER XI.

The Camp on the Pass.

As soon as she was alone with her father Berrie said, "I'm going home today, dad."

"Going home! What for?"

"I've had enough of it."

He glanced at her bed on the floor. "I can't say I blame you any."

"Oh, I don't mind sleeping on the floor," she replied. "But I want to get back. I don't want to meet those women. Another thing, you'd better use Mr. Norcross at the Springs instead of leaving him here with Tony."

"Why so?"

"Well, he isn't quite well enough to run the risk. It's a long way from here to a doctor."

"He 'pears to be on deck this morning. Besides, I haven't anything in the office to offer him."

"Then send him up to Meeker. Landon needs help, and he's a better forester than Tony anyway."

"I don't know but you're right. Landon is almost as good a hustler as Tony and a much better forester. I thought of sending Norcross up there at first, but he told me that Frank and his gang had it in for him. Of course he's only nominally in the service, but I want him to begin right."

Berrie went further. "I want him to ride back with me today."

He looked at her with grave inquiry. "Do you think that a wise thing to do? Won't that make more talk?"

"We'll start early and ride straight through."

"You'll have to go by Lost lake, and that means a long, hard hike. Can he stand it?"

"If I find we can't make it I'll pull into a ranch. But I'm sure we can."

When Wayland came in the supervisor inquired, "Do you feel able to ride back over the hill today?"

"Entirely so. It isn't the riding that uses me up, it is the walking, and, besides, as a candidate for promotion I must obey orders—especially orders to march."

They breakfasted hurriedly and while McFarlane and Tony were bringing in the horses Wayland and Berrie set the cabin to rights. Working thus side by side, she recovered her dominion over him and at the same time regained her own cheerful self confidence.

"You're a wonder!" he exclaimed as he watched her deft adjustment of the dishes and furniture. "You're ambidextrous."

"I have to be to hold my job," she laughingly replied. "A feller must play all the parts when he's up here."

AMUSEMENTS

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

It was originally intended and announced that David Belasco's powerful play, "The Woman," would follow Edmund Breese in "The Spendthrift," at the Majestic Theatre, Boston, next week, but the management was bombarded with so many urgent requests from patrons of the Lonergan Players, who are conducting a summer season of stock at this theatre, for a second week of Mr. Breese in order that he might be seen in "The Master Mind," in which he achieved such great success in the stock season last summer at the Majestic, that Mr. Lonergan prevailed upon him to remain for another week.

This play, the principal character in which is a master criminal, has an appeal to men and women of every class. It is a thrilling tale of crime, politics and romance, with just the proper element of suspense to hold the attention of its hearers until the last moment of the final act. Indeed, there have been few plays of recent writing in which this element of suspense is better sustained, for there is not a problem in the entire four acts but is puzzling to the audience impossible of solution and most absorbing throughout. Not until the very last scene of the final act is the outcome revealed, and to the credit of the author, Daniel D. Carter, he has written a plausible denouement, allowing love and romance to win out against intrigue and hatred.

PARAGON PARK, NANTASKET.

Never before in its history has Paragan Park, with its renowned palm garden and far-famed cabaret and dansants, been so popular as this season. The management's policy of introducing each year some new feature of a high standard has been mainly responsible for the continued success of this unrivalled seashore resort. The new feature this year, the Musical Revue from Broadway presented by twenty-five show girls, which comprises the cabaret is a new departure in this field of entertainment and has already become immensely popular with the patrons. This dual entertainment holds forth every evening from 6.30 to 8.30 and from 9 to 11.15.

Many free attractions are offered to patrons of the Park including Albers 8 trained polar bears, the monkey mansion, hourly band concerts by Macy Gay's Military band, firework displays every Wednesday and Saturday evenings and the Italian Illumination Sunday nights. Patrons will find ample time to enjoy all the attractions at the Park as there is a boat back to Boston as late of 10 P. M.

TREMONT THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's great film spectacle of the Civil War and Reconstruction times, continues to be the only great theatrical attraction open to New England playgoers throughout the Summer. It is being presented to enormous houses at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, twice daily except Sundays Although the run began on Friday, April 9th, and has proceeded uninterruptedly, the interest and enthusiasm are as great as ever. The unreasonable opposition to the play, however, has mostly disappeared. It is recognized that it depicts good and bad characters of both the white and negro races. The showing of the carpetbagger and negro excesses during the Reconstruction period is counterbalanced by the marvellous depiction of the colored man's progress since Reconstruction, particularly by the films showing scenes at the Hampton Institute. The question of the producer's right to present "The Birth of a Nation" has been pretty thoroughly settled by this time. Not only did the three Boston censors created under "The Birth of a Nation" bill pass the play, but the Courts in Chicago have authorized its presentation and it is now running in the great Western city as well as in New York and Boston. It is calculated that, since February when Mr. Griffith's drama was introduced to the public, three quarters of a million persons have seen it.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Max Figman, one of the most popular comedians on the stage, will make his picture debut at the Boston Theatre, New England's roomy, airy, refreshing picture palace, the week of June 28, in "My Best Girl." This is a picturization of the musical comedy in which Clifton Crawford starred a couple of seasons ago. Caroline B. Nichols and the Fadettes have become a permanent feature of this great playhouse, with concerts afternoon and evening before the regular picture programme. There will be new Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford comedians, and the eighth instalment of "The Goddess," the great serial by Gouverneur Morris, which has the whole country talking, will be shown with Earle Williams and Anita Stewart in the principal roles on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday only. There will be other features as yet unannounced too numerous to mention, and in line with the established policy of the Boston Theatre in offering the best, the very best, and nothing but the best in the motion picture world. The show runs continuous from ten a. m. to ten-thirty p. m.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"The Yellow Ticket," a powerful drama of Russian life, will be presented next week at the Castle Square Theatre by the Craig Players. The play was written by Michael M. Morton, and Florence Reed starred in it last year with overwhelming success. The yellow ticket is a card given by the Russian police to women who earn their living in the streets by accosting men. Maria Varneka, a young Jewish girl, has to accept one of these cards from the police for it is the only way she will be allowed to leave the Jewish settlement to go to her dying father. With this card in her possession she is free to live where she chooses. She changes her name and becomes governess to an English girl. How the police track her down, how a high official promises protection and then attacks her, how she kills him to save her honor and how she is finally extricated from her difficulties, makes a play that is thrilling and absorbing in its plot and action.

B F. KEITH'S.

Elizabeth Brice and Charles J. King, the bright shining stars of "Watch Your Step," the greatest success of the season at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York City, will make their vaudeville debut at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week in a bit of musical comedy done in a vaudeville way. Miss Brice was formerly one of the stars of Ziegfield's "Follies," while Mr. King, the brother of Mollie King of Winter Garden fame, is one of the cleverest light comedians on the stage today. The big comedy feature of the bill the week of June 28th will be offered by Billy McDermott, the sole survivor of Coxey's army, and one of the funniest tramp comedians in the world. McDermott's impersonations of Sousa and Creatore, the scourge of Italy, as McDermott terms him, are two of the brightest characterizations ever offered in vaudeville. Other features will include Frederick V. Bowers and his company in bright smiles and bright songs, a short revue with a half dozen scenes; Jane Connolly and her players in the one-act comedy, "A Strong Cup of Tea"; Seven Colonial Belles, from the days of 1776, with a sextet of expert musicians and a soloist, will offer a novel musical production

LAST WEEK OF THE POPS.

The fifth and last week o fthe season of Pop concerts in Symphony hall, Boston opens Monday evening, and for the remainder of the season Clement Lenom will be the conductor. The season, although short, has been extraordinarily successful. The average attendance has shown a decided increase over any year in the past and judging from the attitude of the audiences the concerts have given their usual satisfaction. Ernst Schmidt, the new conductor, has become a favorite and shows that he is decidedly well fitted for the place. Mr. Lenom, who succeeds him, has ended up the Pop season for the past two years and made many friends. One of the interesting things about having different conductors during a season is that each conductor has his own peculiar style of programme and thus a pleasing variety is given to the different weeks. Mr. Lenom is this year, as last, particularly happy in his choice and arrangement of pieces. According to the custom started last year the last Wednesday evening of the season, will be "Request night." It is interesting to see the number of patrons who send requests to Mr. Lennon for their favorite pieces showing the hold the Pops have on their public. As a matter of fact the programme of one request night does not differ from another to any great extent for it always contains time-tried favorites. This year we note as special features. Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," the Meditation from "Thais," the Spanish Rhapsody of Chabrier, the "Riensi" Overture of Wagner, Schubert's "Ave Maria" for solo harp and organ, Rubinstein's "Reve Angeilque," the "1812" Overture of Tschaikowsky, the "Beautiful Blue Danube" of Strauss and the Rosary of Nevin played as a cornet solo by Mr. Heim. For extra pieces Mr. Lenom promises Offenbach's "Barcarole," Handel's "Largo" and Dvorak's Humoresque."

The final night July 3, will be "Patriotic night" and this has as attractive a program as "Request night."

MISSING LINK HALF FINISHED

The extension of the boulevard, known here as the missing link, under construction by the contracting firm of John Cashman and Sons Co. is rapidly nearing completion. That part which runs from Hancock street to the point on the Mt. Wollaston farms where it will pass over a steel bridge and across the meadows is about 50 per cent finished.

Pony engines transport small cars over narrow gauge tracks its entire length and from Park avenue to Hancock street the line follows the bend of the creek and looks like a double "S".

The deep cut on the Mt. Wollaston farm has been made with the aid of a steam shovel and filling is carried from there and from parts of the Adams estate to the deep hollow a short distance away.

Nearly 100 workmen are employed. The contract calls far a subgrading which when completed will be available for use. No provision has yet been made for the surface.

SCHOOL GRADUATION.

Grammar School Pupils Receive Diplomas Tonight.

Graduation exercises of the grammar schools of the city will be held this afternoon and evening at which time 488 pupils will receive their diplomas for having completed the course. In the majority of cases the graduations will be held at 3 o'clock. Those of the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields schools however will be held this evening.

In connection with the graduations there will be an innovation this year. For the first time in the history of grammar school graduations the girls will wear simple dresses, largely white, which were made by their own hands. They were not allowed to take the work home where the mothers or older sisters might have aided them but were obliged to do all the work during school hours.

Quite a number of the girls who will graduate will wear their graduation gowns at confirmation Saturday at the Sacred Heart church, Atlantic.

The number of graduates by schools is as follows: Adams, 27; Atherton Hough, 14; Coddington, 54; Cranch, 29; Gridley Bryant, 25; John Hancock, 28; Lincoln, 31; Massachusetts Fields, 43; Montclair, 21; Quincy, 40; Washington, 44; Willard, 89; Wollaston, 52.

SAY NEPONSET LIQUOR LICENSES ARE GRANTED

Boston Licensing Board Has Not Made Its Official Report

The applications of W. N. Hackett & Co., for a second class license at 443 Neponset avenue, and D. P. Power & Co., for a fourth class license at 406 Neponset avenue, were granted Friday by the Licensing Board of the City of Boston, according to information which reached here from apparently authentic sources today. Immediate steps will be taken to commence operations according to the reports.

The applications were filed in April and became generally known when the legal notices of the Licensing Board appeared in the Dorchester "Beacon." With the appearances of the notices came a storm of protest. It started in Quincy and gradually found its way to the territory to be affected.

Prominent local men through the Ledger gave their views for opposing the granting of the applications and Mayor Campbell informed the board that this city would like to be heard before final action was taken. Supporting him were the Council which passed a resolution opposing the grants and appointing a committee.

On the afternoon of June 15 representatives of Quincy and Neponset made their protest at a public hearing given at the request of the mayor. Appearing with him were President Whiton of the Council and Councilman Smith, City Solicitor Pinkham, Senator Langelier, Representative Ericson, President Edward J. Fegan of the Board of Trade, Rev. A.L. Hudson of the First Parish church, Treasurer Sedgwick of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation Melville P. Hayward of Bethany Church and Secretary Gaskell of the Y. M. C. A. In addition there were many Neponset residents.

Quincy based its protest on the fact that the present arrangements in Neponset were sufficient. It was not argued that Neponset as far as population goes was not entitled to more licenses but that it was the first wedge driven by the liquor interests to prey on the trolley passengers who will be obliged to transfer at that point. The proponents favored the licenses because business would be benefited they said and the district would be the gainer.

In an interview with a representative of the Quincy Ledger the Mayor declined to discuss the matter, although he acknowledged that he had been asked to meet the Commission Friday. The Mayor intimated that he was disappointed at the action of the Licensing Board although he said that as a matter of courtesy he could not officially state its decision until they made it public.

THE WEATHER.

George F. Field of the United States weather bureau at Providence, R. I., is in town for a few days visit with his relatives, and some of his friends have been unkind enough to say that before leaving Providence he arranged for the heavy thunder shower this morning so that his arrival in Quincy might be announced in due form. "Pete," as he is familiarly known stoutly disclaims having anything to do with it and says that if he had been on his job he would have sent the storm somewhere else so as not to frighten the picaicers of the First Parish Sunday school, which he attended as a boy.

The probabilities are that Sunday will be pleasant but that Monday will be unsettled and warmer with light variable winds.

EVELYN THAW TO BE WITNESS

(By United Press.)

New York, June 26—Evelyn Nesbit Thaw is to be an important witness for the state in the Harry K. Thaw insanity trial, Deputy Atty. Gen. Frank Cook announced today. The sudden change in the plans of the state are made necessary by the evidence presented by Thaw's attorneys, Cook declared.

The state attorney said he believed Mrs. Thaw is in New York and not in Chicago as he had previously been told and his detectives are in search of her. While Justice Hendricks, before whom Thaw is being tried, held no session today both sides were busy on the case.

GERMANS DEFEND USE OF GASES

(By United Press.)

Berlin, by wireless, June 26—An official statement defending the use of asphyxiating gas bombs by the Germans was issued today. The government first makes the point that the French and British armies used gas shells many months before the Germans adopted that method of attack.

The statement further declares that the German's aim in using gas was simply to drive the enemy from his trenches and that the slow approach of a gas cloud made it possible for the enemy troops to flee. In this connection it is pointed out the enemy flooded trenches in Flanders driving the Germans out and the war office declares there is no difference between the use of gas clouds and water.

CHILDREN OF THIRTEEN GRAMMAR SCHOOLS OF CITY RECEIVE DIPLOMAS AT GRADUATION

Two Hundred and Sixty Boys and 228 Girls Receive Diplomas at Simple But Impressive Exercises

The thirteen grammar schools of the city on Friday afternoon and evening held their annual graduation exercises and awarded diplomas to 488, 260 of whom were boys and 228, girls. The total is four larger than last year. The Willard school heads the list in number of graduates, sending out 80.

Michael Crowley of the Gridley Bryant school, the pitcher of the champion nine of that school who contributed largely to its capture of the world championship, was loudly applauded when he advanced to receive his diploma.

Dr. N. S. Hunting, for years prominent on the School Committee, left early Friday afternoon with the Harvard Unit and so was unable to present the diplomas to the graduates of the Cranch school over which he has jurisdiction as chairman of the sub-committee for that school. His place was taken by Dr. William G. Curtis.

The most striking feature of the graduation were the dresses of the girls, each girl graduate being obliged for the first time in the history of the city to make her own dress. Simplicitywas the rule and guide of the amateur dressmakers but they lost nothing in attractiveness on that account.

Taking the graduates as a whole it is found by statistics made up at the office of the superintendent of schools that the age of the youngest graduate is 12 years and 1 month and the oldest 17 years 9 months the average age being 13 years 5 months. The 281 who graduated without conditions are all to go to secondary schools. Of the total 358 are to enter the High school, 53, the Woodward Institute, 32, the Industrial schools and 14, other schools.

With the exception of the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields schools the graduation exercises were held in the afternoon beginning at 3 o'clock. It was impossible, however, owing to the rapidity with which the schools are growing to hold a general graduation at which all of the graduates should be present as was formerly the case. Therefore, the graduations were held in groups.

The Atherton Hough, Coddington and Washington school exercises were held in the Coddington school hall the pupils being seated on the platform.

The exercises opened with a march —"Marche des Troubedours" during which the graduates marched in from the side rooms. Each of the pupils wore a bow of the school color, and by keeping this in mind the audience were able readily to distinguish between the different schools. The graduates of the Atherton Hough schools wore bows of electric blue, the Coddington, light blue and the Washington crimson.

The program at the Coddington school hall differed somewhat from the other schools for in addition to the singing by the school, there was a declamation, "The American Republic" by Vincent A. McCabe of the Atherton Hough school, recitation "Flowers" by Catherine E. Merigan of the Coddington school and declamation "Happiness and Liberty" by John P. Flavin of the Washington school, all excellently rendered. The singing by the schools was exceptionally good. Thomas B. Pollard, master of the Washington school, was the director of the chorus and Miss Helen M. Lincoln was the accompanist.

There was a brief address by Dr. E. H. Bushnell, chairman of the subcommittee of the Washington school, who also presented the diplomas to the graduates of that school. The diplomas to the graduates of the two other schools were presented by a member of the sub committee of each school.

The statistics of these schools are:

Atherton Hough, youngest 12 years, 11 months, oldest, 16 years 6 months, average 14 years 7 months.

Coddington, youngest, 12 years, 10 months, oldest, 16 years 7 months, average, 14 years 5 months.

Washington, youngest 12 years 7 months, oldest, 17 years 9 months, average 14 years 7 months.

ADAMS SCHOOL HALL.

The exercises of the Adams and Cranch schools were held in the hall of the Adams school, and after the march and opening chorus there was a brief address by Arthur S. Townsend, master of these two schools.

Alfried O. Diack presented the diplomas to the graduates of the Adams school and Dr. William G. Curtis to the graduates of the Cranch school. Both spoke briefly. The colors of these two schools are Adams, canary, Cranch, Yale blue. The statistics show the youngest graduate of the Adams school to have been 12 years 9 months, the oldest 16 years 4 and the average 14 years. Cranch youngest 12 years 7 months, oldest 16 years 5 months, average, 14 years 1 month.

The music was under the direction of Miss S. Maude Amsden and Miss Rosalie M. DuTemple was the accompanist.

HIGH SCHOOL HALL.

The graduation exercises at the High school hall were by the pupils of the John Hancock, Lincoln and Willard schools, the school colors being, John Hancock, lilac, Lincoln, white, and willard, Nile green. Miss S. Maude Amsden was the director of the music and the accompanist was Miss Martha E. Isaac.

The opening remarks were made by Arthur W. Newcomb, chairman of the sub-committee of the John Hancock and Lincoln schools and there was also remarks by John D. Mackay, chairman of the School Committee. Joseph McPherson, chairman of the subcommittee of the Willard school also made a few remarks in presenting the diplomas.

The statistics of these schools were:

John Hancock, youngest, 13 years, 2 months, oldest, 15 years 10 months, average 14 years 3 months.

Lincoln school, youngest, 12 years 9 months, oldest 15 years 8 months and average 14 years.

Willard, youngest, 12 years 8 months, oldest 17 years, average 14 years 5 months.

WOMEN ENDORSE EQUAL SUFFRAGE

The Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs held the liveliest session in its existence at Marion Friday, when it discussed and went on record in favor of Woman Suffrage, by a vote of 203 to 99.

The vote was taken after two hours debate. The resolution was introduced by Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney of Quincy, chairman of the resolutions committee, in spite of the efforts of the antis to prevent its being brought before the convention. As a final move before the contest, the antis circulated a petition the night before among the delegates asking that the question of suffarge be eliminated from the program.

The fight over the resulotion started about 11 o'clock and the debate was full of fire, although during the most intense moments it was dignified. Several times the antis attempted to prevent the vote being taken by moving to adjourn but this effort on their part was voted down.

Mrs. Ama Lee, one of the two delegates from the Wollaston Women's club present, in speaking of the meeting said: "It was a most dignified meeting in every way. Both sides were very orderly and it was not until the latter part of the debate that the antis got a little sore. The arguments of both sides were admirably presented." Mrs. Lee and Mrs. Charles Comins voted in favor of the resolution.

The delegates from the Quincy Women's club were: Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham, Mrs. George L. Badger, Mrs. W. F. Cummings and Mrs. W. W. Whitcher.

The delegates from the Wollaston Woman's club were Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes, Mrs. Ama K. Lee, Mrs. Charles Comins and Mrs. William E. Rowe.

LAUNCH SUBMARINE AT FORE RIVER

To be Delivered to Great Britain After War is Over

Another British submarine was successfully launched at the Fore River shipyard at 10.45 this morning. The craft was the second one of the ten built for England for delivery after the war to be launched within a few days.

Mrs. Mary Keith Synder, wife of H. H. Snyder, vice president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., was the sponsor. In the party were officials of the company and their wives. Mrs. Synder carried a large bouquet of roses, given her when she ascended the stand. As the tugs picked up the submarine and towed her to her fitting out anchorage President Powell of the builders presented the sponsor with a daimond necklace set in platinum, with a diamond pendant, the gift of the company.

The craft was to be known as the H-15 but through a misunderstanding she was designated H-12 by the painters and as such she was launched.

The launching party were guests at a dinner party at a Cohasset motor inn after the event.

Mrs. Eric H. Ewartz of Wollaston, whose husband is superintendent of submarine construction at the shipyard will be the sponsor of the boat to be launched next Wednesday.

OUTING JULY 28.

Board of Trade Committee Plans Big Time.

The entertainment committee of the Board of Trade met Friday evening and voted to hold an outing of the Board on Wednesday, July 28. It is planned to take a steamer from Houghs' Neck about 2 o'clock for a little sail about the harbor and a little fishing, landing about 6 P. M. Bass Point, where dinner will be served. Returning the party will leave for home about 10 o'clock for a moonlight sail to Quincy. The outing is for members of the Board of Trade and friends. Fuller details will be announced later.

REPORT TURKS RETIRING.

(By United Press)

Rome, June 26—The Buchawest correspondent of the Messaggero wired today that the Turkish garrison at Adrianople had been withdrawn, probably in anticipation of Bulgarian attack, and that the Turkish forces are retiring to new lines northwest of Constantinople. The report is unconfirmed from any other source.

PIANO RECITAL MUCH ENJOYED

A recital was given by the pianoforte pupils of Frank C. Gilbert Friday evening at his residence on Chestnut street, the affair being attended by the parents and friends of the pupils. Assisting the pupils were Mrs. J. C. Atkins and Mrs. Frank C. Gilbert, both of whom rendered soprano solos.

The several numbers given by the pupils were well rendered, showing the careful training which they had received at the hands of Mr. Gilbert. Opening with two selections by Gertrude Rogers, there were selections by all of the pupils. Piano recitals are apt to be a little tiresome but not so in this case for the numbers were so exceptionally well rendered that they were a source of enjoyment although the program was a long one.

Mrs. Atkins rendered two numbers "The Rosary" and "Jean" and Mrs. Gilbert "O, for the Breath of the Moorelands" and a special number, the program closing with an organ solo by Mr. Gilbert. Refreshments were served by the Misses Hayward.

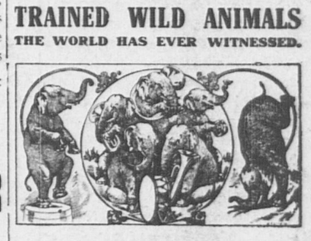

The pupils to take part in the recital were Misses Gertrude Rogers, Emma Arbuckle, Violet Taylor, Pearl Muller, Edna McDonough, Theola Reader, Livia Bianchi, Ellen Wright, Lillian Reader, Louise Hogarty, Helen Muller and Martha Moore.

CLASS ENJOYS TURKEY DINNER

Woodward 1915 Gather at Q. Y. Clubhouse

The Class of 1915 of the Woodward Institute, which graduated Wednesday evening, held a dinner at the Quincy Yacht club house, Houghs Neck, Friday afternoon. For many years the graduation exercises were followed later in the week by a reception and dancing party at Woodward hall. The class of 1915 however varied this program. The class accompanied by nearly the full corps of teachers at the Institute took a car for Houghs Neck at noon and on their arrival were served with a turkey dinner. Following this the party boarded the power boat "Nellie" and enjoyed a sail in the harbor. The afternoon's affair proved to be a delightful one.

FREE GOVERNMENT.

The granting to the English people 700 years ago June 15, of the Magna Charter, seems an event of very distant interest. Yet all through our daily life can be found ideas and principles that date back to this historic occasion . The present generation owes its debt to those who ages ago asserted the right of the citizen against tyranny.

A school boy was asking the other day, about the method of procedure in case a man was arrested for some minor offense. If the offender was seen by the police officer to be clearly guilty, without any question about it, it seemed strange to the boy that he could not be punished without going through with the formality of taking him before a court. Perhaps some grown-ups will think so too.

As the boy grows older he will find running through our life the Magna Charter principle, that no one can be condemned on suspicion or in an irregular or informal way. Every accused person must have his chance in court to prove his innocence, before a jury if he wishes. This and similar Magna Charter principles add to the comfort of living in the United States, and spare us the fussy intrusiveness of many of the older governments. But the individual often abuses this liberty.

The rowdy disturbs the quiet of the streets and public conveyances. When a policeman asks him to keep quiet, he retorts; "This is a free country, ain't it?" The offender in the courts is sheltered by technicalities and formalities. These are the tools with which clever lawyers postpone justice interminably in behalf of wealthy clients.

The criminal, the corrupt legislator, the political boss, the fraudulent contractor, these and others find that the American protection thrown about the individual comes in very handy in their business. There is a growing feeling that the evils resulting from a wide degree of freedom may become almost as serious as those resulting from the tyranny of kings in the old days of the Magna Charter.

SCHOOL GRADUATIONS.

Another grammar school graduation in the city has come and gone. The number of graduates, 488, is impressive. The City of Lawrence with a population of more than twice as many graduated on the same day only 537 children from its grammar schools. It is true that the number of foreign born persons in Lawrence is very large, nearly 50 per cent, but this does not make Quincy's lead any less impressive. Foreigners living here are more appreciative than native born of the value of school training for thir children.

But Quincy has an intelligent population, an educated population, which for the most part has enjoyed the advantages of education and are desirous that their children shall have a similar privilege. It is a further source for congratulation that so large a percentage of the grammar school graduates are to enter secondary schools. The value of education is becoming more widely recognized. Parents realize that the best thing they can give their children is a good education and that the greatest handicap under which they can labor, whatever may be the field of their life work, is the lack of an education.

LEARNING HIS WORTH.

Prof. William Howard Taft of Yale University is to be invited to deliver the principal address at the joint outing of the Republican city committee of Worcester and the Worcester County Republican club. Among the other speakers are Senators Henry Cabot Lodge and John W. Weeks.

Mr. Taft was undeniably an unpopular President but since his defeat for the office in 1912 he has grown steadily in public estimation until now at a political gathering he takes precedence over Senator Lodge, one of the country's greatest orators and statesmen, and Senator John W. Weeks, who has distinguished himself in his brief term in the senate and who has been mentioned as a Presidential possibility.

France, which of all the great combatants in the great struggle for the mastery of Europe has perhaps felt the ravages of war most keenly, yet has an unemployed class today including both men and women totalling only 11 per cent of the population.

Keeping a man's nose to the grindstone doesn't sharpen his wits.

FACING POSSIBILITIES.

Presumably a little, perhaps much, quiet preparation has been going on in army and navy circles of the United States in anticipation of eventualities that might come from correspondence now being conducted.

It would be a criminal blunder and fatal tactical error not to be engaging in a certain amount of introspection at a time when the outlook is so grave as it is at the present time. Such introspection, to be followed by swift, quiet activity, would not mean war; far from it. It would be merely a reasonable precaution which any nation of the world however peace-loving, would find imperative and would not neglect. Therefore, it is certainly to be expected that the United States government is paying due attention to all the major and minor details that crop up at a juncture of the present sort.

No report of activity has come out in the public press; and it is just as well that such report should not come out. The people of the United States depend upon the alertness of their officials in the several departments. What is more, they insist on it.—Exchange.

State Prosecutor Says Architect's Name Will Be Clean When Trial Ends—Belief In Thaw's Sanity Is Expressed by Several Witnesses From New England

New York, June 26.—The name of Stanford White will stand clear before all the world before the pesent Thaw trial is concluded, declared Deputy Attorney General Cook.

"I am prepared to prove," said Cook, "that White was never the beast which Evelyn Nesbit painted him. I am prepared to prove she played Thaw against White for financial gain. Almost after a decade of vilifying, his name will be clean when this trial ends."

To do this, he declared, Evelyn's life, from the time she left her Pittsburg home as a girl of 13 years for the night life of Broadway, will be bared. Cook asserted he would prove by her early life that White didn't have to "seduce" her, as has been alleged in previous trials.

Cook hopes to prove by this that the story which Evelyn told Thaw of her relations with White did not cause Thaw's act, as he knew long before that Evelyn was not the innocent girl she claimed to have been when she met White.

Cook believes this new version of the White-Evelyn story shows that Thaw was suffering from paranoia long before he met Evelyn, and still is afflicted with it.

Many of the facts he will use, Cook said, were obtained from Harry Nesbit, Evelyn's brother.

John B. Stanchfield, Thaw's chief counsel, had several more New England witnesses testify. They were people he had met during his two years' sojourn in New England, following his escape from Matteawan. They all testified to their belief in Thaw's sanity.

It became known that a secret conference was held by Deputy Attorney Generals Cook, Becker, Drs. Austin Flint and Carlos McDonald, the state's alienists, at Dr. Flint's home. Cook refused to divulge anything that occurred at the meeting.

Another feature of the state's attack on Thaw's sanity plea will be moving pictures, shown in open court, of Thaw's actions in the Coaticook, Can., jail, and at Sherbrooke, P. Q., and Concord, N. H. Cook is making the necessary arrangements to have them shown in Justice Hendrick's court and says he believes they will help the state's case.

That Thaw's attorneys had asked the state's lawyers for a postponement of the present trial till fall became known. Thaw wished to be released on bail in order to take a trip to the Panama Pacific exposition before it became hot, but the state would not consider the matter.

Thaw's attorneys expect to conclude their side of the case Monday with the testimony of thre alienist who have examined Thaw. These will be Dr. Mills of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Bancroft of the New Hampshire hospital for the insane, and Dr. Hickling of the government hospital for the insane at Washington. Dr. Streeter, a member of the New Hampshire commission which found Thaw sane in connection with the extradition proceedings from that state to New York, will also testify.

BURIED IN POTTER'S FIELD

Body of Man Who Squandered a Fortune Is to Be Exhumed

Sacramento, Cal., June 26.—Relatives of Thomas King, Yale '93, and scion of a rich New York family, arranged to exhume his body from Potter's field here for shipment east and reinterment in the family plot at Albany.

King died here in January, a pauper in the county hospital, it is reported, after squandering a half million dollars. Miss Mary King, a Red Cross nurse with the British army, wrote to Judge Welsh of Sacramento requesting him to take charge of the transfer of the remains.

MURDERER OF THIRTEEN

Confession In Note Left by Man Hanged In Alabama

Birmingham, Ala., June 26.—Syd Jones, hanged in the county jail yard here, left a note in his cell in which he confessed responsibility for thirteen murders.

Two of his victims were white men, one a railway brakeman and the other a Minnesota deputy sheriff. The others were negroes. Jones in his letter named his victims and added: "I am sorry I missed getting Richard Moore, Sept. 12, 1912. Just one more would have made an even number."

Widow Gets $25,000 Damages

New York, June 26.—Mrs. S. O. Pell was awarded a verdict of $25,000 for the death of her husband, who was killed by a Long Island railroad train which ran down the automobile in which he was riding.

ST. PAUL'S M. E. HAS FESTIVAL

The Mid-Summers Day Festival and Concert given by the men of the church was a grand success in every particular. As the women present are the only ones competent to judge the concert the men are in a very happy mood these days in knowing that they have sanctioned their efforts and given them credit for a very fine entertainment.

The music was furnished by an orchestra composed of American and Swedish members. Charles Chilstedt was the director. They played with great effect and it seemed the audience would never be satisfied. The numbers played were well suited to the occasion. It is a foregone conclusion that the church will in the near future ask for their services.

The lecture Man's Position in iLfe versus that of Woman's" was given by Rev. Karl Selin of Brockton. It was an interesting lecture dealing with the social aspects of life relating to men and women . The speaker brought out very forcefully the arguments why women should have equal rights with men commercially, politically and socially. If women get equal right the saloon is doomed, graft and rotten politicians must depart, the public schols will be benefitted, the wages of women will increase, children better protected from alluring evils on every side, women will be a power for good in the social world.

The Male Quartette of the church, composed of the following members: Fred Peterson, Elmer and Richard Carlmark and Herbert Carlson, never sang with more feeling and harmony. Mr. Walborg Peterson is the popular leader of the quartette. Every one knows that the Swedish people can sing and sing well.

A. F. Gustafson the aged veteran well known and beloved by many friends in Quincy and elsewhere gave a very interesting speech. His topic was: "Reminiscences of Boyhood Days and the War of '61-65." As the time did not permit Mr. Gustafson to go into detail his speech was not long, but what he said contained many valuable truths. It was edifying and uplifting to hear the elderly brother.

S. Ellison gave a violin selection accompanied on the piano by a member of the orchestra Fred Manly. It was well received.

The other numbers on the program were well rendered.

The women were somewhat amused to know that the men required the help of Mrs. Alide Lagergren with the refreshments. Mrs. Lagergren did her part well.

The proceeds are to be used for the painting of the church.

COMMITTEE MEETS.

The committee in charge of the approaching festival of St. John's parish met at the parish school Friday evening but because of the length of the program were unable to complete the arrangements. Another meeting will be held Sunday afternoon. Several parties to be held throughout the week were announced—a whist party at the home of Mrs. M. E. Cook, of Adams street, a candy sale on Wednesday afternoon in the school hall by the Children of Mary and a whist party in the same hall in the evening by the Quincy Point committee.

DISTRICT COURT.

Gerado Cecilli, 148 Liberty street pleaded not guilty this morning to a charge of selling cigarettes to minors. He was fined $25 and appealed. Patrolman Doran was the complainant.

Antoinette Rica of Weymouth, charged with assault and battery, secured a continuance of her case to July 31.

Walter P. Hamblin of Hyannis was ordered to pay $20 for violation of road rules. Park officers alleged he cut a corner on Atlantic street and caused a collision with another auto.

Rev. George M. Bailey, pastor of Wollaston M. E. church is ill with sciatic rheumatism at Swans Isalnd, Maine.

Little has been heard of late in regard to the erection of the garage on the C. H. Porter estate. The property has passed into the hands of the new owners but it is understood that nothing definite has been done. The latest report is that the old Porter house will be moved along Hancock street, adjoining the house of Dr. E. H. Bushnell, and will be thoroughly remodelled.

Running from Adams to Hancock streets will be a garage which will be located over the Metropolitan sewer. This is to be a first class building in every respect, and if built as the owners promise it will in no way be a nuisance.

Just south of the garage it is now proposed to erect a two apartment brick house and south of this will be a one story store.

The demand for small apartments with good sized rooms and moderate rentals has induced William R. Lofgren to erect at 35 Revere Road a four apartment house. The house is bungalow in style with two apartments on each floor, two in the front and two on the rear. Each of the apartments has four good sized rooms and a bath and all are steam heated, an individual steam heating plant being placed in the cellar for each apartment. Between the front and back apartments is an eight inch brick wall and the doors connecting are metal with metal castings. The chimneys are also clay lined. In fact everything possible has been done to make the apartments absolutely fire proof.

PINK PREDOMINATES AT BIG CHURCH WEDDING

Miss Muriel Badger Marries John E. Booth of Burlington, Vt.

A brilliant church wedding took place at the Wollaston Baptist church Friday evening when Miss Muriel May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Judson Badger, and John Edward Booth, son of Col. and Mrs. Edward Judson Booth of Burlington, Vermont, were united in marriage by Rev. Joseph Walther, pastor of the church.

At eight o'clock to the strains of Lohengin's wedding march, William Ellis Weston organist, the bridesmaids came down the aisle and met the bridal party. The bride entered with her father who gave her in marriage. The ceremony was most impressive, the double ring service being used.

The bride's attendants formed an interesting group before a high bank of greenery and pink roses. Tall vases were filled with pink and white roses and large bunches of pink Killarney roses were tied to the pews with wide pink ribbon. Miss Grace Ray Whitaker, Vassar '14 of North 4Adams the bride's room mate at college was maid of honor. She wore a dainty creation of white net over silk embroidered with tiny wreaths of light-pink and blue roses. The skirt was trimmed with tiny ruffles of narrow blue ribbon and she carried pink Killarney roses.

The bridesmaids were Miss Lurena Phillips of Fall River and Newport Miss Helen M. Childs o fManchester, N. H., Miss Marjorie Donall, Vassar '14, Miss Gertrude M. Morrill of Roxbury. They were dressed in changeable rose pink pussy willow taffata. The skirts were double, with deep scollops over chantiliy lace, two with baby waists of pink net with wired butterfly bows of silk at the back and two with waists of pink tulle with butterfly bows of the same material on the shoulders. They carried large bouquets of pink Killarney roses and maidenhair fern tired with pink ribbons.

The two little ribboners Betty Savage of Cohasset and Eleanor Davidson of Wollaston, niece of the groom, were alike in white muslins with pink sashes and large pink tulle hair ribbons. Miss Leita Briggs of Wellesley, cousin of the bride, the flower girl, was in white voile, made Kate Greenaway fashion and she carried a large basket of pink roses

Adrian St. John of Mattewan, New York, was the best man and the ushers Harry Barker of Montclair, N. J., and Percy L. Davidson of Wollaston, brother-in-laws of the groom; Lowell T. Hayden M. I. T. '07 of Boston, Manning W. Morrill Harvard '09 of Roxbury, Frank E. Griffin and Edward H. Thornton of Burlington, N. H.

The bride looked charming in an exquisite court trained gown of duchess satin with point lace bodice. The satin was used with bolero effect and the lace cleeves were long. The skirt was a deep over-drop on a lace foundation, with a point lace flounce across the front. The tulle veil hung over a watteau plait from the shoulders and was fastened to a Castle cap effect edged with pearls and a spray of orange blossoms at one side. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids.

After the ceremony at the church a largely attended reception was held at 9 Park street. The rooms were most attractively decorated, the color scheme being pink, mostly roses. The mantles were banked with roses. On the dining table were pink ribbons and pink candelabra with a centre piece of pink sweet peas.

Mr. and Mrs. Badger and Col. Booth and Mrs. Booth assisted in receiving, the bridal party standing under a bower of pink roses and greenery.

Mrs. Badger wore white satin with duchess lace and a large deep colored magenta velvet rose on the bodice at the waist line. Mrs. Booth was in light blue brocaded satin trimmed with duchess lace.

The music was by D. A. L. S. club orchestra of Melrose which played on the piazza throughout the evening.

The bride cut her wedding cake and Miss Phillips found the thimble, Miss Childs the button, Miss Blackie the wish bone, and Miss Strong the ring.

The bride as she stood on the stairs scattered her bouquet among the group of young friends, many of whom now cherish the lilies and orchids. Friends covered the young people with white confetti to speed them on their way.

The bride's going away costume was of black faille with white leather trimmings and white feather ruff and she wore a large black hat with white feathers.

The bride gave her brides maids silver chains and pendants of abalone stones; the little girls received bold good luck brooches. The groom gave silver top walking sticks to his best man and ushers.

The wedding gifts were beautiful, there being quantities of silver, cut glass, china, linen, gold pieces and several large checks.

Miss Badger was graduated from Quincy Manson school in 1910 and attended Vassar. Mr. Booth was graduated from Dartmouth 1912 and elected to the Phi Delta Theta. He is assistant manager to his father, Col. Booth, at the Burlington branch of the lumber business of his uncle, J. R. Booth of Ottawa, Canada.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth will be at home after Sept. 15 at 86 Williams street, Burlington, Vermont.

HEALTH SERVICE.

A new Philippine health law, creating a service similar in organization to that of the United States Public Health Service, becomes effective July 1. This legislation povides for a health body, which will have supervision over all matters of sanitation in the Philippine Islands. Probably no greater compliment has ever been paid the U. S. Public Health Service than that of modeling after it the Philippine organization.

The service as contemplated is to consist of a director and assistant, chiefs of divisions, medical inspectors, and senior and junior surgeons. These officers are to be commissioned by the Philippine government, are to hold office during good behavior, and cannot be dismissed without cause. In other words they will be independent in action and entirely free from political influences. All appointments and promotions are subject to physical and professional examinations, and salaries are regulated by length of service.

The administration of the health laws of the respective provinces and all medical, surgical and sanitary work of a public nature, will be supervised by this body. The director of health is to be appointed by the Governor General, the present incumbent, Surgeon John D. Long of the United States Public Health Service, being retained. An advisory council of hygiene is provided, to consist of seven representative members, appointed largely from educational institutions. The salaries of the members are to be merely nominal. Sanitary engineers and technical experts will be employed. For the purposes of administration the provinces are divided into sanitary divisions which may be composed of several municipalities.

Funds for health purposes are to be raised in a most novel manner. Provincial boards and municipalities are required to set aside not less than 5 per cent. nor more than 10 per cent. from their general funds, these amounts to be devoted to sanitation and carrying out the purposes of the act. Balances which accumulate from year to year are to be used for establishing hospitals and benevolent institutions. This forever prevents a niggardly policy in making health appropriations and places the man before the dollar for all time.

The administration of the law will be observed with much interest by officials in this country. The powers conferred greatly exceed those possessed by our own health organizations, and jurisdiction is extended over all matters which have a definite bearing upon physical welfare.

GAVE HIMSELF AWAY.

"Doesn't it humiliate you to have to go through life this way?" asked the sympathetic woman as she purchased a photograph.

"Yes, mam," replied the Bearded Lady. "If it wasn't for the wife and the kids I'd throw up the job today."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

GREAT CLEANUP MADE BY YALE

Defeats Harvard In the Varsity and Freshman Races

HONORS ARE FAIRLY EARNED

Big Race of Day Won by Six Lengths In Upstream Record Time—Energy and Generalship of Elis, Combined With Work of Coach, Cause Undoing of Harvard

New London, Conn., June 26.—Yale banners wave unchallenged from the flagstaffs at New London, for three Yale crews swept the Thames of Harvard rivals.

By six lengths and in the upstream record of 20m. 52s., Yale won the varsity race. By two-thirds of a length and in a most gruelling race, Yale won the second varsity. By fully two lengths, its freshmen beat the Harvard youngsters, and altogether accomplished the greatest rowing achievement that has been Yale's in a dozen years.

Never have such smooth working eights competed over the famous course as those which yesterday sported the Blue. Not a splash or mix-up of any kind could be noticed. Every possible ounce of energy was used, but used wisely, and despite supposed disadvantages and the talked of superiority of the Harvard stroke, Yale's victories were clearly earned.

The greatest race of the day was the varsity contest, where the task of stroking the Eli crew was in the hands of Al Morse, the smallest man ever to stroke on the Thames, who weighs but 154 pounds, and is but 5 feet 7 inches in height, and correspondingly short of body and reach.

Scarcely a rowing follower but what expected the strain would be too much yet the race found him always ready for a spurt, stretching his arms to their utmost to balance the power of his fellow oarsmen and finishing as strong as the rest.

To him and to Coxswain McLane Yale owes much, for it was the latter who generalled the boat, who knew the power he commanded and knew best when and how to use that power.

McLane outguessed the recently unbeaten Kreger, the Harvard coxswain, throughout the entire course. He shot his crew into the lead at the start, and when Harvard spurts were about ended he would call for a spurt from his men, which not only would give Yale its old advantage, but a greater one, and was equally responsible with his crew in bringing Yale's advantage to such a great margin.

A good omen for Yale came early in the day when in the first event the Eli second varsity shell nosed out a win over the Harvard junior boat by two-thirds of a length.

That it was a really good omen was proved when the Eli varsity, which many considered a poorer crew than the Crimson, marched away with the big honors in the afternoon.

That it was an unusually good omen was proved when the Yale freshmen romped in a winner over the Harvard freshmen still later in the day.

The successes of the Yale boats come as a telling honor to Coach Nickalls and the English rowing system, which was overshadowed last year by the fact that Yale's win was so small and statements that the Harvard boat was not handled according to instructions.

There is no question as to the real merits of the crews that competed on the Thames, and the fact that the Yale oarsmen have recently recovered from ptomaine poisoning would seem to make the accomplishment all the more remarkable.

Varsity time by half-miles:

Guy Nickalls, Yale coach, had this to say of the races:

'The Yale crew that rowed today is the best crew that I have seen in America and England. It has done better with the stroke and has improved daily. For a week I have believed that all three Yale crews were good enough to win their races with Harvard, but rowing is uncertain and I did not wish to venture any prediction. All three of the Yale crews did splendidly and deserved to win."

"No!" said papa, "don't disturb me. You can't have it."

"Oh! boo-hoo! boo-hoo!" wailed the small boy.

"Stop; Stop!" cried papa, distracted. "Now, then, if I let you play your drum will you be quiet?"—Normal Instructor.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

SPORTING COMMENT

Mike Brady of the Wollaston Golf club, and Tommy Kerrigan of the Dedham club and an Atlantic boy will line up in the State open championship at the Country club, Brookline, Wednesday and Thursday of next week. They will brush up against a lot of stars. Brady holds the title and will play hard to defend it.

On Monday evening Poehler's All Stars roll the Wardwell five at the Wardwell alleys in the second of a series. Last Monday night Poehler totalled 360, enough to jump his team ahead of the Ross combination by four pins.

Star athletes compete at the Harvard Stadium today in the Eastern tryouts and the winners will be sent to the Panama-Pacific Exposition games in Frisco next month. Among the prominent Boston boys will be Charles Loomis. Dave Caldwell, Ed. Dempsey and Tom Halpin, all of the B. A. A.

The Squantum Yacht club's annual junket takes place Sunday at Peddock's island. A clam bake, games and plenty of good fellowship is programmed.

The Harvard track is in the best of shape. Crossing autos hardly mark it Will it help Ted Meredith beat the record for the 440-yard dash?

Today the Fore Rivers play the Norwood Civic club at Norwood in a Manufacturers league game.

The Bethany team of the Junior Church league practices in the large field near the Scammell shop on Quincy avenue. Percy Jenkins, third sacker on High school second, fills that position.

The proposed game between the champion Revere grammar school base ball team and the Gridley Bryants has not been arranged and it is probable that the teams will not play.

The wireless meet ofe gue.'Lo6dOa
The interclass meet of Quincy High, to have taken place Friday was postponed. The date will be announced later.

Massachusetts Fields, youngest, 12 years 7 months, oldest 16 years, 2 months, average 14 years 5 months.

The musical numbers were the same at all of the graduations, the opening chorus being "Tripping Lightly O'er the Meadows," "Berceuse," "In the Hayfields," The American Hymn," closing with "America."

One of the particularly inspiring features at each of the graduations was the salute to the flag given in unison by the classes. At the conclusion of the exercises the pupils marched out to separate until next September when many will meet again in other schools of the city.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

Howard Denton is driving a new auto.

Charles Tobin of Green street has recently purchased a touring car.

The Pine Point garage, owned by Eliott & Rogers, was the scene of a spectacular fire early Friday morning. The blaze was first seen by passengers on the 11.50 P. M. East Weymouth bound car, and the alarm sounded by Thomas Coleman at 12.05 A. M. Combination One left the house on the second round with Chauffuer Charles Marr at the wheel and two firemen aboard. At 12.09 two lines of hose were laid; at 12.15 the fire was under control, and at 12.25 the recall sounded.

Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Morgan of Standish road are entertaining Miss Bertha Fairbanks.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wolfe have as guests Mrs. Wolfe's mother Mrs. Alberta Potter and niece Miss Lillian Lyons.

Thomas Ash the ten year old son of James Ash of Norton street narrowly escaped serious injury when a wagon owned by H. O. Tutty and loaded with flour passed over his shoulder and upper arm and aeross his legs. The wagon had been loaded at the electric express and being without a horse several schoolboys started to drag it along Athens street to the store. The injured boy was on the shaft and fell, the wagon being carried along by the boys who were unconscious of any accident. He was taken into the engine house by Officer Nash, and attended by Dr. Libbey who found no broken bones.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the K. C. B. C. entertained with a supper and musical program at the Clubhouse Wednesday the committee being the President, Mrs. Mildred Morgan, Mrs. Josie Culley, chairman, and Mrs. Hannah Abbott, Mrs. Grace Walker, Mrs. Hattie Place, Mrs. Lew Miller Mrs. E. F. Hayden, Jr. As usual the capacity of the house was taxed, but King Cove clubites are always good natured and the hunger of 136 guests was satisfactorily appeased Following numbers were given by Philbrook's orchestra, W. G. Philbrook, corner; Mrs. Mary Flint, piano; Oliver Burrell and Will French, violins. Mr. Burrell gave several recitations. Mrs. Alberta Potter made her first appearance as a reader and was well received. Dancing was the closing feature.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

It was still early morning as they mounted and set off up the trail, but Moore's camp was astir, and as McFarlane turned in—much against Berrie's will—the lumberman and his daughter both came out to meet them. "Come in and have some breakfast," said Siona, with cordial inclusiveness, while her eyes met Wayland's glance with mocking glee.

"Thank you," said McFarlane, "we can't stop. I'm going to set my daughter over the divide. She has had enough camping, and Norcross is pretty well battered up, so I'm going to help them across. I'll be back tonight and we'll take our turn up the valley tomorrow. Nash will be here then."

"You're a wonder!" he exclaimed.

Berrie did not mind her father's explanation. On the contrary, she took a distinct pleasure in letting the other girl know of the long and intimate day she was about to spend with her young lover.

Siona, too adroit to display her disappointment, expressed polite regret. "I hope you won't get storm bound," she said, showing her white teeth in a meaning smile.

"If there is any sign of a storm we won't cross," declared McFarlane. "We're going round by the lower pass, anyhow. If I'm not here by dark you may know I've stayed to set 'em down at the mill."

There was charm in Siona's alert poise and in the neatness of her camp dress. Her dainty tent, with its stools and rugs, made the wilderness seem but a park. She reminded Norcross of the troops of tourists of the Tyrol, and her tent was of a kind to harmonize with the tea houses on the path to the summit of the Matterhorn. Then, too, something triumphantly feminine shone in her bright eyes and glowed in her softly rounded cheeks. Her hand was little and pointed, not fitted like Berrie's for tightening a cinch or wielding an ax, and as he said "Goodby" he added, "I hope I shall see you again soon," and at the moment he meant it.

"We'll return to the Springs in a few days," she replied. "Come and see us. Our bungalow is on the other side of the river. And you too," she addressed Berrie, but her tone was so conventionally polite that the ranch girl, burning with jealous heat, made no reply.

McFarlane led the way to the lake rapidly and in silence. The splendors of the foliage, subdued by the rains; the grandeur of the peaks, the song of the glorious stream, all were lost on Berrie, for she now felt herself to be nothing but a big, clumsy, coarse handed tomboy. Her worn gloves, her faded skirt and her man's shoes had been made hateful to her by that smug, graceful, play acting tourist with the cool, keen eyes and smirking lips. "She pretends to be a kitten, but she isn't. She's a sly grownup cat," she bitterly accused, but she could not deny the charm of her personality.

Wayland was forced to acknowledge that Berrie in this dark mood was not the delightful companion she had hitherto been. Something sweet and confiding had gone out of their relationship, and he was too keen witted not to know what it was. He estimated precisely the value of the malicious jarring words of Siona Moore.

That Berrie was suffering and that her jealousy touchingly proved the depth of her love for him brought no elation, only perplexity. He was not seeking such devotion. As a companion on the trail she had been a joy; as a jealous sweetheart she was less admirable. He realized perfectly that this return journey was of her arrangement, not McFarlane's, and, while he was not resentful of her care, he was in doubt of the outcome. It hurried him into a further intimacy which might prove embarrassing.

At the camp by the lake the supervisor became sharply commanding. "Now, let's throw these packs on lively. It will be slippery on the high trail, and you'll just naturally have to hit leather hard and keep jouncing if you reach the wagon road before dark. But you'll make it."

"Make it!" said Berrie. "Of course we'll make it. Don't you worry about that for a minute. Once I get out of the green timber the dark won't worry me. We'll push right through."

In packing the camp stuff on the saddles Berrie, almost as swift and powerful as her father, acted with perfect understanding of every task, and Wayland's admiration of her skill increased mightily.

She insisted on her father's turning back. "We don't need you," she said. "I can find the pass."

McFarlane's faith in his daughter had been tested many times, and yet he was a little loath to have her start off on a trail new to her. He argued against it briefly, but she laughed at his fears. "I can go anywhere you can," she said. "Stand clear!" With final admonition he stood clear.

"Goodby!" he called. "If you meet Nash hurry him along. Moore is anxious to run those lines. Keep in touch with Landon, and if anybody turns up from the district office say I'll be back on Friday. Good luck!"

"Same to you. So long!"

Berea led the way, and Norcross fell in behind the pack horses, feeling as unimportant as a small boy at the heels of a circus parade. His girl captain was so competent, so self reliant and so sure that nothing he could say or do assisted in the slightest degree. Her leadership was a curiously close reproduction of her father's unhurried and graceful action. Her seat in the saddle was as easy as Landon's, and her eyes were alert to every rock and stream in the road. She was at home here, where the other girl would have been a bewildered child, and his words of praise lifted the shadow from her face.

Wayland called out, "The air feels like Thanksgiving morning, doesn't it?"

"It is Thanksgiving for me, and I'm going to get a grouse for dinner," she replied, and in less than an hour the snap of her rifle made good her promise.

After leaving the upper lake she turned to the right and followed the course of a swift and splendid stream which came churning through a cheerless, mossy swamp of spruce trees. Inexperienced as he was, Wayland knew that this was not a well marked trail, but his confidence in his guide was too great to permit of any worry over the pass, and he amused himself by watching the water robins as they flitted from stone to stone in the torrent, and in calculating just where he would drop a line for trout if he had time to do so, and in recovered serenity enjoyed his ride. Gradually he put aside his perplexities concerning the future, permitting his mind to prefigure nothing but his duties with Landon at Meeker's mill.

He was rather glad of the decision to send him there, for it promised absorbing sport. "I shall see how Landon and Belden work out their problem," he said. He had no fear of Frank Meeker now. "As a forest guard with official duties to perform I can meet that young savage on other and more nearly equal terms," he assured himself.

The trail grew slippery and in places ran full of water. "But there's a bottom somewhere." Berrie confidently declared, and pushed ahead with resolute mien. It was noon when they rose above timber and entered upon the wide, smooth slopes of the pass. Snow filled the grass here, and the wind, keen, cutting, unhindered, came out of the desolate west with savage fury, but the sun occasionally shone through the clouds with vivid splendor. "It is December now," shouted Wayland as he put on his slicker and cowered low to his saddle. "It will be January soon."

"We will make it Christmas dinner," she laughed, and her glowing good humor warmed his heart. She was entirely her cheerful self again.

As they rose the view became magnificent, wintry, sparkling. The great clouds, drifting like ancient warships heavy with armament, sent down chill showers of hail over the frosted gold of the grassy slopes, but when the shadows passed the sunlight descended in silent cataracts deliciously springlike. The cones squeaked from the rocky ridges and a brace of eagles circling about a lone crag, as if exulting in their sovereign mastery of the air, screamed in shrill ecstatic duo. The sheer cliffs on their shadowed sides were violently purple. Everywhere the landscape exhibited crashing contrasts of primary pigments which bit into consciousness like the flare of a martial band.

It was nearly 2 o'clock when they began to drop down behind the rocky ridges of the eastern slope, and soon, in the bottom of a warm and sheltered hollow just at timber line, Berrie drew her horse to stand and slipped from the saddle. "We'll rest here an hour," she said, "and cook our grouse, or are you too hungry to wait?"

SLATON TODAY GIVES UP OFFICE

Fear Trouble When He is Private Citizen

(By United Press.)

Atlanta, June 26—Warned by threat that when Gov. Slaton surrendered the office to his successor today an outbreak would occur the city officials have placed the city under guard. Thousands are entering the city to see the inauguration of Gov.-elect Harris and it was admitted that should an outbreak occur it would be hard to handle. A small guard continues over the governor's residence.

LIST OF THOSE LIABLE TO DUTY

Quincy Might Supply 3,755 in Case of War

HARVARD UNIT IS OFF FOR EUROPE

Seventy Five Nurses and 32 Surgeons in Party Leaving Friday

REMAIN UNTIL OCT. 1.

A party of 300 or more gathered at the South Station Friday afternoon to say farewell to the party of 32 surgeons and 75 nurses, comprising the Harvard medical unit who left by the 5 o'clock train for New York from which port they sail today on the Holland-American liner "Noordam."

To the credit of the corps of nurses who had been selected from 20 volunteers it may be said that not one showed a white feather. All were on hand when the time came for leaving. Among their many friends there were few dry eyes as the train pulled out of the station amid the fluttering of handkerchiefs and the waving of American flags. It can be safely said that tucked away somewhere in their belongings every one of the surgeons and nurses has an American flag.

It is expected that the unit will be delegated to one of the largest base hospitals on the continent, where it will remain on duty until the first of October when they will be relieved by a unit from the John Hopkins or Columbia University.

Two sections of the train were given over to the use of the unit. One of these was taken up entirely by the duffel bags of the nurses, which resembled mail pouches, each one labeled with a crimson "H. U." and addressed to the owner at "British Base Hospital, Norwich, England." There were also several pigskin cases of surgical instruments, similarly labelled.

Among those in the party who had gathered to say farewell was President Lowell of Harvard College, who was almost unnoticed until just as the train was about to pull out of the station when he stepped forward to express to Dr. Edward H. Nichols, who organized the party his best wishes for its success.

Those from Quincy in the party were:

Dr. Nathaniel S. Hunting, who will be absent six weeks.

Dr. Daniel B. Reardon, who expects to be absent six months.

Miss Margaret Carey of 62 Upland road, a graduate of the Quincy City Hospital.

Miss Margaret Fowler of 113 Standish avenue, a graduate of the Newburyport Hospital.

Miss Susan Marshall of 24 Saville avenue, a graduate of the Quincy City Hospital.

Miss Flora M. Wilson of 40 Churchill lane, Milton, a graduate of the Massachusetts Homoeopathic Hospital, is also in the party.

DR. N. S. HUNTING.

Both the physicians and nurses have been vaccinated for smallpox and innoculated with typhoid fever serum.

City Treasurer Curtis has awarded the bid for the $50,600 loan advertised for a few days ago, to Morgan & Bartlett of New York for 2.58 per cent, discount. The bond is dated June 28, and matures Oct. 28.

ANNUAL LAWN PARTY OF ST .MARY'S CHURCH DRAWS HUGE ATTENDANCE

Afternoon of Sports And Amusements of Fakirs Row Followed by Dancing in Evening

Over 1500 were in attendance Saturday afternoon and evening at the annual lawn party of St. Mary's church held on the parochiai grounds. The success of the affair both socially and financially eclipsed any previous party held by the parish.

A heavy shower in the afternoon raised havoc with the artistic decorations of the various booths but Rev. Father McCoy the pastor, refused to give up hope and he was rewarded by a clear-up shower about 4.30 and the day's program was carried out in full. The field was artistically lighted and the national colors predominated in the decorations. After the thunder shower the decorations were forgotten and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Rev. James J. Mooney, the assistant pastor, was in charge of the children's sports and they were all carried out very successfully. The list of winners were as follows:

50 yard dash for boys under 12 years—1st. Daniel O'Connell, 2d. John Falvey, 3rd Arthur O'Brien.

50 yard dash for boys over 12 years—1st. Charles Batts, 2d. John Knight, 3rd. John Mullarkey.

50 yard dash for girls under 12 years—1st. Catherine Casey, 2d. Irene Shea.

50 yard dash for girls over 12 years—1st. Louise Ferrazi, 2d. Mary Shea.

Running high jump for boys—1st. Charles Batts, 2d. Edward Curry, 3rd. Joseph Haggerty.

Three legged race for boys—1st. Charles Batts and John Mullarkey, 2d. Peter Barry and Henry Cotter, 3rd. William O'Brien and Joseph Flaherty.

Potato race for girls under 12 years—1st. Annie Hannon, 2d. Catherine Casey, 3d. Mary Shea.

Potato race for boys over 12 years—1st. Charles Batts,2d. John Knight, 3rd. John Mullarkey.

Potato race for boys under 12 years—1st. Charles Adams, 2d. John Barry, 3rd. Arthur OBrien.

Father Mooney was ably assisted by James Connors and Chester Steadman. The winners were presented with handsome souvenirs. A Punch and Judy show was held in the afternoon.

A large dance board was erected in the grounds and dancing in the open was enjoyed from seven to eleven o'clock. Music for dancing was furnished by Morrissettes seven piece orchestra.

The leading feature of the whole party was a Fakirs row in charge of the consultors of the Holy Name Society connected with the church. The canes were in charge of Napoleon Grignon, asisted by Councilman John D. Smith. "Hoop La" was in charge of Thomas F. O'Brien assisted by Mortimer Murphy, James McDonald and Andrew J. Dinegan. The wheel of fortune was in charge of Joseph R. McGilvary assisted by Leo A. Garity and Patrick Stanton. The shooting gallery was run by "Nimrod" Miss Helen Elcock. An African Dodger completed the fakirs row.

TAKES BRIDE IN SPENCER, MASS.

Harry S. Bates Weds Miss Sarah E. Allen

Harry Sanford Bates, manager of the furniture store of Henry L. Kincaide & Co., and his bride, Miss Sarah Ethel Allen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry Allen of Spencer, are on a honeymoon auto trip to parts unknown and on their return will reside at 70 Revere road, this city.

The ceremony was performed Saturday evening at Spencer by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, formerly pastor of the Bethany Congregational Church of Quincy, where Mr. Bates is superintendent of the intermediate Sunday school.

The house was attractively decorated for the occasion, the color scheme being green and white. There was a large attendance.

The bride was gowned in crepe meteor, trimmed with princess lace and pearl trimmings. In her hair she wore orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white sweet peas. Miss Susan Allen, sister of the bride was maid of honor. She was dressed in pink pussy willow taffeta and carried pink sweet peas. Henry P. Hayward of Quincy was the best man. Miss Barbara Allen, niece of the bride, was flower girl. The double ring service was used and the ring bearer was Chester G. Gurney, Jr., nephew of the bride.

The reception to the bridal couple followed the ceremony. Assisting in receiving were the families of the contracting parties. The ushers were C. Everett Allen of North Brookfield, Chester B. Allen, Sr., of Melrose, Dr. Robert Hunt of Boston, Prof. Carle R. Hayward of Quincy.

During the height of the excitement the couple stole away in an automobile. Their escape was not discovered until it was too late for a chase.

Refreshments were served during the evening and orchestra music was furnished by the Mozart orchestra of Worcester.

Mr. and Mrs. Bates are expected here in about two weeks to make their home at 70 Revere road.

The bride is well known in Spencer and vicinity. The groom is one of the best known residents of this city. He is the son of Mrs. Ida M. Bates of Revere road and is a direct descendant of Edward Bates who settled in Weymouth about 1630. Capt. Elijah Bates was his great great grandfather and Gen. James L. Bates was his uncle.

COUNCIL NOT TO MEET TONIGHT

No meeting of the City Council will be held this evening, the next regular meeting not coming until Tuesday evening, July 6. Usually the City Council adjourns early in July for the summer season, but owing to a public hearing having been called for July 19, it will not be possible for an adournment until after that date. There is considerable speculation as to what the street committee will report on the large number of petitions and orders for new streets upon which hearings have been held.

The owners of the proposed new block to be erected near the Wollaston depot have been holding up to see what action the City Council proposed to take in regard to changing the grade of Beale street at this point. As nothing has yet been done by the Council, it is reported that the owners propose to go ahead with his building at the present grade. This means that if later the Council decides to change the grade the damages will be much larger than if the work was done at the present time.

AUTO STRIKES BOY ON BICYCLE

While crossing Bridge street on a bicycle Sunday, Sydney, the nine year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Anderson of Grant street, was struck by the automobile of L. A. Henault of 206 North Central avenue. The machine hit him on the shoulder, slightly injuring it and inflicting several bruises about the body.

The boy in trying to avoid the on coming auto lost control of his bicycle when crossing a soft spot and fell to the street. The operator of the machine applied his brakes quickly and the auto skidded just enough to avoid running over the boy. The wheels grazed his shoulder. Henault picked Sydney up and carried him to the office of Dr. W. L. Sargent where two stitches were taken in one gash on his head, and the bruises were dressed.

SAYS COW GAVE REAL WHISKEY

Judge Avery this morning didn't have to decide whether Max Steer's cows gave whiskey or milk, the man detained at police headquarters at his request Sunday morning being released after he had sobered up.

The man was arrested by Steer Sunday morning about 2 A. M. He took him by the coat and forced him to accompany him to police headquarters, only a short distance from the Edward's meadows where the Steer herd is pastured.

The arrival of the drover and his prisoner created some excitement. Both came out of the heavy mist, Steer holding the foreigner by the coat. The man met the accusation that he had been caught milking cows with the explanation that he was drinking whiskey from a bottle.

"Pretty good cows that give whiskey," remarked the onlookers and Steer agreed and started up the street to find the cow.

HAVE EVIDENCE TO CONVICT HUERTA

Washington, June 28—The department of justice looked today for no further trouble from Gen. Huerta as a mischief maker in Mexico. The matter was mainly in the department's hands. Officials there said they believed any plan of the general may have had of reestablishing his dictatorship had been nipped in the bud.

It was admitted the department for weeks had been on the trail of the generals and the other alleged conspirators trail. Information was sought in New York, Washington and along the Mexican border. All the threads had been gathered when orders were sent to Special Agent Beecham in Mexico "to act."

Officials have evidence to convict Huerta and his followers of conspiracy against a nation friendly to the United States, of enlisting men for military service in a foreign country, and it was said the might be possible to show conspiracy against American laws.

El Paso, June 28—More arrest, including Americans, by the department of justice in the alleged conspiracy to start a new revolution in Mexico are expected today.

POPE SEEKS TO DENY REPORT

(By United Press.)

Rome, June 28—The Vatican, Italian circles believe today is attempting to deny the impression caused by the recent Papal interview with a correspondent of a French newspaper that the Pope sympathized too strongly with the Austro-Germans. Pope Benedict granted audiences to Cardinal Falconi, former delegate to Washington, and Mgr. O'Riordan, rector of the Irish college. The Rome newspaper took the view that both audiences were arranged to give the Vatican an opportunity to disclaim the impression created here and in France through the publication of the interview.

ENGLISH IVY LODGE SERVICE

The annual memorial service of English Ivy lodge, Daughters of St. George was held Sunday afternon at Quincy Adams hall. The services opened by the singing of the opening ode, following which Miss Emily Moyle, president of the lodge, made a brief address. This was followed by the reciting of the 23d psalm.

A quartette composed of Mrs. Fred Beer, Mrs. Richard Collins, Sr., Miss Bessie Beer and Mrs. M. Hatch sang the hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee." As the hymn was sung, the conductors, Mrs. Olive Hollinshead and Miss Cynthia Curtis lighted seventeen candles, representing the seventeen members of the lodge who have passd away. This was followed by the necrology address by the secretary and as she read the names of those who had passed away a candle was extinguished and a tablet was unveiled to the memory of the seventeen deceased members by the conductors. On the face of the tablet were the words, "Gone but not forgotten."

The quartette then sang "Will the circle be unbroken" which was followed by the placing of a wreath on the altar by the chaplain. Miss Jennie Beer accompanied on the piano. The hymn "Blest be the tie that binds" was sung. A prayer by the chaplain Mrs. Manhire, song "Abide with me" by Miss Cora Barnicoat, accompanied by Miss Olive Barnicoat. Scripture reading by the Vice President, Mrs. M. Clark, hymn "Rock of Ages," address by Rev. William Grainger, song by quartette "Asleep in Jesus," closing prayer by the chaplain, hymn "God be with you till we meet again," benediction by Rev. Mr. Grainger, completed the services.

Rev. Carl G. Horst and family will spend their vacation at "The Nestledown" Ossipee, N. H. Mr. Horst will be glad to respond to any call where his services are needed, but requests that he be notified by telegram.

RESIDENTS OF BLAZING HOUSE FLEE TO SAFETY IN NIGHT ROBES

State Inspector Investigates Fire Which Utterly Destroys Old Reed Hotel at Squantum

Squantum had another disastrous fire early today when the nine room house formerly known as the Reed Hotel at Squantum Head was burned to the ground. That there was not loss of life is considered remarkable. The total loss to the buildng and occupants will reach $4,000. It is thought the fire may have been incendiary and Chief Billings and State Inspector Kimball are making an investigation today.

The house was occupied by Mrs. I. T. Cullen, whose late husband was caretaker of the City of Boston property at Squantum Head. With her in the house were her two sons, William and Edward Cullen, her brother-in-law Charles A. Callahan and Joseph Ballou, a boarder. To the fact that Mr. Ballou was aroused by a glare of light on the ceiling of his room, the entire family owe their lives.

Mr. Ballou was aroused to find a brilliant light shining in his room. He leaped out of bed to see where the fire was, little suspecting that the house he was in was in flames. He found most of the first floor of the house in flames. He rushed into the room where Edward Cullen was sleeping and found flames coming through the floor underneath the boy's bed. Edward was sleeping soundly and in a couple minutes more would have been overcome by smoke and burned to death. Ballou dragged the boy from the bed and aroused the other sleepers. All the occupants were in the second floor. Ballou rushed to the different rooms and without stopping to dress, each one grabbed what clothes they could lay their hands on and escaped by the hall to the ground.

Mrs. Cullen was assisted out of the house by Mr. Ballou and Mrs. Callahan. The house was at this time a mass of flames.

One of the Cullen boys ran to the home of Joseph Gregory and Mr. Gregory rang an alarm from box 83 opposite the home of Herman Berghaus.

The alarm was rung in at about 12.50 A. M. The firemen began to arrive shortly after 1 A. M. At about 1.15 A. M. the first line of hose was put on the blaze. No effort was made to save the building where the fire started as it was quickly seen that the house was a total loss.

A high northwest wind sent huge embers over a part of Squantum and a number of residents stood ready with garden hose in case their roofs caught fire. The direction of the wind saved a much more serious fire as the embers landed only along a part of Bay Side road. Roger Mason and his neighbors kept their hose ready in case their homes took fire.

The firemen had an uphill fight. Squantum head is owned by the City of Boston and there is no water hydrant on the head. The firemen of Wollaston and Atlantic stations had to couple up all the hose they had jointly to run one lein from the foot of Standish road to the scene of the fire, about 1800 feet.

The pressure was not sufficient to do any work at this distance, over an eighth of a mile, and a steamer was set at work. The firemen turned their efforts to saving the big stable.

In the midst of the fire there were several serious explosions. The first was of the hot water boiler which blew up with a terrific report. The falling of the floors sent showers of embers hundreds of feet into the air.

Shortly after 1.30 o'clock when the fire was beginning to burn out and hundreds of people stood watching the efforts of the firemen the first chimney fell. The alert firemen saw it start to topple and shouts of "look out" filled the air. The firemen had not a second to spare. The huge chimney crashed to the ground sending a ton of bricks, where only a minute before a dozen firemen were at work. It was a miraculous escape.

At 2.15 o'clock the house had burned to the ground and an hour later the firemen began to wend their way homeward. It was a very spectacular fire to watch, reports coming from Boston and other places that a conflagration was raging, owing to the brilliancy of the illumination.

Charles Cullen, another member of the Cullen family was not at home last night. He is employed in a Boston bank which has a summer camp at Waveland. He was spending the night there.

The cause of the fire is a mystery. Squantum Head was visited yesterday by thousands of people. One theory is that some careless visitors had thrown a cigar or cigarette where it started the house afire. Another is that the fire was of incendiary origin. It is believed that the fire started in one of the surrounding sheds in the rear of the main house and that it spread to the house before any of the occupants were aroused.

BECOMES SOLDIER THROUGH DREAM

Quincy Man Sees Himself Leading Assault on Austrian Trench

SIGNS UP NEXT MORNING

Influenced by a dream, Domenico D'Eranio of Canal street, known throughout the city as "Moosie, the three miler," signed up as an Italian reservist on Friday and left Boston for New York Sunday morning where he joined the group of Italians on their way to fight for the old country.

"Moosie's" dream on Thursday night made a deep impression on him. In it he saw himself dressed in the uniform of an infantryman leading an assault on Austrian trenches. The sortie was successful the trench captured and several hundred prisoners were taken.

On awakening Friday morning he ate breakfast and was at the office of the consul shortly after it was opened. On Saturday morning he was instructed to board a New York train at the South Station at nine o'clock. He arrived to find one other Quincy Italian in the party.

"Moosie," until a year ago, when he broke training, was a runner of promise and was instrumental in the organizing of the Italian American club of the city. He was at his best in the middle distances. Inside stories of life in the trenches may be received here by fall if his letters are passed by the censors.

ASKS POLICE TO STOP GAMBLING

At a meeting of the Men's organized Bible class of the First Presbyterian church of Water street Sunday morning, resolutions commending the efforts of the police department in keeping disturbers from congregating in the vicinity of the church were passed

The attention of the police was also called to the fact that the nightly gathering of crap shooters on the Ward three playground as a novelty had been outgrown, and was now a nuisance. The resolutions requested police action.

NOT A WISE ACTION.

At the recent meeting of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs at Marion Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney as chairman of the resolutions committee introduced a resolution that the federation endorse equal suffrage. After two hours of debate the resolution was adopted, 203 to 99.

If the delegates were authorized to speak for the membership of the various women's clubs which make up the state federation the endorsement may have a far reaching effect in the present state campaign for equal suffrage. Doubtless it will be used by the proponents of the movement as an argument or at least as an illustration of the growth of their cause.

Whether or not the delegates were authorized to speak for the majority of the membership and whether or not a referendum vote of all the clubs would show a majority for equal suffrage is not considered the most important feature of these remarks. Neither is it of importance whether this paper happens to favor or oppose equal suffrage.

The important thing is that a majority of the delegates to the convention of the Massachusetts Federation of Womens clubs took a stand of which at least a large minority disapprove. It seems unfair that anti suffragists, members of the various clubs of the federation, should contribute money, time and labor to an organization which opposes a cause in which they are enlisted.

It would be considered improper if the federation had voted to endorse Congregationalism, or Unitarianism, or Darwinism, or any similar ism. Yet an endorsement of a political plank by a non-political organization seems to us just as improper.

The Citizens association, which flourished in this city for a time a few years ago, dabbled in politics, thereby creating a split in its ranks, and perished. Let the Massachusetts Federation take warning from the experience of organizations which have exceeded the field of proper action, or an association which has done, and should continue to do, much good may suffer grave injury.

FALSE KNIGHTS.

Georgia is to have, according to press reports, a new secret organization entitled "The Knights of Mary Phagan." Mary Phagan was the girl for whose murder Leo M. Frank was convicted and sentenced to death, a sentence which was commuted to life imprisonment by ex-Gov. Slaton recently. It is this commutation of sentence which has so incensed certain wild and turbulent spirits that they are organizing this new Ku Klux Klan, to have lodges throughout the state and whose members shall be pledged to avenge the death of Mary Phagan.

As by avenging the death of Mary Phagan these bloodthirsty imbeciles mean nothing less than to accomplish the death of Leo M. Frank and doubtless Mr. Slaton there is every prospect of plenty of excitement in Georgia. Fortunately the Knights of Mary Phagan can never attain the success which distinguished the career of the Ku Klux Klan. The K. K. K. was composed of men banded together as they thought at least, by necessity. They were striking for themselves, their wives and their children, at least as they viewed it. The successor of the K. K. K. is merely an organization banded together to exact vengeance from one man and he already a prisoner. The Knights of Mary Phagan are no more to be compared with the Ku Klux Klan than is ex-Governor Blease of South Carolina to be compared with ex-Governor Slaton of Georgia.

Let us hope that the accounts of the spread of this organization are exaggerated. The authorities should curb the execution of this conspiracy of false knights.

DANGER OF FREAK STYLES.

No sound business success can be dependent upon production of freak styles. Freak styles are usually an economic waste for all those who have to do with them. A prominent Lynn shoe manufacturing company has been forced to make an assignment very recently chiefly because his business was largely dependent upon the shifting foundation of freak style production. The firm was wooing a fickle goddess who was likely to abandon it at any time. An extract from the report of the assignment illustrates the point:

"In shoe circles it was said that the difficulties of the campany have been experienced by other manufacturers who have been unwillingly filling orders for the freak styles in women's shoes that have been popular for the past year. The craze for such novelties has now waned and jobbers and retailers who placed orders for such styles are either rejecting the shoes or countermanding the orders, thus forcing heavy financial losses upon the manufacturers."

If the Boston Licensing Board granted those Neponset licenses as it is reported to have done the members of the delegation from this city which opposed the petitions have nothing with which to reproach themselves. They did all they could do. The Board must have realized that the speakers represented the opinion of the great majority of Quincy's citizens. The granting of the licenses simply means that the Board does not care particularly whether Quincy approves or not.

The Barre Times says:

It is an odd bequest to the city of Newburyport, Mass., namely, the sum of $15,000 if the public library is to be kept open on Sundays as well as on the other days of the week; but doubtless the prospective benefactor appreciated the benefits that might arise from keeping the institution accessible to a great many people whose only time for the use of the library comes on Sunday. An institution of that sort does accommodate a sizable part of the population of any given city or town on Sundays only."

The experiment was tried at the Thomas Crane Public Library in this city and was so unsuccessful that it was abandoned. The reading room became a trysting place for lovers who not only did not care to read themselves but prevented others from reading.

Our respected contemporary, the Barre Times, commenting upon a recent editorial in this paper entitled "Why Not Quincy Granite?" remarks: "If Quincy wishes to furnish the government 14,000 tombstones for U. S. soldiers it would do well to arm itself with a crowbar to pry its way into the market."

Carranza is said to be virtually a prisoner in Vera Cruz, but his freedom of speech evidently has not been curtailed.

A MODEL PAVEMENT.

The city of Lawrence, Mass., has some model granite pavement which, judging by the printed reports, is very similar to the granite pavement which has been laid in Barre during recent years, more particularly that on Main street north of Depot square; and prospective pavement builders have been invited to go to Lawrence and see the finished product as built by a veteran road builder, Paul Hannagan, the superintendent of streets of that city. There are, all told, 14 miles of this model granite pavement in the Massachusetts city, the mileage being distributed over the streets which are used by various kinds of traffic ranging from the light vehicular travel to the heavy trucks and drays. It is said that no visitor can leave Lawrence without hearing a good word about the improved streets, and Superintendent Hannagan is even more enthusiastic. For these granite pavements in Lawrence, it is said that they are good for a half century, that not a cent of outlay is necessary to keep them up unless the surface should be broken by public service corporations, that it is the cheapest paving in the long run, that it is cheaper than the initial cost of asphalt even and that at the end of five years it becomes cheaper than any other kind of a street, even that made of cinders, that the streets are smooth and dustless and that they require a minimum of care. Moreover, "it is a good street for the nerves because it eliminates all jar and vibration," say the Lawrence boasters; and it is not affected by oils and it can be washed with hose without the slightest damage to the surface. The construction of the pavement is comparatively simple, too, as the granite blocks are laid in sand or concrete, after which the interstices are filled in with a cement grout which also is allowed to cover the greater portion of the surface, thus rendering a smooth traveling surface. This, we judge, is very much like the method employed in laying the most recent granite pavement in Barre and the results promise to be fully as satisfactory in Barre as in Lawrence. Therefore, Barre joins with Lawrence in inviting all prospective road building communities to send representatives to Barre to inspect the streets thus payed. That kind of road will pay in the end, we feel certain.—Barre Times.

MARRIED AT BRIDE'S HOME

Miss Eleanor Dunn Weds Wm. E. Bullock

Miss Eleanor Eliza Dunn daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Dunn of 253 Newport avenue, and William Everett Bullock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bullock of 10 Willow avenue, were married Saturday evening in the presence of relatives and friends at the home of the bride.

The ceremony was performed at 7.45 o'clock by Rev. Joseph Walther, pastor of the First Baptist church of Wollaston. Miss Alice S. Kenyon of Sudbury, was the maid of honor and Chester R. Gurney of Montello was the best man. The ushers at the reception were Thaddeus S. and Charles K. Dunn, brothers of the bride, Arthur W. and Edward C. Bullock, brothers of the groom. Mrs. George K. Drew (Louise Nash) a close friend of the bride, played Mendelssohn's wedding march.

The bride was gowned in white messaline, with an over jacket of real lace, and an English veil, caught up with orange blossoms. Her bouquet was lilies of the valley and she wore a brooche, the gift of the groom. The maid of honor, Miss Alice Kenyon wore white voile and carried pink sweet peas. The double ring ceremony was used.

A reception followed the ceremony, the couple being assisted in receiving by their parents. The house was prettily decorated with palms, field flowers and roses. The Life Road was sung as a benediction at the close of the ceremony by Arthur W. Bullock, brother of the groom.

The many gifts were displayed in a room reserved for that purpose, and seldom has one seen a more beautiful or appropriate collection.

Mr. and Mrs. Bullock left late in the evening on a wedding trip. They will be at home to their friends after Sept. 1 at 74 Faxon road where they will make their home.

LI'L' ARTHUR HAS TOUGH OLD TIME

Just Can't Get Uniform Big Enough

"I carried my slops to the tailor, I sez to 'im.

"None o' your lip!

You tight 'em over the shoulders, an' loose 'em over the 'ip.

For the set o' the tunics horrid," An' 'e sez to me

"Strike me dead.

But I thought you was used to the business!" and so

'e done what I said."

"Back to the Army Again—By Kipling.

And this explains the plight of Arthur B. Hultman, one of the officers at the district court, who poined the Machine Gun company and after some delay was furnished a uniform issued to the company, only to find it didn't fit.

So another uniform was secured and the company felt secure in their beliefs that the "giant" of the city would be with them when the bivouac camp was pitched at North Weymouth on the 17th of June.

But size again intervened and prevented him reporting for duty and now a special tailor made uniform has been ordered and will probably be delivered in time for Li'l' Art' to be in the company when it leaves Saturday for the mobilization of the 6th Regt., M. V. M., to which it is attached, at Lowell on July 2, 3 and 4th.

Court officer Hultman is 6 ft. 6 in. in height and weighs nearly 300 pounds, now, 20 odd less than a few months ago. His shoulders are broad and powerful and clothing can only be fitted by a tailor, none of the manufacturing establishments producing such large sizes, except to order. The uniform he wears when on duty at the court house contains material enough to make two coats for an ordinary man. The extract from Kipling's Back to the Army doesn't fully apply to the Hultman boy at the present time but will when he gets a uniform to replace the one being made.

The manufacturing firms of the Sovereign Waist Co. and George G. Bean have consolidated and will continue business at the present headquarters, 192 Granite street, under the firm name of the Sovereign Waist Co.

Financial Review

The demoralization of our foreign trade brought on by the war continues unabated. Imports have been coming in somewhat more freely, resulting fortunately in much needed improvement in our customs revenue. Our exports also continue very heavy, owing chiefly to shipments of foodstuffs, also of war material which are going outwards on a steadily increasing movement. It now appears that war contracts are being accepted on a much vaster scale than ever supposed. Instead of the earlier statements of orders being exaggerated, it is now realized that the volume of these contracts has frequently been underestimated, because of the secrecy concerning them.

Some careful estimates figure that munition contracts valued at over $500,000,000 have already been placed in the United States. Immense orders have also been placed for other war supplies which it is calculated would bring the total up to about $750,000,000, the bulk of which will be spent with the steel trade. But this is only about half the credits which, according to good authorities, have been under negotiation, including $500,000,000 for Great Britain $500,000,00 for Russia, $400,000,000 for France and $100,000,000 for Italy. A number of our largest industrial plants have taken contracts of between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 each.

These figures are simply astonishing and beyond all precedent. They will be considered as the satisfactory side of the account; if such a word as satisfactory can be applied to organized murder and destruction. The United States is the only country in the world that is profiting by this war, and such profits will be confined to the few and must inevitably be offset by the inculculable losses inflicted upon the many. Figure as we may, the world will be much the poorer for this catastrophe for years to come.

When peace arrives reconstruction will follow in vigorous fashion Europe will be so absorbed in re building, and so crippled in productive capacity as to have little to sell in the form of merchandise to this country. The disruption of established business conditions, the raising of new tariff walls, the making of new treaties, the overcoming of bitter prejudices and the necessity of making endless new adjustments will all tend to keep our foreign trade in a state of chaos long after peace is established.

Our imports will naturally be more affected in volume than exports, because of Europe's inability to sell. Our exports of agricultural products may not be seriously impaired; in fact we may have to feed Europe while her whole energy is given over to rebuilding; but there will be much less reason for confidence in our ability to win foreign markets for our manufactures a year or two hence than there is now. True, new opportunities will be offered, but when fighting is done with, Germany will make an intense effort to recover her lost markets. Low prices, hard work and adaptability will slowly but surely overcome present prejudices.

Great Britain will be obliged to make an equally strenuous effort if she expects to hold any newly gained markets. Of our ability to compete with these energetic rivals, who will undoubtedly operate on a cheaper and better established basis than ourselves, there is as yet no positive assurance. The whole future of the commercial world is highly unsettled, and all operations connected therewith have to take into consideration the numerous hazards, as well as the unquestionable opportunities which will arise from the settlement of old troubles and a fresh development of the world's resources.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

SEASON'S LAST SUNDAY SERVICE

Sunday morning's service at the Wollaston Unitarian church was the last of the season. The musical program included the usual anthems, choral responses and glorias. At the close of the service the pastor pronounced the Mizpa Benediction and the quartet most appropriately sang "God be with you till we meet again."

The pastor's sermon dwelled upon "The Soul's Great Need." He said: "Human nature needs the ministry of religion as much today as ever. We still see in a mirror darkly and know only in part. We are dependent upon God. Religion teaches us that we are connected with a world of invisible realistics, that the spiritual world is the real world, that the material world is temporary, that as children of God it is our privilege to live in this spiritual world and be strengthened and fed by spiritual influences. We must cultivate the spiritual life by associating with people who have in some measure this spiritual power, or at least who have a desire for it, and by becoming acquainted with the expression of that life in devotional literature. Our lives require to be fed from above. Social worship is one of the chief means of cultivating the life of the spirit. Our hearts are restless till they rest in God. Acquaint thyself, therefore, with God."

The high grade motion pictures, which are given at the parish house, are attracting large audiences. The pictures last Saturday were unusually fine. The entertainment committee is highly to be commended for its efforts to show such entertaining and instructive pictures.

The church will be closed as usual during July and August.

Services of worship and all the various activities of the parish will be resumed Sunday Sept. 12.

We remind the farmers of the fifth and sixth wards of Quincy of the annual country fair to be held in September. Prizes will be offered as usual for the best exhibits of fruit, vegetables, flowers, poultry, pigeons, dogs, cats, rabbits, pigs, cattle, etc.

The music committee invites the ladies of the Parish and their friends to a Whist Party and aluminum ware demonstration in the parish hall, Tuesday, at 2 o'clock. The cooking demonstration will be held in the kitchen and every one will be given an aluminum pan. In addition ten per cent commission in dishes for our church kitchen will be allowed on any sales made at a later date. Tickets of admission may be obtained from Mrs. Chandler W. Smith, Mrs. Frank A. Page, Mrs. William M. Burrell or Mrs. Oscar Baker.

The Ladies Aid Alliance will hold a picnic on the estate of Mrs. George W. Bennett, 390 Pond street, South Weymouth, Wednesday, (or in case of rain the next day.) Trains leave Wollaston at 8.56 and 10.56. Ice cream and coffee will be provided. Those who intend to go will kindly notify Mrs. Charles T. Baker, 215 Safford street or Mrs. Chandler W. Smith 115 Grand View avenue.

Mrs. H N. Thomas's Sunday school class and their families are planning to spend Tuesday afternoon at Franklin park. Mrs. Thomas extends a cordial invitation to any other mothers and children who would like to join them on the 1.30 car from Wollaston (cor. Beale street and Newport avenue.) Each one will carry his own supper.

The Young People's Religious union will resume its meetings on the first Sunday in October and will hold a social gathering in the parish hall, Friday evening October 1, at 8 o'clock.

CHARLES F. WRISLEY.

Charles F. Wrisley, a life long resident of Quincy, passed away this morning at his home, 22 School street, aged 63 years. Mr. Wrisley in his younger years was employed by a shoe finding firm in Boston, but of late years has been a shoe salesman. He is survived by a widow and one daughter, Miss Gertrude Wrisley. Funeral services will be held from his late home Wednesday at 2.15.

CONSERVATION WORK.

Mary Caroline Sweet, chairman of the Conservation department of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs brought out some interesting facts at the annual meeting of the Federation this week in Marion in her yearly report. She said in part:—It is a fortunate Conservation department that finds itself in a state which has a Conservation policy. Massachusetts has such a policy.

The Conservation committee of the State Federation has aimed to keep in touch with the State policy. The committee meetings have been miniature conferences with addresses by able speakers. The subjects have followed a logical sequence Conservation in its broadest interpretation; birds and bird protection; Moths and other tree pests; good roads with special reference to national trails and the Lincoln highway, and an illustrated stereopticon lecture on town and city improvement, with special regard to parks, playgrounds, and roadside planting.

The awakening interest in these subjects is apparent in the many requests for study outlines and for information as to practical work. In order to meet these needs, the State committee has given much thought to the preparation of a circular which has been sent to every club Conservation chairman in the state and to others upon request. It is pleasant to note in this connection the encouraging reports from clubs cooperating with other town agencies and we find a general interest in civic matters, especially in beautifying town centers and triangular plots. There were thousands of school gardens last year under the joint direction of the State Board of Agriculture and Women's clubs.

Good roads are our greatest civilizing force, and transcontinental highways are merely the development of a movement, that within the last twelve months has grown with increasing rapidity all over the country. Railways carry more than nine billion long tons each year. This is but a fractional part of that moved over our highways.

We are today probably twenty years ahead of where we would have been, had it not been for the motor-car and the motor-truck. "The motor-car has crystalized sentiment," says Henry B. Joy, President of the Lincoln Highway Association. The Lincoln Highway stands for the "greatest economic force in road commerce."

But this age calls for beauty along with road perfection. The women of the General Federation have full charge of the roadside planting of the Lincoln Highway and the Lincoln Way Work is a special feature of the Conservation Department of each State.

Massachusetts already has good roads, but "No other state has a Lexington, a Plymouth Rock, a Bunker Hill." The ways thither are consecrated for they have been trodden by the feet of patriots. It is now the privilege of Massachusetts women to add beauty to consecration. Proud indeed are we of a share in this great nation-wide undertaking!

LARGE NUMBER GO ON OUTING

Nearly a dozen members of the Luther league of the Swedish Lutheran church of Quincy were unable to take the sail to Plymouth Saturday because the steamer "Rose Standish" was crowded. The outing was under the direction of the Boston district Lutheran league. About 150 from Quincy were able to secure sailing accommodations. It is estimated that 1600 took the trip. They stopped at Plymouth for an hour where historic spots were viewed. The boat reached Boston about 10 P. M.

LAST SERVICE UNTIL SEPT. 15

The service Sunday morning at the First Parish church, was the last until September 19. Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson will spend the summer months in the White Mountains, with headquarters at the Crawford House.

His subject for Sunday morning was "1914-15, A Review." His text was taken from the fourth chapter of the ninetieth Psalm, which he said was one of the most wonderful conceptions ever written, as it revealed a philosophic insight which even today we can not understand.

"All our anxieties about the length of time are nothing. Our finished lives are related to and a part of this wonderous life. We live in a space dealing with days, weeks and months and we plan for them, so in closing I invite you to think of the progress of the year."

Rev. Mr. Hudson then spoke of what had been accomplished in the church and said that by self sacrific the debt of $9,000 that had been weighing down the the growth of the church had been paid. The 275th anniversary of the church was celebrated.

He spoke of the increase in attendance at church during the year. The average for the year 1913-14 was 15[illegible] and the average for the year 1914-15 was 175 showing a steady growth. He also spoke of the order which had recently been passed by the City Council for a sidewalk about the church and said that in the fall he should take up the work of beautifying the grounds so that they would be in keeping with the dignity and traditions of the church. He also spoke of the growth of the Young Peoples society and of the Sunday school.

"In fact all departments of the church have showed progress. I am greatly pleased at the quiet pleasant and healthy growth, with nothing spectacular about it. It is but the outward sign of the inward grace. It shows that we have been enriched for the good and indicates what we may do in the next decade.

"The world is facing a great problem and this year will be marked in history as the turning point in civilization. What we have accomplished is but the background upon which we may build larger and nobler things. The purposes of divine rule are not to get for us something for the outside. In reality God works through us and it is not God outside but the God within which we must revive."

At the conclusion of the service most of the congregation went forward to say a word to the minister and to wish him a pleasant summer vacation.

THOMAS FORSYTH.

Thomas Forsyth, one of the best known pioneer farmers of Braintree passed away Saturday afternoon at his home on Wood street. men to form any definite conclusion as to how the fire started and its origin may never be known.

One of the features of the fire was the rescue of a little kitten by its mother. The cat is a family pet and the little kitten of only a few weeks was in the house. Sometime during the fire the cat took the kitten to a safe spot in a tree nearby and here the mother and her little one were found safe when daylight came. Mr. Ballou climbed the tree with a cup of milk for the faithful mother who attended to the rescue of her little one unassisted. "Spot" Mr. Ballou's well known dog a lso escaped the fire. The hourse destroyed by fire is one of the historic spots of Squantum. It was known to thousands of the older residents of Quincy and Boston. It was a part of the Reed hotel which was built in about 1860, when William Reed, a grandfather of William Reed, a submaster of the East Boston grammar school, who resides in Squantum, was burned out in a hotel he owned on Long Island.

The hotel consisted of a four-story structure which was later added and now stands on Squantum Head, adjacent to the burned building. The old hotel is unoccupied. Mr. Reed later built the house which was destroyed last night and this was used as a billiard hall, bar and dining room. People came from miles around to have fish dinners at Reed's hotel. It was one of the most noted of the resorts of Greater Boston, and John L. Sullivan fought one of his first fights there.

The hotel descended to Mr. Reed's father who conducted it for years until the local option bill was passed. This prevented the securing of a license and the hotel was later closed. By this time trolley cars had begun to run and this resulted in hotels being run farther out of Boston. In 1888 when the City of Boston put in its sewage system, the city took Squantum Head, and it has since owned this property.

The loss of the hotel building is estimated at $2,000. The loss to the Cullen family in furnishing and clothing amounts to about $2,000. Mrs. Cullen's son who resides in New York has always attended to her insurance and she is not sure if her policy had expired or not. She will not know her loss until she hears from her son.

Chief Engineer Billings and Inspector Kimball of the State Police, on their return from Squantum where they had been investigating the fire say that the fire was unquestionably of incendiary origin. Accrding to Chief Billings the fire was started under the piazza and hd worked up in through the house when discovered.

Chief Billings also said that he was informed that the City of Boston intended to tear down all of the old buildings on the property immediately.

SLEUTHS HUNT FOR MISSING JEWELRY

Reward of $10,000 Offered For Return of Insured Gems

New York, June 28.—The reward of $10,000 and "no questions asked," offered for the return of a pearl necklace and a marquis diamond ring, brought no response to Dreicer & Co., the jewelry firm which is acting for the owner of the jewels from whose home in Southampton, L. I., the gems disappeared a week ago.

Twenty-five detectives are now in Southampton, and the movements of practically every one in that summer town may be said to have been investigated without disclosing a single line to the way in which a small fortune in precious stone and metals was removed.

The mystery was redoubled when it was learned that the jewels had been insured heavily and that the owner had nothing to lose even if the pieces were never heard of again.

The local police in Southampton were kept in ignorance of the theft and Commissioner Woods here admitted that his department has not been asked to undertake a search.

LITTLE HOPE FOR BECKER

Whitman Will Pass on Case of Condemned Man This Week

Albany, June 28.—So far as Governor Whitman is concerned this week will decide the fate of Charles Becker, and it is known that unless the strongest kind of evidence is brought forward to show that the onetime police lieutenant is innocent the governor will not interfere.

Persons in the confidence of the governor express the opinion that the appeal for a commutation of sentence or for a pardon will be hopeless, because Whitman has had so much information which has convinced him that Becker instigated the death of Herman Rosenthal.

DAISIES BLOOM AT PRETTY SERVICE

Somebody worked hard surely to plan and execute the program carried out by the children of the Park and Downs church at the Childrens Day exercises held Sunday morning at 10.30. The service was beautiful, elaborate and full of surprises.

The church was crowded to its capacity with the parents and friends of the children of the Sabbath school.

The church was charmingly decorated in green and white, the altar vail and chancel forming a bower of foliage and flowers. The same color scheme was carried along the side walls of the church and along each line of the columns to the gallery.

In his opening address Supt. Victor Harrie said that he had appointed the following committee to have full charge of the service and program and decorations: Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Chapman, Mrs. Payne, Mrs. J. A. Boone, chairman—assisted by Mrs. Hasbrouck, Mrs. Blaisdell and Mrs. Holton, Mrs. Charles Tanner in charge of singing.

Mr. Harrie said that he had left everything to this committee and thanked them for their untiring energy and their efficiency.

He said that fifty new members had been added to the Sabbath school this year and that plans were already being formulated for the construction of another building or parish house to be used for the young people and children's work. The primary department, Mrs. J. A. Boone Supt. has an enrollment of 132.

When the organ struck up a martial air the little ones came marching down the center aisle in two columns bearing over their shoulders a great double daisy chain. As the head of each line reached the front pew the line halted and the daisy chain was dropped over the ends of the pews.

The children were dressed to represent daisies, making a very pretty effect. The small children from three to six years of age gave a number of musical numbers and class songs showing a remarkable training. This work was in the hands of Mrs. Charles Tanner.

One of the numbers was a song by six little girls who stood behind six huge flower pots. They sang about the sun and the showers and as they sang the blossoms began to arise from the flower pots until they were in full bloom, the heart of each flower being the golden head of a radiant child, who took up the next verse of the flower song. The program was a charming diversion. John Palmer, a boy of nine years, read the scriptures, the 23rd Psalm.

Rev. William B. Ayers, will continue his Sunday evening lectures during the month of July.

SENDING MONEY TO TURKEY.

International banking isn't usually thought of as part of the business of a mission board though most boards have to understand the conditions of the money market in various parts of the world. Within the last eight months, however, Treasurer Wiggin of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, has transmitted $163,000 and over, to Turkey and the nearer East for Armenians and other immigrants to this country whose whose usual ways of sending money to the relatives left behind have been interfered with by the war.

At first one or two persons a day would come timidly in to the office in Boston, to ask if the Board had any news from certain cities or could suggest any way to get funds through. Then when it began to be known that the Board had ways of remitting, the people came in streams, sometimes in groups of five or six, sometimes singly, but so constantly that it required practically the whole time of one clerk to wait on them.

The money is for the most part brought in small sums—nine dollars ($9) fifteen dollars ($15.) or twenty-two and a half dollars ($22.50) being favorite amounts. Some of the callers can speak no English; perhaps they bring an interpreter, but oftener they seem to believe that the Board, which they trust implicitly and whose representatives in their home country they knew as friends, will be able to understand their meaning whatever their language may be.

One day an Armenian came over from New York to the Board's office in Boston, bringing his interpreter with him, as he could speak no English. Some special calamity threatened his people and he was desperately anxious to get money to them within a week. The interpreter could explain only slowly and imperfectly. The man was very quiet but his pale face, his burning eyes and his tense figure spoke for him as he tried to understand and to help on the negotiations. He had evidently used every resource to get together the sum he brought, but he eagerly offered to pay for cabling, for wireless messages or for whatever measures might be used to get the money there in time.

His distress was hardly more acute than that shown in some of the letters which came when the news got abroad that the Board was accepting funds for transmission. Men wrote from Utah, from California, from far in the South, from Pennsylvania mining towns and from small places without number. One man enclosed a small sum to be "sent to my mother who has no other to help, and I have not heard from her for nearly a year."

A letter from Kansas City told a pitiful tale and ended by saying "so I like to send money to Turkey very badly. I will close with regards to all the friends." No matter if he was in trouble he remembered his manners!

Both writers and those who bring their money in person show an implicit confidence in the Board's desire to help them and in its ability to do so, and the way they speak of the missionaries on the field by name and with affection is a touching tribute to the splendid service these men and women are doing in distracted Turkey.

In several previous emergencies the American Board has been called upon to send money into the East when ordinary means have failed. After the dreadful massacres in Turkey in 1896, $250,000 was sent through this agency for relief work and for distribution by the missionaries. In all this time only once, and that many years ago, has any money been lost; a small sum—perhaps twenty-five dollars ($25.) was once stolen from the office of a mission treasurer far in the interior of Turkey, after a large sum in gold had been carried for hundreds of miles on the person of the missionary himself, over lonely dangerous roads. A sudden, sharp alarm called him from his desk for a moment, a watching thief snatched a package of coin and made off with it. That is the only loss of trust funds the American Board has to report.

BRIDAL COUPLE LOSE POCKETBOOK

Mr. and Mrs. John Edwin Booth, Miss Muriel Badger, who were married in Wollaston Friday evening, in their efforts to escape a crowd of merry pursuers, had the misfortune to lose a pocketbook containing $50 in money a fraternity pin with two pearls, belonging to the bride. It is thought that the pocketbook was lost during a hurried change of automobiles as the bridal party started on their honeymoon trip.

In order to elude their pursuers, Mr. Booth had arranged for three automobiles which required two quick changes. When the first change was made Mr. and Mrs. Booth could hear the tooting of horns of the pursuing autos, but they managed to elude them by going toward the Massachusetts Fields school where the third auto was hidden. Just before the change was made Mrs. Booth handed the pocketbook to her husband, and while the second auto took one direction, that containing the bridal couple started toward Boston.

While on the way to Boston the pocketbook was missed and it is thought that during the hurry in changing autos it must have dropped. Word was sent back to Quincy and the police were asked to make a search. Up to the present time, however, no clue has been obtained.

In the pocketbook was a $20 gold piece, $20 in bills, a $5 gold piece, several dollars in change and the school fraternity pin.

IS STRUCK BY CAR FENDER

John Gannon, aged 40 years, of East Weymouth, a motorman on the Bay State street railway was struck by the fender on an electric car at midnight Sunday and sustained a fracture of both legs. Gannon had started to walk from Braintree toward East Veymouth, and when a car came along he stood near the tracks intending to board it. Evidently he stood too close to the tracks for the fender struck him and knocked him down. Dr. James H. Cook sent the man to the Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fore Rivers Play Good Ball And Win

Playing sterling base ball for the first time this season, the Fore Rivers shut out the Norwood Civic Association at Norwood, Saturday by a score of 6 to 0 in a Manufacturers league game. Nearly 1000 fans witnessed the contest. The local boys bettered the standard set in the games they have played his season.

Lefty Ford was easily the star of the game. He got four hits out of five times up and made two putouts in center field. Cain made a foul of the Norwood infield. He ran bases like an Indian. When the Norwoods lost their nanny, Crowley, in an effort to catch Cain after he had hit third base on a steal, tagged him under the chin and Cain was rendered unconscious for a few moments. Kanie recovered and scored.

"Bode" Bradley made a great hit. It was his first appearance with the team. The first time up, with two out he singled. He started for second and the ball was waiting for him. Pulling a pretty fall-a-way slide he reached safely. Bradley played right field and while there chased a drop in back of first for a pretty catch.

Gillis took two flies in short left, one running with the ball and the other by running backwards. He also chased a grounder away out. It looked easy for the batsmen but Gillis demonstrated his whip and sent the ball over in time to retire him.

Desmond handled ten putouts at first. He singled the first time up, tripled the second time and hit a line drive to the field the third time up. Murphy played heady ball at second and both of Duggans hits were heavy smashes.

Knight pitched his best game of the season, and reached the form expected of him. He allowed four scattered hits and fanned 11. The summary:

CIRCUS DAY IS COMING.

"When the circus comes to town" is what people are saying to each other these pleasant days and THE circus that they mean is the Jones Bros.' Big Three-Ring Circus which is greater and bigger than ever this season as the Jones Bros. are now offering their new, big, giant, threefold circus combined in one. This colossal organization will exhibit here on July 2nd.

This mammoth amusement enterprise with its myriad of high-class performers and train loads of the most valuable beasts o fthe jungle offers everything imaginable in the way of trained animals—domestic and wild—is given, from the smallest monkey to the largest elephant. No show on earth exhibits finer specimens of high school and high jumping horses. An interesting performance by Shetland ponies appeal to the children.

Among the hundred arenic acts are astonishingly clever and accomplished acrobatic exploits; equilibristic feats of strength, acts of deftness and dexterity; difficult ladder balancing acts; also an innovation is being presented this year in the way of a novel dancing exhibit, participated in by a number of perfectly formed young women.

The Nymphs of the Statues—the act beautiful, has aroused unprecedented enthusiasm. The Jones Bros. have left nothing undone in their efforts to present the finest circus in the world. The mile-long parade, starting at 10 oclock a. m., tells the story. Nothing finer has ever been shown than this glittering pageant of unsurpassed grandeur; the shining coats of blooded horses, the gilded chariots, the satin robes of the riders.

LARGE CLASS AT CONFIRMATION

Bishop Joseph A. Anderson administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to a class of 157 at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Atlantic, Saturday afternoon and to a class of 270 at St. John's church Sunday afternoon. Both churches were well filled during the services. The classes were boys and girls, about evenly divided, and a few adults.

Fr. J. P. Cuffe, pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart and Fr. James F. McNiff, his curate, attended the Bishop Saturday, and Fr. John J. Casey and Fr. Walter A. Quinlan assisted him on Sunday.

The girls of the classes were dressed in white and wore veils caught up with wreaths of flowers. The boys wore dark suits, with rosettes of white ribbon on the arms. All wore white gloves. The ceremonies were most impressive. After the sacrament had been administered Bishop Anderson delivered short sermons. The services closed with Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament by Fr. John Lynch of Havre Grace, Newfoundland, at Sacred Heart, and by Fr. John J. Casey at St. John's.

The music was furnished by choirs of children.

Mrs. Edward Curtin and M. E. Cook were the sponsors at St. John's church.

Bishop Anderson, in his sermon at St. John's pointed out that those receiving the sacrament became soldiers of Jesus Christ. To them he said, the cross, is as the flag to the soldier. "Opposition you will always meet from the enemies of your faith and I urge you to be strong and courageous. for what doth it profit a man to gain the whole world if he loses his soul' In war, one country to show its utter contempt for its enemy destroys its most sacred and revered possessions, and the enemies of God attack your faith because it is so dear to you."

GIVEN CAKE ON 63d BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Emma G. Soule of 53 Buckley street, recently hurt in an accident on Sunday observed the 63rd. anniversary of her birth. A large birthday cake was given her by a Braintree friend which was served to the assembled guests with ice cream.

Mrs. Soule is the widow of Louis Soule and lived for many years at Quincy Point. Three weeks ago she suffered a fracture of the collar bone in a fall and received several bad cuts about the head. Her recovery, despite her age, has been steady.

SQUANTUM Y. C. HOLDS PICNIC

The annual club run and picnic of the Squantum Yacht club was held Sunday at Peddocks Island. The yachts got away from off the clubhouse in good season in the morning, each having its full complement of guests. As the boats headed out of the channel they were cheered to the echo by a large crowd that had gathered on the piazzas of the clubhouse to see the start.

The wind was anything but fair for the sail and instead of a run to Peddocks it was in the nature of a beat as the wind was off the quarter making it necessary for the boats to sail right into it. Good time however was made and when the island was reached the Tomahawk flag of the club was run up showing the club to be in possession.

As the boats sailed out of the channel they were passed in review by Commodore George H. Bean in the flagship Tomahawk, which later took the lead as the fleet headed for the island.

The yachts to participate in the run were Tomahawk, Commodore George H. Bean; Flora, E, Capt. George E. Hawthorn; Meta, Capt. Louis Jobin; Agilis, Capt. Frank E. Badger; Zoe, Capt. John McCarthy; Rambler, Capt. Harry Burr; Lillian S., Capt. J. R. Napier; Areyeto, Capt. Eleazer E. Drew; Sinbad, Capt. Bert Packard; Emerald, Capt. John Dunn; Lillian, Capt. Hargrave Heath; B. D., Capt. F. F. Newberger; Coot, Capt. H. B. Nichols; Gladys, Capt. Emmanuel Thompson; Nicknac, Capt. Leon Barnes; Marion E., Capt. William Gerry.

While the chefs of the club were busy preparing a clam bake the others of the party indulged in a few field sports which included a base ball game between the married and single men in which the single men came off victorious by a score of 10 to 9. The line up of the two teams was as follows:

SINGLE MEN

Albert Fuller	p
Bert Packard	c
Nat McClure	1b
Laurie Bean,	2b
John Atkins	ss
Clif Hallett	3b
Mace Ellison	rf

MARRIED MEN.

Clifford Bean	c
Herbert Ward	1b
John Dunn	p
Ernest Locke	2b
William Thompson	ss
Fenton Fowler	3b

As soon as the game was over the call came for dinner and for the next hour all hands were busy discussing the many good things placed before them. After dinner there was a short rest in order to give the clams and other things a chance to settle a little, then the field sports were continued, resulting as follows:

Three-legged race, won by Bert Packard and Archie Briggs; Paul S Brown and William Copeland second.

100-yards dash won by Fenton Fowler, William B. Hartley, second.

Tug-of-war, won by the married men in command of Lee Drew. The single mens team was captained by John Atkins.

Later in the afternoon the stores were put on board the yachts, sail hoisted and soon the fleet was headed toward home which was reached without mishap.

The committee in charge of the outing were Commodore George H. Bean George Broadbent, Mace Ellison Laurie Bean and William Hayes.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

"I can wait," he answered dramatically. "But it seems as if I had never eaten."

"Well, then, we'll save the grouse till tomorrow, but I'll make some coffee. You bring some water while I start a fire."

And so, while the tired horses cropped the russet grass, she boiled some coffee and laid out some bread and meat, while he sat by watching her and absorbing the beauty of the scene, the charm of the hour. "It is exactly like a warm afternoon in April," he said, "and here are some of the spring flowers."

"There now, sit by and eat," she said, with humor, and in perfectly restored tranquility they ate and drank, with no thought of critics or of rivals. They were alone, and content to be so.

It was deliciously sweet and restful there in that sunny hollow on the breast of the mountain. The wind swept through the worn branches of the dwarfed spruce with immemorial wistfulness, but these young souls heard it only as a far off song. Side by side on the soft Alpine clover they rested and talked, looking away at the shining peaks, and down over the dark green billows of fir beneath them. Half the forest was under their eyes at the moment, and the man said: "Is it not magnificent! It makes me proud of my country. Just think, all this glorious spread of hill and valley is under your father's direction—I may say under your direction, for I notice he does just about what you tell him to do."

"You've noticed that?" she laughed. "If I were a man I'd rather be supervisor of this forest than congressman."

"So would I," he agreed. "Nash says you are the supervisor. I wonder if your father realizes how efficient you are? Does he ever sorrow over your not being a boy?"

Her eyes shone with mirth. "Not that I can notice. He 'pears contented."

"You're a good deal like a son to him, I imagine. You can do about all that a boy can do, anyhow—more than I could ever do. Does he realize how much you have to do with the management of his forest? I've never seen your like. I really believe you could carry on the work as well as he."

She flushed with pleasure. "You seem to think I'm a district forester in disguise."

"I have eyes, Miss Supervisor, and also ears, which leads me to ask, Why don't you clean out that saloon gang? Landon is sure there's crooked work going on at that mill—certainly that open bar is a disgraceful and corrupting thing."

Her face clouded. "We've tried to cut out that saloon, but it can't be done. You see, it's on a patented claim. The claim was bogus, of course, and we've made complaint, but the matter is hung up and that gives 'em a chance to go on."

"Well, let's not talk of that. It's too delicious an hour for any question of business. It is a moment for poetry. I wish I could write what I feel this moment. Why don't we camp here and watch the sun go down and the moon rise? From our lofty vantage ground the coming of dawn would be an epic."

"We mustn't think of that," she protested. "We must be going."

"Not yet. The hour is too perfect. It may never come again. The wind in the pines, the sunshine, the conies crying from their rocks, the butterflies on the clover—my heart aches with the beauty of it. It's been a wonderful trip. Even that staggering walk in the rain had its splendid quality. I couldn't see the poetry in it then, but I do now. These few days have made us comrades, haven't they—comrades of the trail?"

CHAPTER XII.

The Death Grapple.

"YOU have been very considerate of me, Miss Supervisor." Wayland took her hand. "I've never seen such hands. They are like steel and yet they are feminine."

She drew her hands away. "I'm ashamed of my hands—they are so big and rough and dingy."

"They're brown, of course, and calloused—a little—but they are not big and they are beautifully modeled." He looked at the girl of the forest speculatively. "I am wondering how you would look in conventional dress."

"Do you mean"— She hesitated. "I'd look like a gawk in one of those low necked outfits. I'd never dare—and those tight skirts would sure cripple me."

Oh, no, they wouldn't. You'd have to modify your stride a little, but you'd negotiate it. You're equal to anything."

"You're making fun of me!"

"No, I'm not. I'm in earnest. You're the kind of American girl that can go anywhere and do anything. My sisters would mortgage their share of the golden streets for your abounding health—and so would I."

"You are all right now," she smiled. "You don't look or talk as you did."

"It's this sunlight." He lifted a spread hand as if to clutch and hold something. "I feel it soaking into me like some magical oil. No more moping and whining for me. I've proved that hardship is good for me."

"Don't crow till you're out of the woods. It's a long ride down the hill and going down is harder on the tenderfoot than going up."

"I'm no longer a tenderfoot. All I need is another trip like this with you and I shall be a master trailer."

All this was very sweet to her, and though she knew they should be going she lingered. Childishly reckless of the sinking sun, she played with the wild flowers at her side and listened to his voice in complete content. He was right. The hour was too beautiful to be shortened, although she saw no reason why others equally delightful might not come to them both. He was more of the lover than he had ever been before, that she knew, and in the light of his eyes all that was not girlish and charming melted away. She forgot her heavy shoes, her rough hands and sun tanned face and listened with wondering joy and pride to his words, which were of a fineness such as she had never heard spoken—only books contained such unusual and exquisite phrases.

A cloud passing across the sun flung down a shadow of portentous chill and darkness. She started to her feet with startled recollection of the place and the hour.

"We must be going—at once!" she commanded.

"Not yet," he pleaded. "It's only a cloud. The sun is coming out again. I have perfect confidence in your woodcraft. Why not spend another night on the trail? It may be our last trip together."

He tempted her strongly, so frank and boyish and lovable were his glances and his words. But she was vaguely afraid of herself, and though the long ride at the moment seemed hard and dull the thought of her mother waiting decided her action.

"No, no!" she responded firmly. "We have wasted too much time already. We must ride."

He looked up at her with challenging glance. "Suppose I refuse—suppose I decide to stay here?"

Upon her as he talked a sweet hesitation fell, a dream which held more of happiness than she had ever known. "It is a long, hard ride," she thought, "and another night on the trail will not matter." And so the moments passed on velvet feet, and still she lingered, reluctant to break the spell.

Suddenly into their idyllic drowse of content, so sweet, so youthful and so pure of heart, broke the sound of a horse's hurrying, clashing steel shod feet, and, looking up, Berrie saw a mounted man coming down the mountain side with furious, reckless haste.

"It is Cliff!" she cried out. "He's on our trail!" And into her face came a look of alarm. Her lips paled; her eyes widened. "He's mad—he's dangerous! Leave him to me," she added.

There was something so sinister in the rider's disregard of stone and tree and pace, something so menacing in the forward thrust of his body, that Berrie was able to divine his wrath and was smitten into irresolution, all her hardy, boyish self reliance swallowed up in the weakness of the woman. She forgot the pistol at her belt and awaited the assault with rigid pose.

As Belden neared them Norcross also perceived that the rider's face was distorted with passion and that his glance was not directed upon Berrie, but upon himself, and he braced himself for the attack.

Leaving his saddle with one flying leap, which the cowboy practices at play, Belden hurled himself upon his rival with the fury of a panther.

The slender youth went down before the big rancher as though struck by a catapult, and the force of his fall against the stony earth stunned him so that he lay beneath his enemy as helpless as a child.

Belden snarled between his teeth, "I told you I'd kill you, and I will!"

But this was not to be. Berea suddenly recovered her native force. With a cry of pain, of anger, she flung herself on the maddened man's back. Her hands encircled his neck like a collar of bronze.

SLATON SAVED BY SOLDIERS

Would Have Suffered Bodily Harm but For Their Presence

EPITHETS ARE HURLED AT HIM

Mob Cries "Lynch Him" as He Turns Executive Office Over to Successor —Was Popular With Georgia People Until Death Sentence of Frank Was Commuted

Atlanta, June 28.—Remnants of the mob which followed John M. Slaton, the retiring governor of Georgia, from the capital with cries of "Lynch him" "Traitor!" "King of the Jews!" and jeers in the remarkable demonstration which wound up the inauguration ceremonies, remained on guard at the Terminal railroad station Sunday for the frankly-avowed purpose of preventing the "escape" of the erstwhile executive from Atlanta. Slaton's baggage is at the station checked for New York.

The feeling aroused by Slaton's action in commuting the death sentence imposed on Leo M. Frank for the murder of Mary Pragan culminated when Slaton retired from the executive office and Judge Harris was inaugurated.

For the first time in the history of Georgia a governor has left office with a great crowd hurling epithets at him and only being saved from bodily harm by the presence of a large force of police and state troops.

Following this demonstration at the capitol Slaton was placed in an automobile, which was accompanied by a heavily armed escort, and driven rapidly away.

Such was the manner of the retirement from office of Slaton, who has served Georgia for more than two years as governor. Up to within the past two weeks it seemed probable that Slaton would retire as one of the most popular governors that Georgia has ever had and that the people would gladly grant him whatever political honors to which he might aspire in the future.

Then came his decision commuting the death sentence of Frank, and practically the entire state flamed into wrath against Slaton. The strength and fierceness of the outburst must have surprised the governor, for it even surprised those who opposed the commutation of Frank's death sentence.

Last Monday night the governor's home was attacked and he was forced to call out the troops and declare martial law at his country estate to save himself. Martial law has obtained there ever since and the governor has ventured nowhere without being guarded.

Since Monday night Atlanta had been quiet and there had been no further attempt to attack Slaton. Rumors had been current all the week, however, of secret mass meetings at night and of plans being formed for a great demonstration at the capitol.

When Slaton retired from office the authorities took these rumors seriously, and they made preparations for coping with any outbreak that might occur. The saloons in Atlanta were closed and a strong force of police was mobilized at the capital.

The Fifth regiment, Georgia national guards of Atlanta, was under arms, and in addition the Second regiment came in from Macon and marched to the capitol with Governor-elect Harris.

It was well that these precautions were taken, for without the strong force of troops and police it is believed that Slaton would have suffered bodily injury.

BANK OF ITALY SUSPENDS

War Caused Heavy Withdrawals From Institution In Chicago

Chicago, June 28.—A crowd of excited Italians, fearing they would lose their savings, stormed the State Bank of Italy, which announced that it would pay its depositors and quit business, forced into the move by the war.

Riot calls resulted in the arrival of police, who finally placated the depositors, who were admitted to the tellers' cages and paid.

The bank has a capital of $200,000. Deposits amounted to $375,000. Withdrawals following the entry of Italy into the war, depositors sending the money to relatives at home, was said to be one of the causes of the closing.

Large Gifts of Books to Harvard

Cambridge, Mass., June 28.—The Harvard college library announced gifts of books to the number of 48,000 during the past year. This is the largest number added to the library in any one year of its history.

Petrograd, June 28.—W. A. Soukhomlinoff, Russian minister of war, has resigned. It is understood that General Polivanoff, a former assistant minister of war, will succeed him.

Chili's Next President

Santiago, June 28.—Don Juan Luis San Fuentes was elected president of the Chilian republic. He was the candidate of the Democratic party.

PRESIDENT GETS LOST

Wilson Strikes Country Road That "Never Went Nowhere"

Windsor, Vt., June 28.—President Wilson and members of his family, out for an afternoon automobile ride, became lost in the foothills of the Green Mountains, and for nearly five hours were riding through dense forests, up and down steep inclines, part of the time in a driving rain.

At one place where the party had lost its way the automobiles were stopped and Mr. Sayre spoke to a farmer standing beside the road.

"Where does road go?" asked Sayre.

"I've been living here all my life and it never went nowhere," replied the man, while the president tried to preserve his gravity.

The president was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre, Miss Margaret Wilson, Miss Bones, Dr. Grayson and several secret service men. Apparently he enjoyed the experience and forgot entirely the cares of office he left behind him when he came here for a brief vacation.

PREACH MESSAGE OF PREPAREDNESS

Grand Army Commander's Advice to His Comrades

Chicago, June 28.—Civil war veterans were commissioned to go forth and preach the message of "preparedness for war" in an address delivered by Commander-in-Chief Palmer to the members of Old Glory post of the Grand Army of the Republic.

"You are the ones to arouse the people," Palmer said. "I do not want this country to go to war any more than millions of her patriotic citizens do, but we should be prepared in order to defend ourselves in case of attack—and you are the men to arouse the people.

"You all suffered through the lack of preparedness during the Civil war and it is your duty to your country and to your fellowmen to use every effort to advance the cause of preparedness now."

Butler Kills Woman and Self

Philadelphia, June 28.—Joseph Thomas, 40, a negro butler in the employ of Frederick E. Hastings, shot and killed Miss Hattie Watson, 55, sister-in-law of his employer, at the Hastings residence. He then shot and hanged himself. Thomas is supposed to have suddenly become insane.

MRS. F. E. JONES SCARES AWAY PORCH CLIMBER

Police Seek Man of Mystery Whom Hultman Chased Last Fall

The police seached until dawn Sunday morning for a porch climber who was discovered forcing a second story window at the home of Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Jones at Hancock street and Whitney road.

The man was discovered by Mrs. Jones about 12.30 A. M., just as he was forcing one of the windows on the south side of the house. She phoned the police and then screamed for assistance. Thoroughly alarmed the man jumped to the ground, a distance of ten feet and escaped injury. He ran up Hancock street, toward City square, turned up Saville street and disappeared in the Presidents Hill district.

Duing his flight he passed Lawrence Keegan and William Childs two conductors. They gave the incident little thought until they heard the screams of Mrs. Jones. They then took up the chase but were unsuccessful.

The man passed them under a street light and they were able to secure a good description of him. They said he appeared to be an Italian, about 5 ft. 6 in., in height. He wore dark clothes and a soft collared shirt of dark material and a cap.

Officers Whelan, Halloran, Hollinshead, Olson and Canavan made the search. The heavy mist aided the man in his escape.

The description of the man tallies with that given by others living in the neighborhood of a man who has been hanging around the vicinity and also with the description of the man who was caught attempting to enter the Hultman home a short distance from City square, last fall.

Mrs. Jones and her family were alone at the time, her husband not having returned from Philadelphia, where he was at the school conducted by the regular army, for militia officers.

OBJECTION TO NEGRO NEIGHBOR

The residents of Houghs Neck are preparing to draw the color line, the result of a rumor that property in a desirable section has been purchased by a colored man and wife. A direct line has not been decided upon, pending confirmation of the rumor.

Some of the people whose home in the section where the property is located are wrought up to a high pitch of excitement and declare that spite fences and other well known methods will be adopted to show their disapproval of the newcomers.

But, although they are satisfied the property has been sold they are not certain that it will be occupied by the purchaser. Until then they will make no open declaration of war, but their note of warning they say is to be delivered.

RAIN DOES NOT STOP ENJOYMENT

The storm of Saturday interfered but little with the picnic of the Sunday school of St. Chrysostom's church. There were about 175 in the party, the trip to Nantasket being made by special electric cars. The participants took basket lunches with them and made their headquarters at the Hotel Nantasket.

There was no set program for the outing, each seeking the form of pleasure that pleased he or she best. Some went in bathing and others took in Paragon Park and the various side shows with which the place abounds. During the chower in the afternoon many of the party remained on the piazza of the hotel and enjoyed the band concert.

USE OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

Boston is learning how to make use of its school-buildings during more of the day than the restricted hours when the children are in them. Review of the year's activity at the school centres, under the direction of the department for the Extended Use of the Schools, shows that more and more adults are coming to enjoy the privileges which they may enjoy at evening meetings, whether of social or educational character, arranged in the schoolrooms.

Seven such centres are now maintained in various parts of Greater Boston, and there organizations, ranging from orchestras to classes in manual training, have been formed and successfully maintained. The academic courses are not neglected, and the type of instruction requested in them has been of significance.

The men have asked to be given next year further knowledge of American government, of economic problems, of the means to personal efficiency, and the women have expressed interest in courses on pure food, the appreciation of music, and other subjects,, each of value in its kind. Only a small appropriation is now being given the school centres, and hence they have had to be made in large measure self-supporting, but surely the city will not be slow in helping those who show such an eagerness to help themselves.—Boston Transcript.

GERMAN THOROUGHNESS.

The American playground has been given first place in the possible war with Germany. About a year ago a young German worked a long time in the New York State library at Albany copying data concerning the location and area of every playground, park and other public space in all cities of consequence in the United States. It is now claimed by officials at Albany that the man was getting the information for the German Government, that it might be able to pick out the soft spots to land in this country when it became necessary to invade with the zeppelins and take the United States—Worcester Telegram.

MISS MARY FAXON IS BEAUTIFUL JUNE BRIDE

Church Full of People See Her Wed Lemuel Bannister of Montclair, N. J.

Surrounded by her dearest friends and relatives last evening at the First Unitarian church Miss Mary Munroe Faxon became the bride of Lemuel Bannister, of Montclair, N. J. The ceremony was performed at eight o'clock by Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, minister of the church and long before that hour a steady stream of guests arrived. The whole square was alive with scurrying autos, and a line was formed which reached back to Chestnut street.

The church, which was filled, was decorated with day-break and white peonies, palms and greenery. On each pew in the center aisle was a pretty bunch of pink and white peonies, tied with a graceful pink maline bow. The altar steps were banked with palms, and the peonies were arranged with the greenery in vases. Mrs. Clarence Burgin supervised the decorating, and she was assisted by many of Miss Faxon's friends.

The bridesmaids entered the two doors at the front of the church, to the strains of Lohengrins Wedding March played by William Ellis Weston. They were followed by the ushers, and all marched down the broad centre aisle and met the little flower girl, the maid of honor, the bride and her father at the church door. The whole bridal procession then proceeded up the aisle to the altar where stood the groom, his best man, and Rev. Mr. Hudson.

The ceremony was very impressive, the single ring service being used.

Miss Faxon made a lovely bride. Her gown was of white satin, with duchess lace, and long court train of satin over which was gracefully draped her long tulle veil. Her veil was prettily arranged on her head with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids. As she slowly walked down the aisle she made a stately and charming picture which will long be remembered by her guests.

Little Miss Ruth Faxon, the bride's sister, made a sweet little flower girl. She wore a dainty dress of white embroidered batiste over pink silk, and carried a basket of pink rose-buds.

The maid of honor, Miss Elizabeth Ellsworth of Bronxville, N. Y., the bride's cousin, was becomingly gowned in white pompadour silk, trimmed with pink and blue tulle. She carried American beauties.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Fanny Ellsworth of Bronxville, N. J., Louise Abercrombie of Braintree, Beatrice Morrison and Clarice Doble of Quincy. They were all dressed in gowns of rose pink pompadour silk trimmed with baby blue tulle. The dresses were made with full skirts, full boleros, and a surplice of tulle crossed at the breast and ending in a sash at the back making the gowns look quaint and girlish. The bridesmaids all carried huge arm bouquets of rink roses.

The ushers were Alfred Hennan Bannister of Omaha, Neb., Morris Harding Bannister of Indianapolis, Ind., brothers of the groom Henry H. Faxon of Quincy brother of the bride Elmer Ellsworth of Bronxville, N. Y. F. Morton Smith of Quincy, John Morris of Westchester New York City, and William T. Bostwick of Montclair, N. J.

The best man was Joseph Greg Morrison of Exeter, N. H., formerly of Braintree. Mr. Morrison is the bride's uncle and was the groom's classmate at Harvard. Mr. Bannister acted as Mr. Morrison's best man when the latter married Miss Mary Bates of Braintree a few years ago.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, Henry M. Faxon.

A largely attended reception at the home of the bride's parents on Adams street followed the ceremony at the church.

The bridal couple were assisted in receiving by the bride's parents and Mrs. A. J. Mason, mother of the groom Mrs. Faxon wore an exquisite gown of embroidered light blue silk trimmed with tulle, which was extremely becoming. Mrs. Mason was gowned in lavendar and white silk.

The decorations at the house were wonderfully beautiful consisting of pink roses, palms, lilies of the valley, greenery and American beauties.

The long drawing room where the bride and groom received was filled with great vases and baskets of roses and the walls were completely banked with hemlock, giving the impression that the room was some lovely woodland bower especially grown for such an occasion. The green and bright pink of the American beauties made a perfect background for the bridal party.

The parlor had simply pink roses, artistically in keeping with the delicate tone of the room. The dining room was filled with low vases of roses and the windows had arches of drooping hemlock.

The stair rails were hung with greenery and at intervals hung baskets of roses nestling in among the green. Palms were put in every available corner, but were so skillfully arranged that they were never obtrusive.

The whole effect was lovely beyond words, but perhaps loveliest of all was the Italian garden, lighted by electric bulbs. The garden is a delightful retreat of flowers with box edge, brick walks and center pieces of pond lilies.

At the end of this lovely bit of nature, was the tent where the spread was served. The tent was a large affair brilliantly lighted by electric decorated with festoons of greenery.

Here, later in the evening, the Atlantic Man Enlisted In Canadian Regiment

Further word in regard to the condition of Jack C. Richardson of Atlantic, who is at a war hospital in France suffering from a shock is anxiously awaited by his parents and sister.

Mr. Richardson, who is twenty-seven years of age, came here from Canada at the age of twenty. At the outbreak of the was he offered his services to his former captain in the Queens Own Rifles of Toronto, Canada, 3rd Battalion, and went across with the first Canadian contingent in October.

After being confined for a week in the hospital from gas poisoning, Richardson returned to the trenches, and according to the records he could not have been in service but a few days when he received the shock, of which his family first received news of on Friday, when a telegram from the War Office at Ottawa reached them.

JEROME MAY BE WITNESS

(By United Press)

New York, June 29—Former Dist. Atty. William C. Jerome, for nine years the barrier between Harry K. Thaw and liberty, may yet assume his old role as "Nemesis." It became known today that the state is planning to use Jerome as a witness.

By the use of certain statements Jerome was alleged to have admitted to Thaw's lawyers that he never believed Thaw was insane. The state attorneys are co-operating to bring him into court to refute the testimony. One of the statements was that Jerome declared he believed that the "mirrored room with the swinging bed" maintained by Stanford White was a contributary cause in arousing Thaw's anger which ended in the killing of White. Another was that Jerome said "it is a good thing White was killed." Atty. Stanchfield used these two expressions many times during the session.

MYSTERIOUS AEROPLANE FOUND IN UNUSED SQUANTUM HANGAR

Squantum Women's Club, Owner of Building, Cannot Find Whence It Came Nor to Whom it Belongs

Squantum is feverishly excited today over a mysterious aeroplane discovered in what was thought to have been an abandoned hangar on the aviation field and although all sorts of ways have been taken to solve the mystery it is as much a puzzle today as it was at five o'clock Monday evening.

The hanger housing the machine was purchased last month by the Squantum Women's club and a few days ago the club received notice that the building must be taken from the property because of the expiration of leases held by various parties.

The members, at their wits end as to what to do with the building placed it on the market for sale and Monday afternoon a prospect appeared and was taken to the field by Mrs. H. A. Morse, president of the club, and other members.

On arriving at the hangar they found that the big double doors which swing outward were ajar and on looking in they say what appeared to be an aircraft. Surprise gave way to curiosity and within a few minutes the fastenings were forced and in the sunlight they saw flashing the white canvass of the planes and the burnished steel of the engine.

The entire party immediately qualified as experts and an examination was made and revealed that the machine was partly assembled. Search of the hangar uncovered nothing that would lead to the ownership of the craft and the only article which might be taken as a clue was a piece of wrapping paper bearing the name of Saunders, a Boston hardware dealer.

Nothing was painted on the planes to indicate its ownership and none of the woodwork was stenciled as is frequently the case. The wire supports were even unnumbered and the nameplate had been removed from the motor.

A series of telephone calls, according to the residents, brought denials of ownership from Noble Foss, son of the former governor, the Burgess-Wright Co., and other manufacturers. Today Mrs. Morse and the members are consulting attorneys to learn their rights in the case.

Whether or not the machine is the property of an experimenter or of some expert who is secretly building the machine for a foreign government is the question agitating the Squantumites.

Boys who worked around the field as assistants to Harry M. Jones the Rhode Island aviator who is recovering at his home at Rocky Point from the effects of his recent crash to earth say that he dosen't own the machine. They say the engine was removed from his wrecked craft and taken away in a motor truck and that what was left of it was burned on the shores of the bay in a bon fire.

Residents down there are also threatening to report it to the Federal authorities and ask for a government investigation. What developments will take place today are keenly awaited by the members and others who have taken it upon themselves to find the owner.

HEAT OVERCOMES SEPTUAGENARIAN

James Dillon, father of James Dilon of the fire department and one of the best known residents of West Quincy, collapsed while at work in the blacksmith shop of the McLane Granite Co., on Quarry street on Monday afternoon and was taken to his home. This morning he is practically recovered. Mr. Dillon is a blacksmith by trade and despite his 76 years finds more enjoyment in pursing that line than following an easy life. His collapse was probably the result of the heat.

POLICE SEEK PORCH CLIMBER

The prowler who has been busy in the Adams Academy neighborhood the past week and who is thought to have been the porch climber frightened away from the home of Dr. Fred E. Jones after midnight Saturday, during his absence, did not appear Monday night. A sharp lookout is being kept by the residents and the police of the city have been furnished with a description of the man.

FIGHT FIRE IN ATLANTIC CHURCH

The Central Station and Atlantic Combination responded on a still alarm at 10.35 this morning for a slight fire in the Methodist Episcopal church at Atlantic, located near the corner of Squantum street and Newbury avenue. Some painters had been at work in the church and it is supposed oily rags left on one of the benches got over heated and started the fire. All of the fire was on this bench and but little damage was done.

PLEADS NOT GUILTY TO MANSLAUGHTER CHARGE

Lawyer Arrested After Death of Child Struck By His Auto

Raynor M. Gardiner of Hill Crest street, Belmont, a lawyer, was before Judge Avery this morning charged with manslaughter. He pleaded not guilty and bail of $2,000, furnished after his arrest by his wife, was allowed to stand. He will be given a hearing July 8.

Gardiner was operator of the automobile which struck and killed Christina Davidson, the 5 1-2 year old daughter of Peter Davidson of North Weymouth on Bridge street, a short distance from the home of the girl, Monday evening.

The little girl was on her way to the grocery store and is said to have stepped directly in front of the automobile, which was moving at a moderate rate of speed. She was knocked down and one of the wheels passed over her head but the car was so well under control that it was stopped before the second wheel touched her.

Mrs. Gardiner picked up the child and Mr. Gardiner drove to the home of the nearest doctor but he was not at home. Another physician was telephoned for but the child died before he arrived. Medical Examiner Frazier said that death was probably due to a fracture of the skull and internal injuries.

Chief of Police Arthur H. Pratt placed Mr. Gardiner under arrest on a charge of manslaughter. He was later admitted to $2,000 bail. Witnesses say that Mr. Gardiner was operating the car very carefully and that the accident was unavoidable.

BRYAN LAYS HIS PLANS.

It becomes increasingly clear that William Jennings Bryan, failing to learn by experience that by no possibility can he ever be elected President of the United tSates, has well defined aspirations for 1916. To be perfectly fair with him it may be admitted that his resignation as secretary of state for the United States was induced by motives which do credit to his personal integrity and regard of high principles of international conduct. When that is aid, however, one has said the best one can for him. It is apparent that the resignation, however honorable may have been the motives which induced it, fell in most opportunely with his presidential bee. He has broken with the President; now he can begin to lay his plans to supplant him.

If he seeks an excuse outside of the divergence of Wilson and himself upon the country's attitude toward the Great War he finds one ready at hand. Doubtless he will make much of the one term plank in the Democratic platform, a platform which Woodrow Wilson indorsed. That plank, it will be remembered read:

"We favor a single presidential term, and to that and urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible to reelection, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to that principle."

If Wilson stands for a second term and it seems probable that he will, the man who handed him the nomination at Baltimore in 1912 will doubtless renounce him as untrue to his pledge and as to him natural corollary will declare that his cocked hat is once more in the arena.

ENCOURAGING THE ENEMY.

If the accusation of Cong. Gardner of Massachusetts, that the quality of marksmanship in the navy has showed no improvement this year over previous years, is true the people of the United States face a disconcerting fact. Capt. Gardner demands publicity upon this and other questions from the secretary of the navy. Daniels refuses to give the publicity desired by the energetic Massachusetts congressman.

We fear that silence gives assent to the accusation. While it is obvious that full information regarding our war capacities should not be divulged in this time of stress and danger yet if the accusation were not true there would seem to be little harm in saying so. If there is a deficiency it is, perhaps, hardly wise to divulge it so that all the world, more especially our friends (?) across the water, may become emboldened by delusions regarding our unpreparedness for war.

Cong. Gardner probably is justified in feeling incensed over the inefficiency of the secretary of the navy but in the present instance with the note from Germany still to come it hardly seems as if his action was wise.

SQUANTUM IN ERROR.

Squantumites on Monday censured the fire department claiming there was a mixup in the sounding of the alarm and that the department was delayed in arriving. This is a mistaken belief.

Box 53, pulled for the fire which destroyed the home of Mrs. I. A. Cullen and family, sounded regularly at Central station and there was no delay. The auto chemical of Central station probably has made no better run since it was put in commission although it has been a godsend because of its speed in more ways than one.

Less than seven onlookers were at the fire when the department arrived and others who arrived late knew nothing about it until the jangling of their telephone bell awakened them and excited people living in other sections of the city inquired where the fire was.

INVESTIGATE THOROUGHLY

We trust that the Department of Justice will carry out its announced intention of sifting to the bottom the Huerta plot in an attempt to find the backers no matter where the investigation may lead.

If the investigation is successful it may serve a very useful purpose. There have been accusations from time to time during the recent upheavals in Mexico that they were being fostered by this and that financial interest. In order that the American people through their President may arrive at an intelligent policy toward war-ridden Mexico. it is essential that they should have a clear comprehension of the various forces at work to keep Mexico in insurrection.

A MORE WORTHY OBJECT

Courtenay Guild in a recent address observed that there were over 1000 men at the Harvard class reunions last week and assuming an average of $3 a plate for wines and other spirituous liquors he pointed out that is meant an expenditure of $3000. This is enough, he contended, to support 100 starving Belgium babies for 100 days. Whether prohibition advocates or not it would seem that all reasonable men would agree that saving 100 babies from starvation is a rather more worthy use to which to put the $3000 than to make a lot of grown men act like undergraduates.

Only one more day to become a June bride.

AUTO INDUSTRY GOOD.

Hard times and business depressions have apparently no place in the automobile industry just now. Between the great demand for truck and commercial cars of various kinds by the warring countries and the constantly growing demand for passenger cars, the trade is highly prosperous. During March commercial cars to the value of $4, 725,563 were shipped abroad and passenger cars to the value of $1,958,302 were sent to Europe. These figures indicate very material increases over last year's figures for foreign automobile shipments. For the nine months ending with March, which are virtually nine months of war, the exports of commercial cars were valued at $18,737,487, against only $861,654 in the preceding period, while the movement to foreign buyers of passenger cars indicated a total of $28,289,218, against $18,765.—Banker and Tradesman.

SECRETARY LANSING.

Almost any successor to William Jennings Bryan as Secretary of State would shine in comparison and deserve therefore warm welcome from the public. Certainly Robert Lansing is no exception to this rule, for he brings to his new office a thorough training in the law and considerable experience in its international branch. Under Republican and Democratic administrations alike his services as special counsel in various cases have been secured with satisfactory results. His appointment, however, to the great and responsible office at the right hand of the President, which has been held by some of the most distinguished statesmen in the history of the Republic, must depend for indorsement upon its comparison with the man Mr. Lansing succeeds rather than with the predecessors of Mr. Bryan.

Mr. Lansing is not, and will never be, a Root, a Hay or an Olney. His promotion to the post must be hailed as the outward and visible sign that President Wilson intends to continue his policy of acting for the most part as his own Secretary of State. Mr. Lansing succeeds to a clerical secretaryship in which he will have the President as the head of his department. It is evident that Mr. Wilson has become chary of appointing a man of high political standing in his own party to the highest office in his gift, and were he seeking the aid of a vigorous hand at the helm the new Secretary of State would be a lawyer of the international reputation of John Bassett Moore or one of the native ability and local strength of Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia. The president's experience with Mr. Bryan has probably taught him a lesson in politics which has resulted in his adoption of the safe policy of promoting the counsellor of the department with whom he has already worked in what might be described as clerical harmony, rather than in going afield to find a man of larger ability but less docility.

The reason of President Wilson's predilection for Mr. Lansing is not difficult to understand. Mr. Lansing is willing that the President should dictate the policy of the Department of State. This willingness on the part of Mr. Lansing was shown by his acceptance of the position of counsellor when it was vacated by John Bassett Moore. Mr. Moore's complaint, according to undenied statements in the press, was that his advice was not sought or taken by Secretary Bryan. We can now look forward to Mr. Wilson's holding practically two offices—President of the United States and Secretary of State. As President he was Mr. Tumulty for Secretary, as Secretary of State he has Mr. Lansing as clerical secretary.—Boston Transcript.

AMERICANS IN MEXICAN PLOT

Texas and New York Men Are Said to Be Involved

SECRET SERVICE MEN ACTIVE

Have Been Working on Texas End of Alleged Conspiracy Since Last April —Government Said to Have Proof That Huerta and Orozco Planned to Invade Mexico

Washington, June 29.—Inside details of the plot to restore a Huerta regime to Mexico, nipped in the bud by the United States, began trickling out through the net of official secrecy, while General Huerta and his chief lieutenant, Pascual Orozco, are under federal detention at El Paso.

The arrest of Huerta and Orozco were only the beginning of a nation-wide prosecution of leading Mexican exiles and some Americans of more or less prominence who became interested in the latest attempt to establish a government south of the Rio Grande by bloodshed.

Evidence seeming to connect General Angeles, chief of the Villa staff, with the plotted revolution by the Huertistas, is said to be in the hands of the department of justice, which has been investigating his presence in Boston. It was also declared that Angeles already had started for Washington, personally to deny any connection with the movement which was nipped at Newman, N. M.

Angeles has been quick to deny that he or his chief has been in any way connected with the former dictator since his arrival in the United States, but it is suspected that he has been concerned in the plot.

Clifford Beckham, a lawyer of Fort Worth, Tex., was the specoal agent of the department of justice who arrested the former president of Mexico and his chief aid in the projected revolution. Since April 22, Beckham and a corps of secret service operatives have been working on the El Paso end of the alleged conspiracy.

Beckham said at El Paso that more arrests undoubtedly would be made. The Americans are citizens of Texas, he said. It was understood the Texas arrests probably would not be the last; that more might be made in New York next.

At the hearing before United States Commissioner Oliver at El Paso Huerta and Orozco will be represented by the El Paso firm of Lea, McGrady & Thomason.

According to Beckham the government will be prepared to prove its charge that the two defendants conspired to invade Mexico at the head of an armed force gathered in the United States, in part, a violation of American neutrality laws.

Beckham admitted that his agents are watching Huerta and Orozco to prevent their crossing the border and jumping their bail bonds of $15,000 and $7500 respectively. The others to be arraigned are also under espionage, and any attempt to escape will be blocked. The authorities believe the arrests have broken up the revolution.

SMITH'S SIXTH WIFE

She Was Found Dead In Bathtub the Day After Her Marriage

London, June 29.—The crown presented its last witness in the trial of George J. Smith, charged with drowning three of his six wives in their bathtubs.

Mrs. Louise Blatch, landlady of a rooming house at Highgate, where Smith took his sixth wife, Margaret E. Lotty, on her honeymoon, told of the young bride's mysterious death the day following her marriage. Smith glared at her defiantly.

"I heard the front door slam as it Mr. Smith had gone out," said Mrs. Blatch. "I didn't look to see if he really went out.

"In about half an hour he came into the kitchen with his hat in his hand and some tomatoes. He said he had just been to market. Then he went on upstairs and in a minute we heard him yell:

"'Come up quick! She's dead—in the tub!'

"I ran up and there he was in the bathroom, holding the girl's head."

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Editor of the Ledger:

The statement in your editorial item in Monday evening's Ledger in regard to Sunday opening of the Thomas Crane Public Library was surprisingly inaccurate.

Far from being "unsuccessful," it was under all the circumstances a success, and instead of being "abandoned" it was merely discontinued during the summer months in accordance with the original intention of the trustees and the custom prevailing in other libraries.

MISS MARY FAXON

bride cut her cake. The cake contained many lovely surprises for the lights. This, too, was artistically lucky recipients. Mrs. Everett Winslow found the thimble in her piece, Miss Elizabeth Ellsworth the ring, Miss Dorothy Kingsbury a gold heart-shaped locket and Miss Beatrice Morrison a gold wishbone pin set with pearls.

A seven piece orchestra on the piazza furnished inspiring music for dancing of which the guests took advantage and many new steps were danced on the broad piazza.

The bride started upstarts shortly after ten and stopped half way up to throw among her eager friends her bridal bouquet. There was a lively scramble to get a little piece of it and numerous hands stretched up to catch a flower or ribbon.

The going away gown was of blue taffeta with a big brown hat and brown furs.

The couple were generously covered with pink and white rose petals as they descended the stairs and entered the automobile and were also heartily showered with good wishes.

Mr. and Mrs. Bannister are to live in Montclair, N. J.

Mrs. Bannister was born in Quincy and has lived here all her life. She is a graduate of the Quincy Mansion school, and after graduating spent a year in Germany, studying and traveling.

Mr. Bannister's home is in Upper Montclair, N. J. He is a lawyer and practices in New York City.

Although by far the most largely attended wedding of the month there was almost no confusion and all of the guests at the reception were comfortably accommodated in the spacious house and grounds. Hundreds of automobiles came and went without accident.

THE AUDITORIUM

Robert Warwick, whose work in "The Man of the Hour" and other motion picture successes recently shown at the Auditorium Theatre has made him a favorite among Quincy spectators, will be seen at the Auditorium Wednesday and Thursday in "The Man who Found Himself."

James Clarke, young cashier, robs his employers in order to provide medical attention for his sick sister. She dies and a fellow employee of Clarke discovers his theft and blackmails him. Both are found out, prosecuted and sent to gaol.

By a series of chances James Clarke escapes from gaol, get a job, is earning an honest living and has won the love of a girl whose life he saved.

Payton, his fellow thief, after serving his full sentence, discovers Clarke and once more blackmails him, attacking the happiness of his fiancee and her brother, and taunting Clarke with cowardice.

From this terrible situation Clarke escapes by voluntarily returning to gaol to serve the remainder of his sentence.

He has "found" himself. He knows that when he finally leaves the gaol, Caroline, who has promised to be his wife, will be waiting to help him start life afresh.

OBSERVES ITS FESTIVAL SUNDAY

At the Sunday morning service of the Wollaston Congregational church, Charles H. Everett sang very effectively two solos. Dr. Sneath spoke upon the theme "The Palm-tree Christian." "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree." The preacher likened the Chirstian to a palm-tree in its erect and upright growth, in its fruitfulness, utility and beauty. Dr. Sneath took occasion to say that B. Fay Mills was wise in returning to an unqualified faith in the deity and Saviourship of Jesus Christ. This act does not necessarily show any disrespect to the Unitarian body, which certainly has treated Mr. Mills with the greatest of courtesy duriug his period of philosophical investigations.

At the Sunday school festival Sunday was observed. The primary department under the direction of Mrs. C. P. Hutchins sang several selections. Mrs. Charles E. Hathaway read several appropriate poems. Remarks were made by Supt. Charles S. Campbell and Dr. Sneath. Ice cream and cake were served by Mrs. C. S. Campbell, Mrs. R. F. Trumper and Mrs. C. E. Hathaway. It was announced that the school had paid up its pledge to the parish house up to date.

At the C. E. meeting Miss Marion West spoke upon "Christian Song" and Mrs. W. K. Embleton sang several solos.

Dr. Fred E. Jones of Hancock street returned Monday from Philadelphia, where he has been attending the school conducted by the regular army for militia officers.

CLAN MacGREGOR HEAR BOTH SIDES

Suffs and Antis Each Have Speaker at Meeting

There was a large gathering of the clan last evening in Clan MacGregor hall when Miss Edna Lawrence Spencer of the Suffrage camp and Mrs. A. J. George of the anti-suffrage ranks spoke for and against woman suffrage. Miss Spencer spoke first, while Mrs. George remained in an adjoining room. She said in part:

"I wish to honor this evening one of the pioneers of suffrage—Frances Wright, a young Scotchwoman, who came to this country in 1826 and was the first to speak from a public platform advocating political equality.

"In that day there was not the necessity of woman suffrage that there is today, but now every class of woman needs the ballot. The woman who a hundred years ago depended upon her own farm for pure milk, pure eggs, pure butter, and pure water must today depend upon the government for these things. Should she not then have a voice in the making of laws that so vitally affect the life, health, and happiness of the family?

"But if the woman in the home needs the ballot, how much more does the woman in industry whose wages, hours of work, and working conditions are all regulated by laws in which she has no making. Every man who belongs to a labor union knows that behind every gain they have made lies the power of the ballot. For it is only natural that legislators should pay attention to their constituents' demands, and if you put women in that class they will pay attention to their demands too.

"Some of the things that women want are equal pay for equal work, a minimum wage law for women, a national child labor law. Equal pay for equal work is as necessary for the sake of the men workers as for the women, for the cheap competition of women's work is one of the factors in pulling down the wages of men. We want a national child labor law to prevent the unwholesome competition between the states that have adequate legislation of this kind and those like South Carolina that have not.

"Granting the franchise to women will not disrupt the home. We have more faith in men than to think that their devotion to their wives depends on whether she votes or not.

"The indirect influence that women have now is slow and burdensome. It took Massachusetts 55 years to get an equal guardianship law; it took New York thirty years; the women of California secured it the first year that they voted. The women of Chicago wanted a garbage incinerator and ten matrons for dance halls; they did not go out in delegations but waited to vote and they got one hundred matrons and the incinerator. With indirect influence you must go out of the home and get up monster petitions and meetings and delegations; with the ballot you go out to vote once or twice a year.

"The only cost of government that you were going to double is the printing. You will not need more booths or two city halls.

The main reason why we want women in government is not because they are better but because the first thought of a man is the business thought an dthe first thought of woman is the home thought.

"The anti-suffragists say that our suffrage states do not show anything because they are so thinly populated, but do we adopt a country's ideas just because it is densely populated? We should be taking our ideas from China and India then.

"Massachusetts has undoubtedly better laws that some of the Western states, but she is far older and she has need of some laws which states which are new and thinly settled and not given to manufactures do not need."

Miss Spencer closed by reading resolutions of the California and Colorado legislatures recommending woman suffrage.

Mrs. George was next introduced and amused the audience by a large cartoon showing the relative population of the states.

She said in part:

"I take my text tonight from the Prophet of the Plain People, Scotland's own poet, Robert Burns. It was in 1792 that he wrote these lines—lines which might have been written yesterday, so clear is their application to the issue of the hour:

"While Europe's eye is fix'd on mighty things,
The fate of Empires and the fall of kings,
While quacks of State must each produce his plan,
And even children lisp The Rights of Man;
Amid the mighty fuss, just let me mention,
The Rights of Woman merit some attention.
First, in the sexes intermix'd connection,
One sacred Right of woman's is Protection."

"And so the poet goes on to name the other Rights of woman—'decorum' or what we call courtesy between men and women; 'admiration,' which is the quality provoked in man by the development in woman of those qualities which are admirable—the recognition of which rights build up what the poet terms in happy phrase 'the majesty of woman.'

"Let us see how far the agitation for woman suffrage tends to develop this majesty. In a healthy state of society there can be no rivalry between men and women. All this agitation for the ballott tends to foster such rivalry because of its artificial claim that the terests of men and women of same group, of the same traditions, of the same education and environment are diverse. Do any of you men honestly think that the highest interests of your mothers, your sisters, your wives or your daughters are not represented by you in political affairs, just as our interests are represented by these women in the departments of life which are their natural inheritance?

"If the woman's vote is going to mean anything, save a doubled outlay of time, energy and money, it must mean that the vote of the woman is to fail differently from that of the man; that the combined votes of women will accomplish what the votes of men have failed to accomplish. This assumes, as is always assumed on suffrage platforms, that under double suffrage the average vote is to be more honest, more intelligent and more discriminating than it is today. In other words, that women as a whole will vote more honestly, intelligently discriminatingly and regularly than men."

She quoted Burns on woman's rights and took up what he said were her three right,—protection, decorum and admiration. Among other things she claimed that the taxes will be increased by woman suffrage. And the outlay will be without compensating gain for you cannot get different results unless the woman votes differently from her corresponding man. Compare the average woman with the average man and decide if she will vote better. Also compare like with like; don't compare Wyoming with Massachusetts. Pennsylvania has more women of voting age than all the voters of the suffrage states put together. We must think of the controlled vote.

""As society progresses men and women become more diverse. Voting is given to men as a division of labor. Women have a lower nervous physical vitality than men and cannot do the same work. They need protecting laws and they have these laws in Massachusetts already. We shall accomplish more not by duplicating men's work but by doing our own better,—by bringing up our sons to be good voters and good law-makers."

Clan MacGregor No. 5 held its regular semi-monthly meeting.

Two candidates were initiated and two applications were acted on.

The delegates to the Union Picnic committee reported that the Associated Clans picnic to be held at Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury, on Labor Day is to be on a bigger scale than ever.

The games are to be run on a strictly professional basis. The general public were not satisfied with the games of last year, which were run off on an amateur basis.

The competition this year will be very keen. The committee has eliminated the ten mile race and has substituted a five mile. The professional distance runners prefer that distance and promise a better race.

The five-a-side football games will be as hard fought as usual and no doubt the two local clubs will have teams on the field.

The races will be 100 yards, 220 yards, 440 yards, 880 yards, one and two miles. There will be the usual jumping events, hurdle races and pole vaults.

The wrestling match between two of the leading heavy weight wrestlers will be held. This event has not been staged at clan games for a number of years.

Walter Scott of New York city has donated gold medals and cups to be presented to the winners in the Highland events, dancing and bagpiping.

The clan adjourned at 8.30 to listen to the exponents of equal suffrage and anti-suffrage respectively.

ATLANTIC MAN LOSES BY ONE

Joe Lally of Brookline High school took the low medal prize and the honors in the qualifying round of the state junior golf championship at the Albemarle links at Newton Monday. He scored a 75.

One stroke behind him was George Kerrigan of Atlantic, brother of Tom Kerrigan of the Dedham Country and Polo club. Kerrigan turned in a card of 76 at noon and looked like the winner in the first days play. Young Joe Lally however made the course in one stroke less.

Kerrigan was two shots better than Lally after nine holes had been played, but the Atlantic youth was three over 4s for his last nine, while Lally scored a 3 for his second round.

Two 6s by Kerrigan on his second round, coming at the second and eighth holes, proved disastrous. He was trapped at the former and, after being short on his second at the eighth, missed a shot.

Lally played his last four holes two under 4s. At the sixth, on his last round he missed a three-foot putt for a 3, and at the seventh failed by inches to hole out his mashie shot for a 2.

At the eighth, 485 yards, Lally topped his drive and, after his third stopped in the road, he holed an approach shot of about 25 yards for a 3. Lally was again trapped to the home hole, but made a splendid recovery, the ball stopping about a couple of feet from the pin, which the Brookline youth holed for a 3.

The best cards were:

Joe Lally, Brookline High.

WHIST PARTY IS BIG SUCCESS

The whist party, in aid of the Holy Name society table at the field day of St. Johns parish which is to be held Saturday of this week, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Cook on Adams street Monday evening was one of the most successful of the season. There were 40 tables in play and included in the gathering were people from all parts of the city, Canton, Boston, Dorchester, Braintree and Weymouth. A large gallery watched the play.

Among the winners were Miss Josephine Daley, Miss Mae Bruton, Bert Reid, Miss Margaret Sweeney Mrs. Catherine Pitts, Mrs. T. Murphy and Mrs. John Keniley.

Fr. Michael J. Owens, pastor of St. Johns parish, and Fr. Walter A. Quinlan, one of his assistants, were the special guests of the evening.

The house was brilliantly illuminated for the occasion and the tables were set in the different rooms and also on the wide piazza. Japanese lanterns were strung about the grounds. Refreshments were served after the prizes were awarded by Mr. Cook and an impromptu musical program was given by the young women present.

The committee in charge of the affair was Miss Josephine Collagan, Mrs. M. E. Cook, Mrs. Francis Fahy, Mrs. Maurice Powers, Miss Mary Lyons and Miss Anna Walsh and Miss Anna Cahill.

VIEW GARDENS OF CHILDREN

Mrs. Wm. W. Jenness, chairman of the Children's Garden Work Committee of the Quincy Women's club has begun to make her rounds of inspection. She reports that owing largely to weather conditions the gardens are not quite as good as was expected, but she will be able to get some good gardens this summer and and about the usual number of entries.

Mrs. Jenness says that she found in making her rounds, that while the gardens were started by the children they have been neglecting them somewhat and the care has been thrown upon the parents.

This, however, is against the rules of the contest, which provide that all children who enter the contest must not only plant their own gardens but they must take all the care of them, otherwise they will not be eligible to enter the contest for the prizes.

The full list of prizes will be published sometime next month.

HOUGHS NECK IS STILL AGITATED

Houghs Neck residents spent several hours of Monday trying to learn if the colored people who recently purchased a house in one of the residential sections are to occupy it but the information gathered was not at all conclusive. Several however have had the property lines of the land run over and have already consulted lumber contractors as to how much lumber will be necessary to erect a high fence.

Complaint has been, made to the Board of Health alleging that the conditions are not sanitary and that because of the size of the lot of land on which the house is built it will be impossible to make the necessary changes so they will comply with the regulations and still not have the cesspool on the property of a neighbor.

How strong these contentions are will probably be decided by the board today, following an inspection of the premises.

The rumor that colored people were to move to this particular section started the voicing of objections. Within the past few days the protests have grown stronger and a mass meeting may be held to take formal action.

Some of the people see in the transfer an attempt quickly to dispose of property which has been on the market for some time and for which there appeared to be little demand. If this is the case, however, no one in the neighborhood can be frightened into taking over the house to accommodate the owner, according to the objectors.

VOTES TO PAY QUINCY TAXES

The Boston City Council at its meeting Monday voted to accept the legislative act concerning the matter of paying to the City of Quincy the taxes amounting to $9,157.75 due on property at Squantum and an order was sent to the city auditor to make payment as soon as possible. The agreement reached is that the City of Boston shall pay the taxes without interest.

POEHLER KING OF BOWLERS

His Total of 360 Brings All Stars Victory

Paul Poehler, champion candle pin bowler and captain of the Houghs Neck All Stars, who rolled a total of 360 a week ago and netted enough to give his combination a four pin lead over the Wardwell team, almost duplicated his performance at the Wardwell alleys Monday evening by rolling 350, enough to carry his crew home a winner by five pins. The nine point lead in the series favors his team. The third match will be rolled Monday evening.

Poehler opened with 104, jumped his second string to 120 and as a closer made 130. The support he was given by his All Stars was ordinary.

James Dell, who holds all the records for local bowling excepting the champ's marks, came over with 331. His 111, 103 and 117, brought him there. Olindy's best string was 110. Frank McPherson, who was on the team, opened with 112 and came within four of tripling. The summary.

NOT FAULT OF CHRISTIANITY.

Commenting on the attitude of the Chinese toward the Christian propaganda, in view of the awful and unchristian war, Rev. Charles L. Storrs, one of the American Board's staff in Shaowu, China, declares that while there may be hostile criticism among non-Christians, the Christian Chinese feel "that the great War is evidence not so much of a failure of Christianity, as a failure of Christians."

Mr. Storrs is an Amherst and Yale man and has been in China about ten years. Shaowu, the city in which he is stationed, is on the Min River, in Fukien, a province of some 22,000,000 inhabitants, where Sherwood Eddy held some of his wonderful evangelistic meetings last winter. Mr. Storrs as well as the other men in Fukien declares that many of the students and business men in their field are ready to become definitely Christian if only there were workers enough there to lead the way.

In the same mail with Mr. Storrs' letter came one from Rev. A. B. DeHaan, of Pangchwang, in Shantung, the district of Japan's recent activities. Mr. DeHaan says nothing about Japan, but does declare that in his district, as well as in that of Mr. Storrs, Christianity is coming.

He says: "The whole race is simply shot through with the truth. Over and over again in talking with total strangers, on trains, in the country, on the roads, in the cities and villages, I discover that Christian truth is there already. It is wonderful to me how the spirit of God, working unseen and quietly through the last century, has prepared the hearts of many people for the future. Believe me, the greatest time is yet ahead."

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

THE BLUE JUBILEE.

The good old world seems brighter
Than it has been in years;
The atmosphere is lighter,
Replete with rousing cheers;
We know that red war wages
Along Europe's plain;
We know that written pages
Are but records of the slain:
But what if Prince or Drover
Comes to his final run?
For Brickley's day is over,
And Hardwick's time is done.

Somehow the grass seems greener
And the sky's a brighter blue;
Somehow all life is keener
With a dream that's overdue;
For though there comes the weeping
Of a million in their woe,
And though the Eagle's sleeping
In the shadow of the foe,
What pains are these to sever
The golden dream we've spun
Since Brickley's passed forever,
And Hardwick's time is done?

Come, sound the tocsinned glory,
And start the jubilee;
Come forward with the story—
The Blue, at last, is free:
Safe now from torment torrid,
The Bulldog walks in pride,
With scars upon his forrid,
And patches on his hide;
To seek, amid the clover,
His old Place in the Sun,
Where Brickley's day is over,
And Hardwick's time is done.
(Grantland Rice, in the Boston Globe)

SPORTING COMMENT

Saturday entries for the field day of St. John's parish should be forwarded without delay. The committee in charge have secured a good number already. Competition will be stiff.

Among the teams that will appear at the Field Day will be the strong St. John's team, the premier amateur contingent of the city.

Little checkers is being played at the Boston Checker club but Napoleon Grignon, who holds a state title, and Michael Kiley are remaining in trim. If there is one question that should be settled it is which is the better man. Some of the West Quincy organizations should arrange the series for the fall.

Perhaps a new golf find has appeared on the horizon in the person of little George Kerrigan of Atlantic who went over the Albermarle course in 76 Monday.

The Saturday Evening Post team claims the championship of the Newsboys teams and will probably be awarded the cup offered by Mayor Campbell.

On Saturday the Fore River team plays the Gray and Davis combination at Cambridge.

The police today are playing Lynn's blue coat squad. The Quincy boys feel that they are in line for first position in the police base ball league.

The scores submitted for publication by managers on Monday were all complete. Rain put a stop to general athletics.

CONTRACTOR IS SPEEDING IT UP

The contractor is speeding up a little with the job of paving Hancock street, between Granite and School streets, and if the present speed is maintained the job should be completed in contract time, that is by the middle of July. The paving on the west side of the street is nearly finished and the top cemented and the paving has been laid on the east side between Granite street and Cottage avenue. This morning work was commenced on the section between Cottage avenue and Revere road.

Commissioner Brown says that work laying the granolithic sidewalk on the street would be commenced immediately but it will probably be the latter part of August before the street and sidewalk is fully completed.

CLAIMS STREET IS GOOD JOB

Such a good job was made on the east side of Adams street from Hancock street to Alleyne street, with the paving blocks taken from the gutters on Hancock street between Granite and School streets, that Commissioner Brown is thinking seriously of paving the west side of Adams street in a similar manner.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glynn of Hershey, Pa., who are visiting friends here, and stopping with Mr. and Mrs. Lyman J. Peterson, at present, came by auto leaving Friday and stopping over in Orange, N. J., and New London, Conn. They arrived Sunday night and after a short stay will return by auto covering over 1000 miles in all.

Combination 1 answered a phone call at 10 P. M. Sunday for a fire in an old boat house owned by W. H. Graffam of Pecksoit road. Some one not knowing about the phone, pulled box 14 for the same fire, resulting in a large crowd but small damage.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Ramsay were week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Jordan.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Smith had as guests Sunday Mrs. Frank Sargent of Beechwood, Mrs. John Wilder and Lester Smith of Norwell and Mrs. Willis Keene and daughter Phyllis.

Mr. and Mrs. Miles Keene and Irving Keene spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Newcomb of South Braintree.

Dr. W. A. Drake who is at the Boothby Hospital, Boston where he recently underwent a surgical operation is reported as well as can be expected.

CITY HALL NOTES

Mayor Campbell has signed the general sidewalk order carrying an appropriation of $9,500 for granolithic sidewalks, and Commissioner Brown is busy preparing to advertise for bids for the work. The order appropriating the sum of $1,200 for a granolithic walk on the west side of Hancock street between Granite street and Tirrell court will probably be passed at the next meeting of the City Council and as soon as that is done bids will be asked. It is desired this should be included in the contract.

The Assessors have not completed their field work as yet although the end is in sight. It should not take many days more before it will be completed. There still remains a vast amount of office work to do before it will be possible to announce the tax rate, and it will probably be the latter part of August before the citizens will learn what the rate this year will be. The general impression seems to be, that while valuations will be more like what they should be, the tax rate this year will be fully as high as last year if not higher.

Italy Determined to Try Conclusion With Turkey

BREAKING POINT IS REACHED

Heading of Rebels in Tripoli by German and Turkish Officers Believed by Italy to Justify Her Act—Russian Rear Guard on Dniester Breaks Down and Teutons Gain Further Successes—Continued Gains by Italians in Austria—Comparatively Calm on Western Front

London, June 29.—The prospect that Italy will join England and France with troops and warships in a campaign against the Turks in the Dardanelles, and the capture of Halicz, in Galicia, by the Austro-German forces, are the two outstanding features of the war news.

Although it was officially denied in Rome that Italy would participate in the Dardanelles campaign, either by land or sea, it seems more than ever certain that there will shortly be a declaration of war between the Italian and Turkish governments.

This likelihood was given substance by news from Tripoli that prisoners taken there confessed that the rebels were commanded by Turkish and German officers. Furthermore, emissaries of the sultan have been inciting the natives to a holy war and persuading them to overthrow the Italian rule.

It is the general feeling in Rome that, in view of these facts, although there has as yet been no break in the Italian-Turkish diplomatic relations, Italy is justified in displaying hostility toward Turkey without a declaration of war.

According to dispatches from Berlin, the Italian newspapers are jubilant over the prospect that Italy is to participate in the operations against the Dardanelles by sending a fleet under the Duke of the Abruzzi to release the larger British warships for important work elsewhere.

A declaration of war by Turkey is said to be considered imminent and the Rome newspapers are quoted as expressing the belief that Italy's action will signify a new era in the politics of the Orient.

Russians Continue Flight

The Russian rear guard action on the Dniester has broken down, and the czar's forces are again retreating before the Austro-Germans. After four days of heavy fighting the Teuton allies have occupied Halicz, the last strong position held by the Russians south of the Lemberg line in Galicia.

The Austro-Germans have also crossed the Dniester on a front of five miles and have compelled the Russians to take up new positions.

Austro-German activity at the present time appears limited to the movements toward the Vistula and the fight around the Dniester. The German statement tells of the constant advance toward the Bessarabia frontier from Lemberg, but gives no details.

Around the Vistula, Przasnysz again appears as a centre of fighting. The operations this time are north and northeast of the town, and there the Germans claim to have repulsed strong Russian counter-attacks against positions captured by the Germans on June 25.

The most important section of the Vistula front appears to be that portion of the river just north of the San river. There the Germans are attempting to effect a crossing with the idea of uniting their forces on the left side of the river with those operating on the other side.

Although the German statement reports that General von Linsingen has taken 6470 Russian prisoners since June 23, military observers in London are finding some comfort in the fact that Grand Duke Nicholas has been able to withdraw his army intact all along the line. He is moving nearer and nearer to the Russian military bases and the Teutons are moving farther away from theirs.

The San river now takes the place of the Dniester as the scene of a sanguinary battle in the Russian effort to prevent the investment of Warsaw. Petrograd admits the retirement of the Russians to the Gnila Lipa river, which is eighty miles from the frontier and falls into the Dniester at Halicz, but military experts do not expect heavy fighting along that river.

The Italian Campaign

Through passes 5000 feet in altitude, the Italians have entered the Austrian territory south of Riva on the western side of Lake Garda. They are now within six miles of Riva, which is the only important town on this lake.

The Italian war office issued a detailed description of the latest engagements on the whole front, where the Italians are maintaining their gains and steadily adding to them.

The account says that in the Plava sector the infantry accomplished prodigies of valor, the fighting there being of the bloodiest description. The passage of the Isonzo near Sagrado and Goritza was made under a deadly artillery fire. In some places the Italians and Austrians' trenches are so close together, the account says, that the opposing troops are within speaking distance.

Quiet in the West

No severe battles are reported on the western front. The Germans have delivered attacks east of Metzeral, in Alsace, but have failed to renew the attacks at the Calonne trench on the heights of the Meuse, which brought them some success.

The Arras sector saw only artillery exchanges. There were actions north of Souchez, at Neuville and at Roclincourt, and Arras itself was heavily bombarded.

French Shells Fall on Hangar

A French aviator flew over the Zeppelin factories and shed at Friedrichshafen and succeeded in dropping eight shells "with success." Because of engine trouble the aviator was forced to alight later, but managed to land on Swiss territory near Rheinfelden.

The nature of the damage caused or the extent of it are not specified by the war office.

PROTESTS PRIZE COURT

Substance of Latest Note to Germany Concerning the Frye Case

By agreement with the German foreign office, the American state department made public the text of the note sent on June 24 by the United States, asking Germany to reconsider her refusal to settle by direct diplomatic negotiations, instead of by prize court proceedings, the claim presented on behalf of the captain and owners of the American ship William P. Frye, sunk with her cargo of wheat by the commerce raider Prinz Eitel Friedrich. Ambassador Gerard cabled that he had delivered the note last Saturday afternoon.

The American government declares that, inasmuch as Germany admitted liability for the sinking of the Frye, under the treaty of 1828 prize court proceedings are unnecessary and not binding upon the United States.

Aside from the question of how the indemnity should be paid, the note brings out clearly the refusal of the United States to accept the contention that Germany has a right to stop the carrying of contraband by American ships "by the destruction of the contraband and the ship carrying it."

While no mention of submarines was made in either the last German note or the present reply, occasion was taken to deny this right, because of a belief that admission of it now might in the future be used as a justification for submarine attacks on American ships.

ALONG FRIENDLY LINES

But Germany's Reply to Lusitania Note Will Not End Discussion

Germany's reply to President Wilson's Lusitania note will be conciliatory and favorable to the American contention.

The state department received official word to this effect in a cable from Ambassador Gerard at Berlin. The reply will be presented to Gerard on July 5 or 6.

Although the German reply will be favorable to the contention, it will not end the discussion, it is believed in Washington. Germany is expected to insist upon her right to torpedo ships carrying contraband.

The note, in a friendly tone, will suggest an arrangement by which ships carrying contraband will not carry passengers. It will also suggest distinguishing marks for ships carrying passengers and non-contraband articles.

Even the most optimistic Washington officials do not believe that Germany will give up her policy of submarine warfare.

GERMAN ADMIRAL'S CLAIM

Believes Lusitania Carried Guns, but Out of Inspectors' Sight

Retired Admiral Kalu von Hoef, writing in the Berlin Vossische Zeitung, declared he believed six 6-inch guns were mounted on the Lusitania, but in positions easily concealed from the American customs inspectors, who are laymen, not naval men.

The Vossische Zeitung reproduced drawings of the Lusitania taken from an engineering magazine of May 14, indicating places for twelve 6-inch guns. Hoef said probably six of these were not in position because they would be in the way of passengers.

FRENCH TOWNS FINED

German Retaliation For Destruction of Consulates In Turkey

An official statement said the fines were ordered in retaliation for the destruction by French fliers of German consulates in the open Turkish towns of Haiffa and Alexandrette.

Chicago, June 29.—Chicago's largest lumber yards closed down and 200,000 men were thrown out of work in an effort of the carpenters' contractors and allied interests to break the carpenters' strike, which has been on since May 16.

Up to the last minute before the final decision was given to shut down the great plants, Mayor Thompson worked for arbitration. It is hinted that federal aid may be asked.

HIGHER THAN FERRIS WHEEL

Marvelous Aeroscope at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, Raises Amazed Visitors 264 Feet

FOR the seeker of amusement there is opportunity a-plenty in the great mechanical achievement, the aeroscope, on the Zone, Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco. The aeroscope is built on the order of a giant crane of a novel and intricate design, with a seating capacity of 100 and standing room for twenty more. The car is perfectly balanced, and perfect safety and a jarless ride of ten minutes are assured to passengers who enjoy this trip of 264 feet into the clouds. This is four feet higher than the Ferris wheel. Two motors control the ascent and descent in conjunction with the counterbalance of this huge car, and when it reaches its extreme height it begins to swing slowly around on the series of wheels at its base, giving the passenger a view of the surrounding country from every point.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

"Let go!" she commanded, with deadly intensity. "Let go or I'll choke the life out of you! Let go, I say!"

He raised a hand to beat her off, but she was too strong, too desperate to be driven away. She was as blind to pain as a mother eagle and bent above him so closely that he could not bring the full weight of his fist to bear. With one determind hand still clutching his throat, she ran the fingers of her other hand into his hair and twisted his head upward with a power which he could not resist. And so, looking into his upturned ferocious eyes, she repeated with remorseless fury, "Let go, I say!"

His swollen face grew rigid, his mouth gaped, his tongue protruded, and at last, releasing his hold on his victim, he rose, flinging Berrie off with a final desperate effort. "I'll kill you, too!" he gasped.

Up to this moment the girl had felt no fear of herself, but now she resorted to other weapons. Snatching her pistol from its holster, she leveled it at his forehead. "Stop!" she said, and something in her voice froze him into calm. He was not a fiend; he was not a deliberate assassin; he was only a jealous, despairing, insane lover, and as he looked into the face he knew so well and realized that nothing but hate and deadly resolution lit the eyes he had so often kissed his heart gave way, and, dropping his head, he said: "Kill me if you want to. I've nothing left to live for."

There was something unreal, appalling in this sudden reversion to weakness, and Berrie could not credit his remorse. "Give me your gun," she said.

Belden snarled between his teeth, "I told you I'd kill you, and I will!"

He surrendered it to her, and she threw it aside, then turned to Wayland, who was lying white and still with face upturned to the sky. With a moan of anguish she bent above him and called upon his name. He did not stir, and when she lifted his head to her lap his hair, streaming with blood, stained her dress. She kissed him and called again to him, then turned with accusing frenzy to Belden: "You've killed him! Do you hear? You've killed him!"

The agony, the fury of hate in her voice reached the heart of the conquered man. He raised his head and stared at her with mingled fear and remorse. And so across that limp body these two souls, so lately lovers, looked into each other's eyes as though nothing but words of hate and loathing had ever passed between them. The girl saw in him only a savage, vengeful, bloodthirsty beast; the man confronted in her an accusing angel.

"I didn't mean to kill him," he muttered.

"Yes, you did! You meant it. You crushed his life out with your big hands—and now I'm going to kill you for it!"

A fierce calm had come upon her. Some faroff ancestral deep of passion called for blood revenge. She lifted the weapon with steady hand and pointed it at his heart.

His fear passed as his wrath had passed. His head drooped, his glance wavered. "Shoot!" he commanded sullenly. "I'd sooner die than live—now."

His words, his tone, brought back to her a vision of the man he had seemed when she first met and admired him. Her hand fell, the woman in her reasserted itself. A wave of weakness, of indecision, of passionate grief overwhelmed her. "Oh, Cliff!" she moaned. "Why did you do it? He was so gentle and sweet."

He did not answer. His glance wandered to his horse, serenely cropping the grass in utter disregard of this tumultuous human drama, but the wind, less insensate than the brute, swept through the grove of dwarfed, distorted pines with a desolate, sympathetic moan which filled the man's heart with a new and exalted sorrow. "You're right," he said. "I was crazy. I deserve killing."

But Berrie was now too deep in her own desolation to care what he said or did. She kissed the cold lips of the still youth, murmuring passionately, "I don't care to live without you; I shall go with you!"

Belden's hand was on her wrist before she could raise the weapon. "Don't, for God's sake; don't do that! He may not be dead!"

She responded but dully to the suggestion. "No, no. He's gone. His breath is gone."

"Maybe not. Let me see."

Again she bent to the quiet face on which the sunlight fell with mocking splendor. It seemed all a dream till she felt once more the stain of his blood upon her hands. It was all so incredibly sudden. Only just now he was exulting over the warmth and beauty of the day—and now—

How beautiful he was. He seemed asleep. The conies crying from their runways suddenly took on poignant pathos. They appeared to be grieving with her, but the eagles spoke of revenge.

A sharp cry, a note of joy sprang from her lips. "He is alive! I saw his eyelids quiver! Quick! Bring some water!"

The man leaped to his feet and, running down to the pool, filled his sombrero with icy water. He was as eager now to save his rival as he had been mad to destroy him. "Let me help," he pleaded. But she would not permit him to touch the body.

Again, while splashing the water upon his face, the girl called upon her love to return. "He hears me!" she exulted to her enemy. "He is breathing now! He is opening his eyes!"

The wounded man did, indeed, open his eyes, but his look was a blank, uncomprehending stare, which plunged her back into despair. "He don't know me!" she said, with piteous accent. She now perceived the source of the blood upon her arm. It came from a wound in the boy's head which had been dashed upon a stone.

The sight of this wound brought back the blaze of accusing anger to her eyes. "See what you did!" she said, with cold malignity. Then by sudden shift she bent to the sweet face in her arms and kissed it passionately. "Open your eyes, darling. You must not die! I won't let you die! Can't you hear me? Don't you know where you are?"

He opened his eyes once more, quietly, and looked up into her face with a faint, drowsy smile. He could not yet locate himself in space and time, but he knew her and was comforted.

Slowly the youth's eyes took on expression. "Are we still on the hill?" he asked.

"Yes, dearest," she assured him. Then to Belden, "He knows where he is!"

Wayland again struggled with reality. "What has happened to me?"

"You fell and hurt your head."

He turned slightly and observed the other man looking down at her with dark and tragic glance. "Hello, Belden," he said feebly. "How came you here?" Then noting Berrie's look, he added: "I remember. He tried to kill me." He again searched his antagonist's face. "Why didn't you finish the job?"

The girl tried to turn his thought aside. "It's all right now, darling. He won't make any more trouble. Don't mind him. I don't care for anybody now you are coming back to me."

Wayland wonderingly regarded the face of the girl. "And you—are you hurt?"

"No, I'm not hurt. I am perfectly happy now." She turned to Belden with quick, authoritative command. "Unsaddle the horses and set up the tent. We won't be able to leave here tonight."

He rose with instant obedience, glad of a chance to serve her, and soon had the tent pegged to its place and the bedding unrolled. Together they lifted the wounded youth and laid him upon his blankets beneath the low canvas roof which seemed heavenly helpful to Berea.

"There!" she said caressingly. "Now you are safe, no matter whether it rains or not."

He smiled. "It seems I'm to have my way after all. I hope I shall be able to see the sun rise. I've sort of lost my interest in the sunset."

"Now, Cliff," she said as soon as the camp was in order and a fire started, "I reckon you'd better ride on. I haven't any further use for you."

"Don't say that, Berrie," he pleaded. "I can't leave you here alone with a sick man. Let me stay and help."

She looked at him for a long time before she replied. "I shall never be able to look at you again without hating you," she said. "I shall always remember you as you looked when you were killing that boy. So you'd better ride on and keep a-riding. I'm going to forget all this just as soon as I can, and it don't help me any to have you around. I never want to see you or hear your name again."

"You don't mean that, Berrie!"

"Yes, I do," she asserted bitterly. "I mean just that. So saddle up and pull out. All I ask of you is to say nothing about what has happened here. You'd better leave the state. If Wayland should get worse it might go hard with you."

He accepted his banishment. "All right. If you feel that way I'll ride. But I'd like to do something for you before I go. I'll pile up some wood"—

"No. I'll take care of that." And without another word of farewell she turned away and re-entered the tent.

Mounting his horse with painful slowness, as though suddenly grown old, the reprieved assassin rode away up the mountain, his head bent low, his eyes upon the ground.

Skeletons Found on Farm of Man Who Died In Insane Asylum

Grand Forks, N. D., June 29.—Six skeletons, revealing murders believed to have been committed by Eugene Butler, were uncovered under his home, near Niagara, and were reported to the authorities here.

In the cases of all six the skulls were crushed in. All but one were adults, the other a boy about 16. Butler was a lifelong recluse, who became insane in 1906, and who, from that time until his death two years ago, was in the state asylum at Jamestown.

The bodies had been buried under the house, side by side, and an opening through the floor, through which each victim had been dropped, was concealed cleverly.

STREET RAILWAY DEALS STIFF BLOW AT JITNEY

Five Minute Service To Houghs Neck Monday Evening

The Jitney Bus line running between Houghs Neck and City square, which has been doing a land office business, received a body blow Monday afternoon with the result that on many of the late afternoon trips it is doubtful if enough fares were collected to pay for the gasoline.

Starting Monday afternoon and continuing up to 9 o'clock in the evening, the street railway company inaugurated a system which if continued will put the Jitney bus line out of business, it is claimed on this line at least.

Heretofore cars on the Houghs Neck line starting at 4 o'clock in the afternoon have run every fifteen minutes. It was by running between these regular cars that the Jitneys reaped a harvest. Monday, however, as soon as a car arrived from Houghs Neck and the trolley shifted, it was started back again. The result of this was that between the hours of 4 and 9 o'clock people living at Houghs Neck enjoyed five minute service.

RAISES DUCKS WITH SUCCESS

Ten of the 15 ducks hatched at the home of J. A. L. Kennedy, manager of the Quincy store of Joyce Bros. are alive and kicking at his Washington street home and another brood may be raised before the season ends because the supply of eggs run so high.

Mr. Kennedy started duck raising for the fun of it. He set the 15 eggs under what could be called "the family hen" but other hens disputed the right and forced each other off the next in turn. Despite the change resulting from the fighting of three hens all of the eggs were hatched.

Five of the fifteen ducklings passed away, two because they fell into water and died from exposure and three from unknown causes.

The old ducks so far are the only ones who receive any rights from autos while they are crossing Washington street, the same drivers always slowing up to watch them waddle to safety, that dispute the rights of a man or woman to cross their path.

MAY BECOME AUTO RACER

Friends are trying to induce Antonio Venti of Washington street to register as an amateur auto racer with the national association and enter some of the events scheduled for the summer. Venti has not decided whether he will take up the sport.

Venti is one of the best known of the younger Italians of the city and is associated with N. DiPanfilo who conducts an express business in Quincy. He, with two others, is the owner of a yellow 1915 National racer, which is probably the speediest car in the city. A week ago he took a few short spins on the Readville track and easily hit a speed of 84 miles for a considerable distance. Venti's first machine was a National 1913 model. He may decide this week whether to go into the racing game or not.

Miss Inez Breen, a sister of the bride, was bridesmaid and John Dobbyn, a brother of the groom, best man. After a brief honeymoon trip Mr. and Mrs. Dobbyn will reside at 122 Glendale road, Quincy.

The third of the submarines built at the Fore River shipyard for the British government will be launched on Thursday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. The sponsor will be Mrs. Anna Nelson Ewertz, wife of Eric Ewertz, who has charge of submarine construction at the shipyard.

The groom is a conductor on the Bay State St. Ry. His bride is a resident of Atlantic. They will make their home on Hollis avenue, Atlantic.

ROOMS TO OPEN EACH WEDNESDAY

Commencing Wednesday evening the recreation room in the Adams Academy building will be open every Wednesday evening for the use of the girls of Quincy. A victrola has been provided for the rooms, so that those girls who care to dance may do so. The reading room will be supplied with magazines. The rooms will be open to all girls and it is hoped that they will be taken advantage of. Miss Huston, overseer of the poor, will be the chaperon in charge for the time being. No charges are to be made and all girls will be made welcome.

HOLD SOCIAL IN AID OF CHURCH

A whist social in aid of St. Joseph's church was held Monday evening at Mrs. Smiths, 563 Washington street at which about $20.00 was raised. Fourteen tables were in play and an enjoyable evening was spent, light refreshments were served.

Thanks are extended to the following, for donations of cake, lemonade, prizes, etc: Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Heaver, Mrs. Schultz, Mrs. Gillis, Mrs. Whitman, Mrs. Ryan, Mr. Rodgers, Mr. Riley, Mr. Cussan and Arthur McGilvary. Mrs. Gamble was fortunate enough to win first prize of a book of tickets to Boston, with a score of 49. Andrew Tide won he booby, a statue of Charlie Chaplin with a grand total of 4.

The Sanctuary girls deserve special praise for their assistance, as they carried things through to a success.

COW TIED TO AUTO.

People near vicinity of Granite and Hancock streets this morning opened their eyes when they saw a Jersey cow hitched to an automobile. Inquiry deveioped that a man leading a cow had stopped at the Granite Shoe store and before entering had hitched his animal to the rear wheel of the auto of Elmer Ricker which was standing in front of his office opposite.

THE KINCAIDE THEATRE.

"The Diamond from the Sky," that exciting serial in which Mary Pickford's sister, Lottie, is making such a hit as leading lady, continues in popularity at the Kincaide theatre. The three Zechts present a novelty aerial act which makes one sit up and take notice. Stanley and Stanley are comedians worthy of the name. The Versatile Trio appear in novelty pantomine which pleases. Clark and Adler have some new songs and dances which were enthusiastically applauded. The Pathe Weekly is interesting. There is a one reel comedy sidesplitter.

TO ENTER MANEUVERS.

The navy of Argentina within a few days will hold its maneouvers and participating will be the dreadnought Rivadavia, built at the Fore River shipyard. It will be the first time the mighty craft will have taken part in a mobilization since it was taken south by Argentine officers. The ship is now anchored at Buenos Aires.

IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Alexander Powell's book "The Last Frontier" was the first hint many people had received that the Dark Continent is becoming a good deal enlightened. A letter from Dr. J. B. McCord, in charge of the American Board's hospital and dispensary in Durban gives a good idea of the struggle between light and darkness in his part of Africa and shows what kind of a field it is for an ergetic, devoted Christian physician. He writes:

"In Durban we are sadly lacking in the privations, dangers, etc., such as Dan Crawford and his wife experienced in Central Africa. We live in what I think is one of the most beautiful cities of the world; the tram car comes to within three minutes walk of my door; we have the telephone, electric light, daily delivery of mail, or rather two or three times a day, and all the benefits of a modern civilization, and a healthy location and ideal climate if you like it a little warm. The city has a very good class of residents and we have made a great many friends in Durban and Natal.

"But we are not living here for the sake of enjoying the advantages of civilization but because Durban is the center of things along this Southeast coast of Africa. Here in Durban live some twenty thousand natives, mostly working in the city. Here converge the three railroads of Natal, the North Coast, the South Coast and the Main Line, which bring my patients to me from all parts of Natal. Although I live in Durban and have my dispensary and hospital here you must not think that I do not work among the veriest heathen in South Africa. Many of my patients have never seen a white face before they set out to see the doctor. About half my patients are the blanket heathen from the country twenty to two hundred miles away from Durban. About one half are dressed natives from our mission stations or near them. In the morning service in the dispensary many natives hear the Gospel who have never been to school or to church or to an out door preaching service, even and who have never heard of the Gospel before. The medical work therefore has a distinct place in the evangelistic work of the mission.

"However the work of the medical department is more an indirect influence in the way of undermining superstition, gaining the good will of the people and educating them along lines of health, etc. It was this idea of education of the natives along the lines of health and sanitation that led us to organize a class of nurses four years ago. Our first class finished their course a year ago and now all have positions, one of them in a government hospital in Pietermaritzburg, and our second class of seven girls is now well under way.

"The work in dispensary and hospital occupies pretty well my whole time and leaves me little for country visitation and touring, though that is a branch of the work that has great possibilities. I would like to go from station, spending a week at each, and to get at the people in their homes, to come into closer touch with them and find the cases of hopeless invalids, many of whom could be fully healed by an operation or a little proper attention. One man with a motor car could do a tremendous amount of good, physically and spiritually, in such a work and it would keep him more than busy.

"Then there is work that ought to be done in Johannesburg. Two hundred thousand natives are working there, with practically no medical attention, and Johannesburg is the industrial center of South Africa.

"But if I get started on the things I want to do I shall go on and on and not know where to stop. The possibilities are fascinating."

ANTI-SUFFRAGE LAWN PARTY.

Eight hundred invitations have been sent out by Miss Mary Ames for an anti suffrage lawn party at her summer estate, "Wayside," North Easton, July 1, from 5 to 8 o'clock. Matthews of New Jersey will also speak. Miss Ames is having her grounds decorated for the occasion with national and anti-suffrage flags. Music will be furnished by the Salem Cadet band and refreshments will be served. TO ERECT THREE STORY BRICK BLOCK AT ONCE

Inspector of Buildings Issues Permit To Henry M. Faxon

Inspector of Buildings Thomas issued a permit this morning for the smaller of the two business blocks which Henry M. Faxon is to build on the west side of Hancock street between the Music Hall block and the Kincaide theatre, and work has been commenced excavating for the foundation.

The building for which the permit was issued will be three stories high. The street floor will be devoted to stores, the second floor to business offices and the top floor will contain a hall.

Albert H. Wright is the architect of the building, which will be of first class construction, namely concrete, brick, steel and terra cotta. It will have a frontage on Hancock street of 50 feet and a width on the rear of 62 feet, the depth will be 120 feet and the height 43 feet.

The building will be what is known as fire proof with fire walls between the stores. The estimated cost of this, the smaller of the two blocks, is at $30,000.

The many friends of ex-City Treasurer Henry F. Tilden who had a serious attack of illness Sunday will be pleased to learn that he is now out of danger and on the road to recovery.

MISS FLANAGAN BECOMES BRIDE

Weds T. Edward Sweeney of Quincy Point

Miss Sarah Flanagan, who became the bride of T. Edward Sweeney on Monday evening, was the second telephone operator of the Quincy exchange to marry within a week. The ceremony was performed at the St. John's parish house, Fr. Michael J. Owens, officiating.

The marriage closed a romance which started at Quincy High school, where the bride was a member of the class of 1911 and the groom of 1908.

Miss Mary Gagan of Roxbury, a cousin of the bride, was her attendant and Joseph Sweeney, brother of the groom, was the best man. The bride was dressed in white crepe meteor. Her veil was caught up with orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of the same blossoms. The bridesmaid wore blue crepe de chine, with a picture hat to match and carried Killarney roses.

A reception followed at the home of the bride, 40 Field street. The couple were assisting in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. James Flanagan, parents of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. James Michael Sweeney of Main street, parents of the groom. Guests were present from Newton, Roxbury, Boston, Weymouth, Braintree, Dorchester and Quincy. Many beautiful presents were received. A musical program was given during the reception and music during the evening was furnished by the Misses O'Rourke of Weymouth.

Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney left late in the evening on a wedding trip to Winston-Salem, North Carolina. On their return they will live in Worcester, where the groom is manager of the T. A. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

The couple are well known in Quincy. The bride is very popular with her associates and has a host of friends. The groom is a member of several local organizations.

THE WEATHER.

Charles F. Marvin of Ohio will be blessed throughout the country next Sunday and Monday if what he has solemnly promised shall come true. That is, he will be popular everywhere except in Oregon. We cannot imagine just why he should single out Oregon as the object of his venon but then the chief of the weather bureau at Washington is not actuated by the same motives which move other men. At all events it is encouraging to note that Charlie has taken pity on our anxiety and has sent down an official communication from Washington to the effect that pleasant weather will prevail throughout the country, except in the afore mentioned unfortunate state of Oregon. If Charlie's prophesy comes true it is safe to say that he will be the most popular man in the country for a while, until he makes another guess and gets it wrong.

OPENED FOR INSPECTION

Tuberculosis Dispensary Has Regular Hours Today

The rooms in the Durgin & Merrill block secured by the Board of Health for the free dispensary for incipient tuberculosis cases were opened for public inspection Tuesday evening and the opportunity to learn just what the city proposed to do toward checking the so called white plague. The rooms are two in number and are situated on the first floor above the street. The first room entered is the general waiting room and leading from this is the examination room, a sound proof partition separating the two rooms.

The dispensary will be open every week day between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock, at which time the nurse only will be in attendance.

Both the physician and nurse will be in attendance at the dispensary on Wednesdays between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock and on Friday evenings between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock.

Other times the nurse will be busy in following up the cases about the city looking after patients and seeing to it that the regulations as to diet, etc., laid down by the physician in charge are carried out.

Not only is it intended to look after those that are in the first stages of tuberculosis but the nurse will also follow up the patients that have been discharged from the state institutions to see that they are living up to the requirements.

The examination room has been fitted with a physician's couch, weighing machine, machine for measuring the height of patients and other instruments necessary to making a thorough examination. A record of patients will be kept in a filing case arranged not only alphabetically but by streets and in this way it will be able to determine in just what sections tuberculosis is most prevalent.

Dr. W. J. McCausland has been appointed physician in charge of the dispensary. At the present time, however, he is in California and the work of the dispensary will be looked after by Dr. Deihl of the Board of Health until he returns.

Miss Catherine McKenzie has been appointed nurse but she also will be unable to assume charge until the middle of August. In the mean time Miss Andrews will be the nurse in charge. The state law under which the dispensary was established provides that it shall be in operation the first of July and it might be said that the Quincy dispensary began business today.

Among the visitors to the rooms Tuesday evening were a number of city officials and members of the City Council as well as a number of members from the several Women's clubs of the city. Dr. Deihl stated that although the first regular office hours would not be until this afternoon that there were already a number who had signified their intention to come and be examined.

Later perhaps it may be necessary to have the office open for examination at other times. For the present however it is believed that the office hours established will be sufficient.

It is proposed in addition to other things to keep on hand for distribution a supply of literature relative to the prevention of tuberculosis and the care of patients.

MISS LANE HAS TAMED SIX BIRDS

Four Blue Jays And Two Robins Are Devoted To Her

ENJOY THEIR FIRST CHERRY

The four bluejays and two robins which owe their lives to Miss Georgianna C. Lane have attained almost full growth and within a few days will be liberated from the room of her Goffe street home, the scene of their early days.

The jays were found abandoned in a nest of a tree cut down near the Lane home. The robins were cared for because boys had disturbed their nest, leaving them exposed to wind and weather.

The plight of the feathered tribe gained the sympathies of Miss Lane and without any hesitation she essayed to become a bird raiser. Lacking experience and despite the discouragement of her many friends she took up the task nobly and today the six little feathery creatures are among her best friends.

When seen by a Ledger reporter Tuesday afternoon Miss Lane was sitting in the room with the birds, two of them perched on a small tree set in a corner, two others on her hands, a female robin dancing away in front of her and the male robin flying about the room at lightning speed, alarmed by the appearance of a stranger.

On the settee was a plate of corn meal, and in a saucer nearby was a mixture of hard boiled eggs and crackers, made up in almost a dry paste, the food on which the birds were raised.

"Come Judy," said Miss Lane, as the female jay of the blue quartette screeched to get attention and widely opened her bill for a little food. "Come on," and the little lady hopped to the side of the plate and fought for the food, while the other three of the species screamed their applause. Bobinette, the female robin, at times acting like an outsider, finally made her way into the centre of the plate and secured her share.

"I have named them all, you know," said Miss Lane. "And the room looks like a little Bird Village, but it will only be for a few days more because they have grown so quickly the past week and their coats of feathers are getting so thick I will have to let them go. Where they will go and whether they will remember the room I don't know."

The experiment of Miss Lane has been watched by bird lovers of the city and as far as the reporter has been able to find no one hereabouts has ever attempted before to raise such little birds' almost from their egg days.

Bright and early mornings, between four and 4.30, the jays commence to shriek and that means food and like babies the chatter will continue until they are fed. They are hardly wise enough to search out their own supplies from the various dishes about the room and the occupants of the Lane home are awakened bright and early since Miss Georgianna started to raise the birds.

Throughout the day, the program must continue and at night after being fed for the last time they are placed on the boughs of the tree, side by side. Entrance into the room at night does not disturb them. In the darkness, pierced by the rays from a lighted candle, they only blink their eyes, but no welcome is extended the intruder. It is after hours.

On Tuesday the birdies had their first cherry. At first they simply

PLANS FOR NEW SCHOOLS ARE LAID ON TABLE

School Board Wants Ventilating Expert Consulted

The plans for the proposed new school buildings at Quincy Point and Norfolk Downs came up before the School Committee for examination and consideration at the regular meeting of the Board Tuesday evening. The plans were four in number and were submitted by the following architects:

Warren & Campbell.
Walter G. Thomas.
George H. Ingraham.
Cleveland & Godfrey.

The committee gave the plans a brief inspection after which, in view of the recent discussions on the matter of ventilation, which run counter to the usual practice in school architecture heretofore, it was voted:

"That the secretary communicate with the Mayor and suggest the advisability of his consulting with some expert on ventilation of recognized authority to see whether it is not possible to make use of these new developments in the construction of the two new buildings. Also to suggest to him as examples certain buildings recently constructed, where systems of ventilation are in use which appear to be a marked improvement over those customarily employed."

It was then voted that further consideration of the plans be laid on the table.

As usual a large number of resignations among the teaching corps of the city were received. These were as follows and were accepted:

Miss S. Maude Amsden, supervisor of music.

Miss Edith Furber of the High school.

FLEE BUILDING IN SCANT ATTIRE

The several Finnish families who occupy the two and a half story house on Copeland street near Brewer's corner, owned by S. F. Nutting, received the scare of their lives this morning when fire was discovered in the L of the house. The families were aroused by the cries of fire and by smoke working into the building which caused them to hasten into the street in scant attire. The occupants were pretty well frightened and were much exercised over the possible loss of their belongings, which in their haste they had been unable to remove.

The building is separated from the business block of Mr. Nutting by a narrow alleyway and had the fire obtained a good start it would have been hard work to have saved the block. The fire started from some unknown cause on the roof of the L of the building and had worked up the side of the rear and into the attic of the main building when discovered.

An alarm from Box 42 at 1 o'clock brought the West Quincy and Central Station apparatus and it was not long before the fire was under control. In the mean time the excited families had been quieted and later returned to their homes. Chief Billings estimates the loss at $200.

The building was formerly used by the Quincy Day Nursery.

EVOLUTION OF JULY FOURTH.

The celebration of July Fourth, the nation's birthday, has had a checkered history, illustrating the temperaments of different eras.

Copies of old newspapers handed down fifty to seventy five years show a very different kind of observance from what one sees today. Speeches and processions were the feature. The older people were content to sit in rows all of a hot afternoon and listen to addresses an hour and a half long on patriotic subjects.

The small boys were under subjection in those days. They turned out in full number to the July Fourth doings. This is partly due to family discipline. But the abundant supplies of ice cream and gingerbread had no doubt something to do with it.

It was a day of spreadeagleism. Our orators were sure that our government in 50 years of existence had accomplished greater triumphs of civic virtue and enlightenment than had all the rest of the world since the dawn of history.

When these formal July Fourth speechifyings went out of fashion the Small Boy became master of ceremonies. His patriotism was greatly inspired by the thought that aged sick and nervous persons dreaded his noise When the discharge of pistols. caps and firecrackers failed to express his feelings, he added thereto the removal of gates. burning of fences, wagons, and other more or less valuable property. thereby demonstrating the fervent quality of his love for country.

During recent years, there has been a revival of effort to make the national holiday a more worthy observance of a great event. Historical pageantry is resorted to in many places to teach object lessons of patriotism. Music, fireworks, and athletics are useful means by which the energies of young America can be diverted from more harmful acts. But the day has gone by when the people will listen quietly to long speeches.

DANGEROUS IMBECILES

Today's issue contains an account of a "joke" perpetrated upon a young married couple by some of their "friends." These young people were married Monday evening in Quincy going immediately to their home which they had furnished in Weymouth. Tuesday, so the Ledger chronicler tells us, they started housekeeping under difficulties because their "friends" had been there during the reception Monday evening and had disarranged all the furniture, even removing the stove to the home of a neighbor some distance away.

We do not know how the young couple felt when they reached home Monday night nor do we know with what feelings they regarded the perpetrators of the "joke." We have a very clear knowledge of our own opinion of persons who have so little intelligence that they imagine that their exploit was "funny". The would be humorists can not even claim originality because it is saddening to record that there have been others of as low mentality who have amused themselves by this same species of horseplay. The "joke" is as old as history but that very far from excuses it. We deduce that the couple did not leave for their home in a carriage for if they had the imbeciles who committed trespass to dismantle a home would have tied tin cans to the rear of the carriage and their probable boasting of the exploit would have brought it to our attention. It is inconceivable that they abstained from this playfulness by any fear of consequences because into the apology for brains with which such persons are equipped there could enter no thought of a possible runaway horse and resulting fatality.

THE BOY CAMPS

Enormous number of boys are spending parts of the whole of their summer vacations now at boy camps. Not merely are large camps run by clubs and Young Men's christian associations, but many teachers. Sunday school workers, and others take small groups of boys off to tent life.

There is something barbaric in the heart of the boy to which this life keenly appeals. In many cases it is the desire to get away from his "women bosses." Having to dress up to go to school and church is not merely an odious burden, but it seems to him so wholly unnecessary and futile.

The normal boy is an Indian at heart. He revels in the free life where he can wear khaki or swimming clothes all day. Boys become manly and acquire initiative in this life. At home all their wants are too much looked out for by indulgent parents who answer the boy's calls as if he were a little king. Out in the camp he learns to shift for himself and take his part with the other boys.

Whatever may be one's opinion of Mr. Bryan as a statesman few will deny his personal integrity. Therefore, when he denies that after the sending of the first American note to Germany he gave the Austrian ambassador to understand that the grave and insistent tone of the communication was not to be taken seriously he has laid at rest for most of us an ugly rumor.

St. Mary's church proved conclusively the other day that its members knew how to conduct and support a lawn party. Fifteen hundred persons attending a function of this sort constitutes a record of which any church justly may be proud

It is unfortunate that those conducting the cabaret and dance of the Quincy Day Nursery today should have selected the same date as the High school graduation.

Almost anything an imaginative weather bureau may predict comes to pass in the course of a Summer June day.

It is a poor summer in which the mosquitoes have the chilblains on their stingers

WASTING MONEY.

The Legislature that promised economy has jumped the state tax a million. That means a good-sized burden on every city in the state. When every business house and individual has been handling their finances with care the Legislature has stood for about everything in the way of salary raises, new commissions, pensions, state roads in out-of-the-way places, additional help in state institutions and so on. But why rehearse the details. The figures are as staggering as they are convincing.

This paper has always consistently advocated annual elections, believing that they bring the government closer to the people and keep up their interest in public affairs. But we are compelled to confess that there are valid arguments on the other side that are inviting us to change our stand. The only way to stop the great waste at the State House is to have the Legislature meet as seldom as possible. Every session adds to the great burden upon the taxpayers. The people may keep more closely in touch with affairs through annual sessions, but the Legislature keeps so close to their pocketbooks that the price is getting too excessive.—Malden News.

VEGETABLES VS. PHILOSOPHY.

Charles Dudley Warner says "The principal value of a garden is not to give the possessor vegetables and fruit, but to teach him patience and philosophy."

If then the frost chills, the sun burns, the rain drowns or refuses to fall, the hens (the other fellow's) scratch and devour, the dogs and cats hold high carnival, and the children from far and near make a recreation center of your backyard, remember you are daily getting the principal value of your garden—patience and philosophy. You may prefer beans, peas, beets, corn and cucumbers to patients and philosophy, but the latter are much better for you here and hereafter, but as for me give me succotash.—Milford Gazete.

AS OTHERS SEE US

Since the announcement of the candidacy of Eugene N. Foss for the Republican nomination for Governor this fall, word has gone out the "The Old Boy" has "joined the Republican Party."

The Virginia Pilot raises some doubt as to the Ex-Governor's political standing by setting up the claim that "Joined is much too strong a word, for, it conveys some idea of permanance. Foss wears the collar of party allegiance so lightly that he never buttons it on. He is what Julius Siebert used to call a 'chronic flopper.' Generally speaking he professes membership of any party that will nominate him for the office he happens to want at any particular time."—Belmont Courier.

THE INFLUENCE OF CHAMPAGNE

Declared to Have Been Responsible For White Murder

THAW IS SANE, SAYS BANCROFT

Expert Alienist Does Not Think Prisoner Was Ever Mentally Unbalanced—Another Expert's Testimony Shaken—Jerome Expected to Figugre In Trial as Winess For State

New York, June 30.—Dr. Charles P. Bancroft, head of the New Hampshire state hospital for the insane and a member of the federal commission which examined Harry K. Thaw during his sojourn in New Hampshire, swore on the witness stand that in his opinion Thaw not only was sane but always had been sane. Bancroft testified as an expert alienist in the jury proceedings to determine Thaw's mental condition.

Thaw's act in killing Stanford White was not, Bancroft said, the product of a systematic delusion, such as characterizes the true paronoiac.

"The killing of Stanford White," he said, "appeared to us a passionate, impulsive act, growing out of a condition of mind due chiefly to anger and jealousy, which was the final culmination of a series of circumstances that had been bearing down on him a long time. It did not seem a type of paranoia, but was due to jealousy of White, not to a diseased condition of mind.

"Thaw knew White had been antagonistic to him in an unpleasant way. He wanted to 'get even' with White. His act was the product of a sane mind, which, after he had indulged in champagne, suddenly lost control of itself."

"Then you believe Thaw never was insane?" asked Deputy Attorney General Becker.

"I do," was the reply.

"Another reason for my belief is that Thaw expressed regret for his deed. A paranoiac never expresses regret. He continually tries to justify the deed, and no amount of persuasion convinces him that he has done wrong."

Dr. Hickling of Washington, an alienist, followed Bancroft on the stand and stated positively that Thaw is now "absolutely sane and responsible." This conclusion was reached, he said, after he had conducted three examinations of Thaw, whom he examined as to comprehension, memory, delusion, judgment and will. On all of these, he said, Thaw registered excellent.

State Attorney Cook, however, shook Hickling's testimony somewhat when he elicited the fact that Hickling's wife was the daughter of ex-Governor Stone of Pennsylvania, for many years the Thaw family lawyer.

Cook further weakened Hickling's testimony when he forced the physician to admit that only one of the subjects which Thaw was examined on—delusions—had any bearing on paranoia.

Former District Attorney Jerome may yet assume his old role as "Nemesis." It became known the state is planning to call him as a witness.

By the use of certain statements Jerome was alleged to have made, Thaw's lawyers have attempted to show Jerome never really believed Thaw insane. The state's attorneys are preparing to bring Jerome into court to refute these statements.

The plan to examine President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot of Harvard, to find out why Thaw was expelled from that institution in 1892, has been abandoned, it was announced by the state, as Dr. Eliot had written that he could not remember any of the circumstances in the case.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Editor of the Ledger:

Some weeks ago the proposition was made that the fire signal be the same in schools, theatres, stores and factories throughout the Fire Prevention District, so that the child having once learned it would recognize it readily under all conditions.

I announced a hearing for the consideration of the matter. At that hearing, some practical difficulties came to the surface. It seemed to me best to appoint a committee of competent gentlemen who should consider the question and report to me. On that committee of ten, I placed school men, theatre men, store men, and signal alarm men.

They have now considered the matter at length. They unanimously report in favor of a uniform signal for schools and factories, but are evenly divided on theatres and stores The idea of half the committee—and Mr. John B. Schoeffel is one of them.—is that an audible signal in a theatre or store would alarm the people present. Mr. Schoeffel says that in his theatre,—the Tremont, the regular fire signal is a lowering of the asbestos curtain, accompanied by a quiet announcement by a man in front of the curtain.

The advocates of a signal in theatres and stores reply that not all theatres are conducted like Mr. Schaeffel's: that usually the excited cry of "fire" would precede the lowering of the curtain: and that the people would soon become accustomed to an orderly signal. In order to familiarize people with it, they propose dismissing audiences at the close of the performance for some time by the signal agreed upon.

Final action in this matter rests with me: it is an important matter not to be handled lightly. In my consideration of it, I may be assisted vastly by any discussion it might receive in the press.

Very respectfully yours,
John A. O'Keefe.
Fire Prevention Commissioner for Metropolitan District.

LAVISH COSTUMING.

In these days of lavish costuming, the brilliant gowns worn by the shapely young women in the Amazon March, one of the special features offered by the Jones Bros.' Big Three-Ring Wild Animal Circus, ought to appeal to the ladies of our city in no uncertain manner, as this group of terpsichorean beauties display the very cream of the customers' art. Frills of chiffon, ruffles of charmuese and garlands of iridescent beads flash and swirl in an ever changing kalidoscope of brilliant colors. This original offering appears for the first time with the Jones Bros. big, new, giant, threefold circus combined in one. Another novelty to incite admiration is the justly celebrated Nymphs of Marble, composed of beautiful young girls in artistic posing, representing music, drama, peace, literature and art. The Jones Bros. will present their mammoth show on July 2nd.

EXPLAIN VOTE FOR SUFFRAGE

Declare Action of Federation Unauthorized

Editor of the Ledger:

The passage of the resolution favouring women suffrage at the recent meeting of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs requires explanation lest it mislead.

The endorsement of the resolution was not given by the 65,000 club women as implied, but only by 203 out of the 397 members registered who, though delegates, were uninstructed by the clubs which they represented, so that their votes are only an expression of their individual opinions. The chairman's ruling that all "delegates whether under direct instructions or not are enfitled to vote if they wish to do so" is calculated to give the impression that they voted as representing all of their club members, but this is not true, for delegate after delegate reported that owing to the late arrival of the notice of the resolution the clubs which they represented had sent them away uninstructed and that they did not consider themselves justified in voting as representing their clubs. Moreover, the 99 opposing cast by those members who objected to the resolution did not represent nearly the full number voting, as the tellers disagreed in their count of these votes, and the recount was made after many of the opposing members had left the hall.

The introduction of the suffrage resolution at the annual meeting was planned by the governing board of the Federated clubs, which is almost wholly made up of suffragists, some time beforehand, but the notice that the resolution would be so introduced was sent to the presidents of the various clubs only during this month of June after every club in the state had closed its doors for the summer, and could not be brought together. This precluded the possibility of the clubs' taking any action on the resolution.

Many suffragists, however, being aware of the likelihood of its introduction asked to be sent as delegates and were appointed before most of the presidents of the various clubs understood the situation. As the delegates are apportioned among the clubs at the rate of two for the first hundred members or less and one for every succeeding hundred, among the smaller clubs the full number of delegates sent were thus not infrequently suffragists, not from the conviction of the club but through this ruse. In spite of this careful preparation so many anti-suffragists rallied to the meeting, and the situation seemed so threatening to the machine suffragists, that it is understood that many more delegates were hurried down from suffrage organizations at the last minute in order to swell their numbers.

There is grave doubt whether the resolution was constitutional, but the chair backed by her board ruled that it was, and though the constitution of the Federation forbids partizan organizations from belonging to it, many suffrage clubs have joined it during the past year, giving some nominal outside work as the reason for their incorporation. The packing of a meeting of this kind is a perfectly simple thing to do, for anyone could organize a club and thereby acquire two delegates in the convention. The Anti-suffrage association with its 130 local committees could, had it chosen, have taken similar action, but it was left for the suffragists to break up the valuable public work of the Federated clubs by preventing their ever again being the non-partizan body,—including in itself so many different kinds of women—which has done so much good work for the state.

Two women representing two of the larger clubs got up and asked that the thousand or more women whom they together represented should be subtracted from the total number in the Federation before any statement of the number represented was issued to the press, because they did not consider it honorable for them to vote as representing their clubs when these clubs had not been able to instruct them how they wanted the vote cast. These women were not alone in their action—others representing even larger numbers felt and acted in the same way, and Mrs. Mulligan, the former president of the Federation, protested formally and her protest which is spread upon the records of the Federation is as follows:

"Mrs. Mulligan protests against this action being represented to the papers as an expression of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs of 65,000 members."

The Federated clubs of California took similar action in May of this year, and in consequence of this action, on the 9th day of June the Ebell club, representing over 1500 women, the second largest club in the country and called the parent of the women's clubs of California, formally withdrew from the State Federation. If this could happen in California, where women already have the suffrage, how much more disastrous will the resolution passed in Marion prove to the influence of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs.

TOUGH PICKING FOR JITNEY BUS

The plan of having street cars leave City square every five minutes for Houghs Neck was put into service again Tuesday night with the result that there were no long waits for passengers desiring to go to the beach, and the Jitney Bus line, which has been doing a land office business running to Houghs Neck between the regular trips of the street cars, again found the picking poor As a rule people desiring to go to Houghs Neck will use the street cars in preference to a Jitney Bus.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE UNITED STATES

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, April 17th, says in part, "It is evident that Typhoid Fever is on the way to become a relatively rare disease in many parts of the United States. There are two main reasons for this. First, there are now comparatively few large cities in which the public water supply is likely to contain Typhoid Bacteria. Second, the increase in the practice of pasteurization has resulted in a dimunition in the amount of milk borne typhoid."

The Elm Farm Milk Company complying with the general demand by by the Medical Profession and Sanitarians, were one of the first to scientifically pasteurize their milk. This milk is offered at the same price that rules for ordinary milk.

This process is the only one that absolutely guarantees the safety of milk against all of the infectious diseases.

Elm Farm Milk means SAFETY, SERVICE, SATISFACTION.

AEROPLANE MYSTERY CONTINUES TO GROW

Women's Club Indignant That Secret is Out

Another day has passed and the ownership of the aeroplane which was mysteriously delivered and housed in the hangar of the Squantum Women's club on the aviation field has not been learned. Investigations of all descriptions are underway but have been unfruitful.

The machine is practically assembled and the hangar in which it is housed was well locked and members of the club say it was necessary to break and enter in order to get it in there.

Among those who visited the field Tuesday was Acting Chief McKay of the police department, who was in Squantum looking at the property of several applicants for store purposes. He was doubtful at first whether the machine was there but when he saw it with his own eyes he acknowledged it was there all right, and a "corker" at that.

But John Nelson, a Squantum contractor, who is directing the razing of several hangars on the field, didn't know a thing about it, although his men were at work but a short distance away.

The members of the club are quite indignant because it became known that the plane was there and feel that the information could only have been divulged by a member, who violated a state secret in doing so. Attorneys have been consulted about it and what action may be taken, if any, is not decided upon.

How the machine reached the field is a still greater mystery. Caretaker Betts of the field didn't know it was there and the general impression is that the parts were brought down in a motor boat or auto truck and assembled nights by unknown persons.

Inquiries at the Lawley plant at Neponset, where it is said machines have been built, referred reporters to Adams Claflin, manager of the field during the Harvard meets. Mr Claflin is out of the state for the week and cannot be reached and nothing is known at his home.

What the developments of the next few days will be are quite uncertain but knowing ones in Squantum say the plane is the first one delivered for use at the government school to be conducted there. Others dispute the point, saying the government would never leave property as valuable as a biplane unguarded.

Others strongly intimate that either an experimentor is preparing to fly or an expert is building for a foreign government and Squantumites are beginning to take sides in the case.

Further examination of the canvas on one of the aerials has revealed a makers mark, "Wellsworth" thought to be a Providence, R. I., manufacturer.

It is said that Joseph Toye, the South Boston reporter who was manager for Harry M. Jones, who made a sensational flight a couple of weeks ago, knows nothing about it and but little credence is given the story that Jones is preparing to fly again. The wreckage of his old machine has been burned up and the motor taken back to Rocky Point where he is recovering from the effects of his plunge to earth a week ago Friday.

A STRIKING DISPLAY.

Anyone who wishes to form some conception of what it is like to be on a warship with a submarine dangerously close can get a pretty good idea of how it would feel, and that without enlisting, by taking a look into the window of Nathan Ames, the hardware man. One of the display platforms is fixed up to represent the ocean, whereon sails a miniature warship, fully equipped, and a submarine. In the background tower the forts defending the American coast, with their searchlights sending powerful rays over the water.

The whole creation is made of articles of merchandise, put together with unusual cleverness. Saw blades, skillfully arranged, form a lifelike steel hull, over which is a deck equipped with the various implements of warfare. It takes a close examination to realize that the equipment really consists of hose nozzles, a flatiron, three brass cans for squirting bug powder, two baseball catcher's mits and other prosaic articles. The submarine is a marvel of ingenuity, with its realistic periscope and other equipment. A vicious looking torpedo speeds on its way from the submarine to the doomed warship.

COLOR COMBINATIONS.

Much of what is called "good taste" in dressing consists in the correct combinations of colors. A dress or suit may have collar, cuffs and revers of a color that gives just the required touch of style and dash. On On the other hand, the color used may be harmonious but lack that peculiar tone, that is needed to bring out the best effect. A chart prepared by R. H. Parry, in structor of designing with the American Textile Company of Chicago, and published recently in Women's Wear, gives a list of combinations that will aid in the attractive blending of colors. The original aim of the chart was to assist designers of women's garments, but it will be helpful to every woman who has her clothes made by the dressmaker or is her own seamstress. The color of the garment is given first and the three or four which follow are the suitable colors for trimmings, as:

Amber—Pale blue, pale green, buff clear brown.

Brown (reddish)—Lemon, cream, white, sap green.

Cream—Silver, lavender, violet, magenta.

Green (dark)—Old rose, red gold.

Green (emerald)—Crimson, black, orange, claret.

Plum and White—Lavender, lemon, cream, gold.

Gray (dark)—Buff, amber, pale green, dark green, cream and white.

Heliotrope—Pale pink, old gold, cream.

Red (crimson)—White, blue and gold.

Red (scarlet)—black, gold, buff, white.

THE BABY IN SUMMER.

Prepared for this paper by the Childrens Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor. Weaning and Supplementary Feeding.

Weaning is the process by which breast feeding is stopped and another food given in its place. It should be done gradualy. At first give one battle instead of one of the breast feedings; after a week or two add another bottle, and then continue adding them until bottle feedings are entirely substituted for the breast.

Never hurry the weaning. Give the baby time to get used to the new food. When it is agreeing with his digestion, there is no belching of gas or spitting up of milk, and the bowel movements are soft, yellow and smooth. If any disturbance appears, stop the bottle until it is over, giving only the breast milk.

The baby should never be weaned in the heat of summer, if it is possible to avoid it. He is much more likely to be sick by a strange food when the weather is hot than at other times of the year. Even if the baby has to be fed partly on the bottle the mother should nurse him often enough (three or four times a day) to keep the breast milk from drying up; for if the baby should be attacked by diarrhea, the mother's milk may be the means of saving his life.

Some mothers are able to nurse their babies a full year, but many find that their milk begins to fail by the time the baby is 6 or 8 months old, so that some additional food will be required.

Practically all babies should be entirely weaned from the breast by the time they are a year old, unless that brings the weaning in hot weather.

Babies born in the late summer or early fall should be nursed through the following summer, if the breast milk is sufficient in quantity, in order to carry them past the danger period in July and August. When breast milk lessens in quantity it does not change in quality. By the addition of a bottle or two, therefore, the deficient quantity can be made up.

It is sometimes quite difficult to wean a baby and great patience is required on the part of the mother, but if the baby has been taught at an early age to take his drinking water from a bottle or from a cup, weaning will be easier. If the baby is nursed until he is ten months old or longer, he should be weaned directly to a cup. Earlier it will probaly be easier to use a nursing bottle and nippie; but the bottle should not be used much beyond the end of the first year, save for the bedtime feeding.

Remember when feeding from a cup, that the milk must be taken very slowly, just as slowly as when feeding from a bottle. It is better to feed from a small spoon than to teach the baby to drink from a cup.

The second summer has gained the reputation of being the most critical period of a baby's life largely because mothers are apt to feed the baby many different things after he is weaned. Very much of the food that is given these older babies, is as unfit for them as artificial food is at birth. These improper foods cause troublesome, dangerous and unnecessary illnesses which are aggravated by the heat. Careful feeding would prevent most of them.

Later articles in this series will deal with the feeding of babies from nine to twelve months, and during the second year.

When a breast-fed baby cries a good deal from hunger, and does not gain in weight, the mother is apt to feel that her milk does not agree with him, and so weans him, often because of the well-meaning advice of some neighbor. This is a mistake. The trouble is not with the quality of her milk, but with the quantity.

Instead of weaning the baby she should increase her own diet, by drinking plenty of milk, eating eggs, meat, bread and fresh vegetables, and by taking moderate exercise in the open air, regular periods of rest, and by avoiding worry and excitement. This will usually increase the milk supply sufficiently; if it does not do so, the baby must be given some additional food.

To begin with give the baby one bottle feeding in place of one breast feeding. If he shows a gain in weight, this may be enough. If after a week there is no gain, two bottles may be given each day. The mother should meanwhile be doing all she can by rest and increased food to build up the breast milk, but if with all these measures the baby still fails to gain or gives evidence of illness, the advice of a good doctor must be sought and followed. Do not delay in securing this advice until the baby is seriously ill.

If the mother desires fuller information she may write to the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor, at Washington, D. C., for a bulletin called Infant Care, which gives simple directions for preparing the baby's feedings and shows what amount will suit the baby of a given age. This book is sent free to everyone who asks for it. A post card request will do. The name and the address of the applicant should be written very plainly.

HOUSE WRECKED BY FRIENDS

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hewitt who were married Monday evening by Fr. Michael J. Owens started housekeeping in Weymouth Tuesday under difficulties, most of the furniture having been removed by friends while the reception was being held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Pitts, parents of the bride, at 12 Mill street.

The couple left the reception unknown to their friends shortly before midnight. They went to their future home Tuesday and found that those who were missing from the reception for several hours had gone to Weymouth and taken away some of the furnishings and packed up the rest of it in one of the rooms. The stove was found in a neighbor's house, some distance away, where it had been taken on a motor truck. The greater part of the day was spent in rearranging their home.

The bride, Miss Mary L. Pitts, is a Quincy Point young woman. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hewitt of Weymouth and is a carpenter by trade.

MRS. FOX A SUICIDE

Twenty Stab Wounds Indicated That She Had Been Murdered

New York, June 30.—An autopsy revealed that the twenty stab wounds from which Mrs. Grace D. Fox died were self-inflicted, according to Assistant District Attorney Murphy.

Examination revealed several stab wounds in the woman's back. This discredited the first police theory that Mrs. Fox had slashed herself in a fit of hysterical frenzy, and turned the investigation to the theory that a "Jack the Ripper" attacked her while she was taking a nap in her Beacon Hall apartment and then left the building by the fire escape.

Detectives were mystified over the fact that Mrs. Fox's nightgown, the only garment she wore when she was found, bore no evidence of knife thrusts.

CHAPTER XIII.

Berrie's Vigil.

As Wayland's mind cleared he became curious to know precisely what had taken place, but he did not feel free to ask her. "She will tell me if she wishes me to know." That she had vanquished Belden and sent him on his way was evident, although he had not been able to hear what she had said to him at the last. What lay between the enemy's furious onslaught and the aid he lent in making the camp could only be surmised. "I wonder if she used her pistol?" Wayland asked himself. "Something like death must have stared him in the face."

That she loved him with the complete passion of her powerful and simple nature he knew, for her voice had reached through the daze of his semi-unconsciousness with thrilling power. The touch of her lips to his, the close clasp of her strong arms were of ever greater convincing quality. And yet he wished the revelation had come in some other way. His pride was abraded. His manhood seemed somehow lessened. It was a disconcerting reversal of the ordinary relations between hero and heroine, and he saw no way of re-establishing the normal attitude of the male.

Entirely unaware of what was passing in the mind of her patient Berrie went about her duties with a cheerfulness which astonished the sufferer in the tent. She seemed about to hum a song as she set the skillet on the fire, but a moment later she called out, in a tone of irritation, "Here comes Nash!"

"I'm glad of that," answered Wayland, although he perceived something of her displeasure.

Nash, on his way to join the supervisor, raised a friendly greeting as he saw the girl and drew rein. "I expected to meet you farther down the hill," he said. "Tony phoned that you had started. Where did you leave the supervisor?"

"Over at the station waiting for you. Where's your outfit?"

"Camped down the trail a mile or so. I thought I'd better push through tonight. What about Norcross? Isn't he with you?"

She hesitated an instant. "He's in the tent. He fell and struck his head on a rock, and I had to go into camp here."

Nash was deeply concerned. "Is that so? Well, that's hard luck. Is he badly hurt?"

"Well, he had a terrible fall. But he's easier now. I think he's asleep."

"May I look in on him?"

"I don't think you'd better take the time. It's a long, hard ride from here to the station. It will be deep night before you can make it"—

"Don't you think the supervisor would want me to camp here tonight and do what I could for you? If Norcross is badly injured you will need me."

She liked Nash, and she knew he was right, and yet she was reluctant to give up the pleasure of her lone vigil. "He's not in any danger, and we'll be able to ride on in the morning."

Nash, thinking of her as Clifford Belden's promised wife, had no suspicion of her feeling toward Norcross. Therefore he gently urged that to go on was quite out of order. "I can't think of leaving you here alone—certainly not till I see Norcross and find out how badly he is hurt."

She yielded. "I reckon you're right," she said. "I'll go see if he is awake."

He followed her to the door of the tent, apprehending something new and inexplicable in her attitude. In the music of her voice as she spoke to the sick man was the love note of the mate. "You may come in," she called back, and Nash, stooping, entered the small tent.

"Hello, old man! What you been doing with yourself? Hitting the high spots?"

Norcross smiled feebly. "No, the hill flew up and bumped me."

"How did it all happen?"

"I don't exactly know. It all came of a sudden. I had no share in it. I didn't go for to do it."

"Whether you did or not, you seem to have made a good job of it."

Nash examined the wounded man carefully, and his skill and strength in handling Norcross pleased Berrie, though she was jealous of the warm friendship which seemed to exist between the men.

She had always liked Nash, but she resented him now, especially as he insisted on taking charge of the case, but she gave way finally and went back to her pots and pans with pensive countenance.

A little later, when Nash came out to make report, she was not very gracious in her manner. "He's pretty badly hurt," he said. "There's an ugly gash in his scalp, and the shock has produced a good deal of pain and confusion in his head, but he's going to be all right in a day or two." For a man seeking rest and recuperation he certainly has had a rough run of weather."

Through a serious minded, honorable forester, determined to keep sternly in mind that he was in the presence of the daughter of his chief, and that she was engaged to marry another, Nash was, after all, a man, and the witchery of the hour, the charm of the girl's graceful figure, asserted their power over him. His eyes grew tender, and his voice eloquent in spite of himself. His words he could guard, but it was hard to keep from his speech the song of the lover. The thought that he was to camp in her company, to help her about the fire, to see her from moment to moment, with full liberty to speak to her, to meet her glance, pleased him. It was the most romantic and moving episode in his life, and though of a rather dry and analytic temperament he had a sense of poesy.

The night, black, oppressive and silent, brought a closer bond of mutual help and understanding between them.

She grew friendlier and asked him about his work and especially about his ambitions and plans for the future. They discussed the forest and its enemies, and he wondered at her freedom in speaking of the mill and saloon. He said: "Of course you know that Alec Belden is a partner in that business, and I'm told—of course I don't know this—that Clifford Belden is also interested."

She offered no defense of young Belden, and this unconcern puzzled him. He had expected indignant protest, but she merely replied: "I don't care who owns it. It should be rooted out. I hate that kind of thing. It's just another way of robbing those poor lie-jacks."

"Clifford should get out of it. Can't you persuade him to do so?"

"I don't think I can."

"His relationship to you"—

"He is not related to me."

Her tone amazed him. "You know what I mean."

"Of course I do, but you're mistaken. We're not related that way any longer."

This silenced him for a few moments, then he said: "I'm rather glad of that. He isn't anything like the man you thought he was—I couldn't say these things before—but he is as greedy as Alec, only not so open about it."

All this comment, which moved the forester so deeply to utter, seemed not to interest Berea. She sat staring at the fire with the calm brow of an Indian. Clifford Belden had passed out of her life as completely as he had vanished out of the landscape. She felt an immense relief at being rid of him and resented his being brought back even as a subject of conversation.

Wayland, listening, fancied he understood her desire and said nothing that might arouse Nash's curiosity.

Nash on his part, knowing that she had broken with Belden, began to understand the tenderness, the anxious care of her face and voice, as she bent above young Norcross. As the night deepened and the cold air stung, he asked, "Have you plenty of blankets for a bed?"

She Sat Staring at the Fire With the Calm Brow of an Indian.

"Oh, yes," she answered, "but I don't intend to sleep."

"Oh, you must!" he declared. "Go to bed. I will keep the fire going."

At last she consented. "I will make my bed right here at the mouth of the tent close to the fire," she said, "and you can call me if you need me."

"Why not put your bed in the tent? It's going to be cold up here."

"I am all right outside," she protested.

"Put your bed inside, Miss Berrie. We can't let conventions count above timber line. I shall rest better if I know you are properly sheltered."

And so it happened that for the third time she shared the same roof with her lover. But the nurse was uppermost in her now.

Nash was the first to arise in the dusk of dawn, and Berrie, awakened by the crackle of his fire, soon joined him.

"If you'll round up our horses, Mr. Nash, I'll rustle breakfast and we'll get going," she said.

Nash, enthralled, lingered while she twisted her hair into place, then went out to bring in the ponies.

Wayland came out a little uncertainly, but looking very well. "I think I shall discourage my friends from coming to this region for their health," he said ruefully. "If I were a novelist now all this would be grist for my mill."

Beneath his joking he was profoundly chagrined. He had hoped by this time to be as sinewy, as alert as Nash, instead of which here he sat, shivering over the fire like a sick girl, his head swollen, his blood sluggish, but this discouragement only increased Berea's tenderness—a tenderness which melted all his reserve.

"I'm not worth all your care," he said to her, with poignant glance.

The sun rose clear and warm, and the fire, the coffee, put new courage into him as well as into the others, and while the morning was yet early and the forest chill and damp with rain, the surveyor brought up the horses and started packing the outfit.

In this Berrie again took part, doing her half of the work quite as dextrously as Nash himself. Indeed, the forester was noticeably confused and not quite up to his usual level of adroit ease.

At last both packs were on, and as they stood together for a moment Nash said: "This has been a great experience—one I shall remember as long as I live."

MISS LANE

eyed it but like the wild animal, one taste, and instinct asserted itself. Time and again they flew back for particles of the fruit and when it had been disposed of they toyed with the cherry stone and the stem, chirping in the meantime as though they asked for more.

Little Bobinette who quietly watched the performance chirped nary a sound. Her gaze seemed centered on a part of Miss Lane's dress. Cocking her head at all angles, she seemed to be considering a question of state. She let out the secret herself after some time was passed in reconnoitering by loudly chirping and dashing against Miss Lane's hand, attempting to remove a handsome, deep red intaglio from its setting in a ring on the left hand. She had mistaken it for another cherry.

The plumage of the jays is not yet complete but the downy coverings of the neck and breast is almost perfect. The feathers in the wings are tipped with white, running into a deep blue, shaded with black. The robins have a quantity of color even to the speckled breast, the male bird, Bob, being the darker.

And as for the names—the diplomatic jay is named after William Jennings Bryan, former secretary of state. His brothers are named William Randolph Hearst, (the noisiest one of the group,) and Josephus Daniels, in recognition of the secretary of the navy. Little Judy is friendly with all three but as yet has exhibited no choice for a mate.

Both Judy, the jay, and Bobinette the robin are perfect ladies. They appear to be contended nesting on a person's hand, while the others jump around and chirp and shriek for attention, whether from the visitors, Miss Lane, or the lady birds it is hard to say.

Miss Lane declined to give her real reasons as to why she named the jays as she did but since she is a well known anti-suffragist and a wearer of the red rose when the occasion requires it, and is known to have some quite positive and resourceful ideas on government, it is believed that the naming of the jays after the men prominent in national affairs intimates her belief in a similarity between them and the jays.

The family cat has penetrated the recesses of the aviary but once and then was promptly discovered and shooed away. To the mouser, the room is a sacred precinct and since the day of the chase the rights of the little birds have been respected.

Friends from all parts of the city and Boston have called on the birds and it is not unusual for callers to see the mother robin fly to the screen of an open window, chirp a friendly note and fly away. Miss Lane says this was repeated several times during the recent thunder storm and that the birds were more attentive to the chirps of the visitor than to the flashing of lightning and rolling of thunder.

Miss Lane has been congratulated not once but several times by her hosts of friends, and many believe her love of the out of doors and observation has something to do with the success of her experiment. Her love for birds grew while she took her early morning rides on her saddle horse "Denmark," a noble animal of fine instincts, and while she tramped through the various parks of the city, making sketches and water colors of well known spots.

SERVICES FOR MR. WRISLEY.

The funeral of Charles F. Wrisley was held this afternoon from his late home on School street. The services were conducted by Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson of the First Parish church. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.
